The Southern Churchman

Frederick J. Warnecke, Editor

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

The Southern Churchman's 1948 Roll of Appreciation

Rev. J. J. Paulsen, rector, St. Stephen's Church, Elsmere, N. Y. Mr. Paulsen has spent his entire ministry in this Diocese and has done conspicuously faithful and fruitful work. He has for some years had charge of the Mission at West Middleburgh, in addition to his own parish, which is an important one in a growing suburb of Albany. He is also a leader in Christian education.

Rev. George F. Bambach, retired rector of St. George's Church, Schenectady. Mr. Bambach has recently completed a rectorship of twenty-three years at St. George's which has been outstanding in every respect. He has held offices as Rural Dean, a member of Diocesan Council and Board of Missions and still serves as secretary of the Standing Committee. His work has been notably conscientious, solid, constructive, painstaking and carried on in a spirit of marked humility.

Rev. Carl M. Truesdale, rector of Christ Church, Pottersville, and in charge of a chain of Missions in the Adirondacks. Mr. Truesdale has done devoted missionary work in a somewhat isolated field beset by some hardships. He interrupted the work to serve as a Chaplain of Infantry in the late war and was cited for bravery and conspicuous service. He returned to his field and has quietly taken up his duties and pursues his course as before with marked energy and consecration.

Miss Blanche Pittman, Principal at St. Agnes School for Girls, Albany. Attached to Cathedral of All Saints. Miss Pittman became principal of St. Agnes School in 1930 and has done a distinguished piece of educational work. The school has grown in numbers and excellence. In fact, the buildings cannot accommodate the students who apply for admission.

Miss Angelica L. Gerry, St. James' Chapel, Lake Delaware. Miss Gerry built this chapel and the admirable plant connected with it as a center of rural church work. Her personal devotion and lavish generosity have resulted in expansion, so that the Chapel now has several smaller chapels in rural centers and several priests are employed and carrying on a remarkable work.

Mr. Chester F. Millhouse, St. John's Church, Troy. Mr. Millhouse is a busy banker, but serves as treasurer of the Trustees of the Diocese, also on other diocesan boards, and does a really prodigious amount of hard work for the Church in a remarkably modest manner. His judgment and personal devotion rank with his financial ability, and he is in many ways a model layman.

DIOCESE OF ARIZONA

Rev. Bancroft P. Smith, St. Paul's Church, Yuma, Ariz. For bringing congregation to independence and parish status.

Very Rev. James W. F. Carman, Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, Ariz. For finding 700 lost Episcopalians.

Rev. George W. Ferguson, St. Philip's-in-the-Hills, Tucson, Ariz. For missionary vision in purchase of property and building new Churches in new developments, as well as new wing on present Church.

Mrs. Bancroft P. Smith, St. Paul's Church, Yuma, Ariz. Granddaughter of Bishop Gibson of Virginia, for assisting her husband in bringing St. Paul's, Yuma, to parochial status, and for general sharing in District activities.

Mrs. John R. Newcomer, Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, Ariz. New District President of the Woman's Auxiliary, for loyalty and leadership, justly rewarded.

Mr. Curtis P. Donnell, Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix. For volunteer editorial services in connection with District paper—The Arizona Church Record.

Paul C. Harrison, layman, who carried on at New Milford and Susquehanna in the interim between rectors, conducting the services, maintaining the organizations and ministering to the best of his ability to these churches though he himself was a member of another parish and was employed six days a week.

David Doughton, a member of St. Luke's Church, Scranton, likewise has served the Church by carrying on in the Church at Nanticoke when it was without a rector; and is even now filling in at another church at Plymouth.

Rev. Charles Sykes, Superintendent, Owego Associated Missions, Candor, N. Y., who since February, 1944, has been Missionary in charge of our rural area in Tioga and Tompkins Counties. In spite of what he feels are small results, he and his staff have accomplished an enormous lot in winning the respect of the entire population through the fidelity and intelligence they have brought to the discovery of the people's real needs.

DIOCESE OF COLORADO

Rev. Charles W. Young, rector of Trinity Church, Greeley, Colorado, for his outstanding work among young people in his parish and in the diocese.

Mr. Hugh McLean, a member of St. Luke's Church, Denver, has served for twenty-one years as treasurer of the diocese without any compensation. A devoted servant of the Church in a difficult task.

Mrs. Harry Hastings, a member of St. John's Cathedral, has been the leader of the Sewing Guild of the Cathedral for over twenty-one years, during which she has rendered notable and faithful service.

Miss Delphine Schmidt, a member of St. Andrew's Church, Denver, has now carried on for seven years as the editor of the Colorado Episcopalian, official magazine of the diocese. She has faced all the difficulties of religious journalism with a fine spirit and continuously has issued a representative magazine.

DIOCESE OF CONNECTICUT

The Venerable Donald W. Greene, Archdeacon, New Haven Archdeaconry, and rector of St. Paul's Church, Wallingford. Faithful pastor and tireless worker in the missionary cause.

Rev. John F. Plumb, D. D., Executive Secretary (Emeritus) of the Diocese of Connecticut, who retired this year after serving twenty-four years as Diocesan Executive Secretary and fifty-three years in the Church. Former Assistant Secretary of the House of Bishops.

Mr. William H. Bulkeley, Executive Vice-Chairman, Diocesan Department of Program and Budget. Member of St. John's Church, West Hartford. Has shown imagination and leadership in promoting understanding of the Church's program, especially among men.

Mrs. James D. Trask, Chairman of organization, "Diocesan Chest," who has secured wide interest in Diocesan Advance Work programs.

DIOCESE OF EASTERN OREGON

Mr. Elmer Peck, St. Peter's Church, La Grande, Ore. Conspicuous work for men in recruiting for confirmation, renewing interest in and loyalty to the Church.

Rev. A. R. P. Heyes, Rector Grace Church, Rice Lake. For twelve years covered a field with five mission stations as pastor to all who came in sight.

Rev. E. O. Douglas, St. Mark's Barron; St. Phillip's, Turtle Lake; St. Barnabas, Clear Lake. In priesthood a little over two years but has become beloved by people of rural areas.

Miss Minnie Wood. St. Mary's, Tomah, Wisconsin. Parish U. T. O. Custodian, with long record of faithfulness to her work in this small mission.

Mr. H. C. Kuhl, Christ Church Cathedral. Engineer with sufficient time to assist the Bishop in structural problems at personal cost of time in travel and energy.

Mr. Carl Borge, Ascension Church, Hayward Wisconsin. Warden of the Mission, member of the Executive Board of the Diocese and other committees. Takes time and gives the effort to problems.

DIOCESE OF FOND DU LAC

Rev. William F. Christian, Church of Holy Apostles, Oneida, Wis. Faithful pastor and teacher of Oneida Indians.

Mr. Harold W. Whinfield, Grace Church, Sheboygan, Wis. Leader of the laymen's work in the diocese.

Rev. Yin Sang Mark, Chinese Priest, St. Peter's Church, Honolulu, T. M. 37 years devoted service to his people. Has raised St. Peter's Church from a struggling mission to a self-supporting Parish.

The Venerable Henry A. Willey, Archdeacon of Island of Kauai, All Saints, Kapaa, Kauai, T. H. 26 years of service in this field where he started, no congregation, no churches. Today the Island has 4 churches, and 12 mission stations, four rectories, a gymnasium and four parish houses, all due to his efforts. Now has 521 active communicants on Island.

The Venerable James Walker, Archdeacon of Hawaii, St. Augustine's Mission, Kohala, Hawaii. 27 years of service to the people of many races. A builder and confident.

Miss Katherine Hunt, St. Mary's Church, Emmett, Idaho. For exceptional leadership in Church School and Youth Work cultimating in the erection and furnishing of the Chapel of the Christ Child, "a stable which became a Shrine."

Mr. J. T. R. McCorkle, St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, Idaho. For faithful and continued leadership in the Every Member Canvass in St. Michael's, and leadership throughout the Missionary District of Idaho.

Rev. William Burrows, St. Paul's, Indianapolis. The Rector whose unceasing labors and wise administration led to the removal of the parish from a down-town area and the building of a new $300,000 Church and Parish House in a growing residential district.

Rev. Rudolph M. Bangert, Trinity Church, Connersville. Who, within 18 months of coming into the Church's Ministry, has doubled the communicant strength and trebeled the financial support of his congregation, bringing Trinity Church a long way towards self-support.

Rev. Reese F. Thornton, St. John's, Lafayette. Who, as Chairman of the Diocesan Department of Christian Education, has contributed to the Diocesan growth in the Church Schools, and in improving standards of teaching and administration.

Mr. Andrew C. Little, St. Luke's, Cannelton. A teacher in the local High School, and a Lay Reader who, given regular services, superintended the Church School, and guided the young people of the congregation, with but monthly visitations from a clergyman.

Pres. Edgar C. Cumings, Canterbury College, Danville, Indiana. Who, as President of the Church's only co-educational, Liberal Arts College, has given unstintingly of himself in bringing the Christian Religion into the field of higher education.

Mr. Willis B. Conner, Jr., Church of the Advent, Indianapolis. Who, as Diocesan Chairman of the Every Member Canvass, has increased Diocesan giving to Missionary work by nearly fifty per-cent.

DIOCESE OF KANSAS

Rev. Charles R. Davies, St. Paul's, Manhattan, Kan. Outstanding pastor of college students of Kansas State College, Manhattan.

Rev. Edward L. Skinner, Missionary, St. Mark's, Blue Rapids, St. Paul's, and Marysville. A devoted pastor of rural people.

Rev. Samuel A. McPetres, Covenant, Junction City, Kan. A devoted pastor of army people stationed at Ft. Riley, Kan.

Mr. Fred Douglass, Sr., Ascension Church (Colored), Kansas City, Kan. For 25 years senior warden, who takes spiritual responsibility for Church on occasion of vacancy.

Mr. John J. Crittenden, St. James, Wichita, Kan. A busy newspaper man who gives much time to Church extension work of the Diocese of Kansas.

Mr. Charles Willis, Epiphany, Sedan, Kan. A most effective treasurer of a little country church who gives a spiritual significance to the financial operation of his parish.

Rev. John Stryker Piper, St. Mary's Church, Middlesboro, Ky. An earnest and zealous missionary-minded clergyman, who has made two mission churches into independent parishes within the year.

Mr. Wadsworth Clarke, Nativity Church, Maysville, Ky. During an extended period when his Church had no minister, he conducted services, and built the parish up to a stronger position than it had occupied for years.

DIOCESE OF MASSACHUSETTS

Miss Florence Snelling, Trinity Church, Boston. Devoted Librarian of the Parish Library of Trinity for more than a quarter of a century.

Miss Josephine Bumstead, Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass. Founder and head of the Christ Church Altar Guild for more than 50 years. Devoted friend of Latin and South American Missionaries of our Church.

DIOCESE OF MISSIONARY DISTRICT OF NEVADA

The Ven. T. H. Kerstetter, Archdeacon of Nevada and Chairman of the Department of Christian Education. Under his leadership, the program of Church Schools, Vacation Schools and Conferences has grown beyond belief. Nevada has almost one child in Church School for each communicant, and one child in Vacation School for each two communicants.

Miss Esther B. Matz, Woman worker under National Council appointment stationed at Pioche, Nevada. For nearly seven years she has maintained Church School and other Church work in a most isolated mining camp, under very discouraging conditions. She is over 100 miles from the nearest clergyman or other worker. Yet she has brought children and adults to baptism and confirmation, and kept the Church's life active in her community.

DIOCESE OF NEWARK

Rev. Albert F. Chillson, Pompton Lakes, Ringwood and Stonetown, N. J. A pioneer in rural areas.

Rev. John E. Bailey, All Saints, Glen Rock. A patient, persevering pastor and priest.

Mr. C. Alfred Burhorn, Trinity, Hoboken. Serving his Church faithfully for 60 years.

Mr. Frederick G. Stuart, St. Mark's, Teanick. Conspicuous for his missionary zeal.

Mr. "Red" Barber, St. James the Less, Scarsdale. Ran St. Barnabas House Building Campaign.

DISTRICT OF NORTH TEXAS

Rev. R. J. Snell, Trinity, Midland, and St. John's, Odessa. Sincerely missionary minded, Mr. Snell has achieved splendid work in making his field self-supporting, with an adequate program. He has been head of the District Department of Missions, and in that capacity has helped to plan and develop several fields other than his own.

The Rt. Rev. G. H. Quarterman, Bishop of the Missionary District, has given a new vision to this district. He is a dynamo of energy and has kindled a real fire in this area.

Mr. R. C. Tucker, St. Paul's, Lubbock. No relation to Virginia Tuckers but as good as the best. An intelligently active layman who is now head of the laymen's work in the District. He is a vestryman, and has been a delegate to the General Convention.

DIOCESE OF OREGON

Rev. Robert L. Greene, St. James', Coquille. Advancing this Mission to Parish status and establishing new Mission at Powers, 36 miles away.

Rev. Perry H. Smith, General Missionary since discharge from Chaplain's Corps. Has revived two mission churches, established two new ones, building Church and Parish House at Dallas and is organizing another and surveying still more.

Rev. Charles S. Neville, Church of the Good Samitan, Corvallis. Phenomenal record in Parish and among College students; leadership in College Work in Province and National Church and re-establishment of Diocesan Conference Centre at Gearhart.

Mr. Bernard F. Young, Trinity, Portland. Vestryman, lay reader, Sunday school teacher, member Standing Committee, Assistant to Diocesan Treasurer, Chairman Diocesan Auditing Committee.

Mrs. Douglas Polifka, St. Stephen's Cathedral, Portland. Parish leader and Secretary of Diocesan Council and Program Chairman Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary.

Mr. Earl W. Gardner, St. Michael and All Angels', Portland. 20 years as Sunday School Superintendent, largest in Diocese and now serving second term as President of Portland Council of Churches.

Mrs. George A. Trowbridge, 18 E. Chestnut Avenue, St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia 18, Pa. Mrs. Trowbridge was largely responsible for the fact that this diocese gave during 1947 $103,044 for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. In addition to this, great quantities of material have gone through New Windsor, Maryland. Mrs. Trowbridge is also Chairman of the Diocesan Committee on Christian Social Relations. In this position she is doing an outstanding piece of work.

Rev. Ramon E. Quinones, All Saints, Vieques. On an island apart, separated from brother clergy and family; all alone, he is serving faithfully and humbly and well.

Rev. John E. Levo, St. Paul's Church, Frederiksted, St. Croix, V. I. After 40 years of ministry in the West Indies, author of many books, defender of the Faith, and now forced to retire due to illness, he is giving his wife to the official Missionary Family to carry on in his stead.

Miss Sarah G. White, R. N., Director, St. Luke's School of Nursing, Ponce, P. R. "Loaned to P. R. for the duration" and now to return to Japan, she has left a mark on the School and the Island which can never be erased.

Rev. Victor Rivera, St. Matthew's, Penulas, P. R. Twenty years a priest, with communication even with the nearest town by horse only, having presented a son to the Church's Priesthood, he is closing his ministry close to his God and his people.

Rev. George Thomas Lawton, S. T. D., St. John's, Kewanee, Ill. Ten years of brilliant service in Church and community.

Rev. Channing Tolsom Savage, Christ Church, Moline. Rector here 18 years. Communicant strength and giving increased four-fold.

Rev. Henry Neal Hyde, Retired Priest, scholar, gentleman, faithful pastor, formerly Rector at Portsmouth, Ohio. In his three years of residence at Peoria, Ill., he has done builder's work in small missions and added distinction to two large Parishes.

Mr. William John Bruninga, St. Paul's, Peoria. Priceless helper as lay-reader in missions of the Diocese, an example of what men over forty can do for the Church.

Mrs. Dean D. Battles, St. Paul's, Peoria. Intelligent, ardent worker, especially in Woman's Auxiliary work, now Diocesan President.

Mr. John William Potter (Died in May, 1947). Trinity, Rock Island. Treasurer of Diocese of Quincy 28 years, taking office at age of 22. Great benefactor of his Church and his city; many of his good deeds known only by God.

DIOCESE OF ROCHESTER

Rev. Roy Lawrence Webber, Christ Church, Cuba; St. Andrew's, Friendship; St. Paul's, Angelica. Distinction in the obscurity of ten years faithful pastorate in New York's Southern Tier.

Rev. Samuel Harman Edsall, D. D., Rector historic Trinity Church, Geneva, completing rectorship of 25 years.

Rev. Warren Hugh Steele, Rector St. James', Hammondsport, former high school teacher, providing a compelling demonstration of his former vocation to the Ministry.

Mrs. Willard R. Moore, for more than thirty years Chairman of the Lady Board of Managers of the Rochester Church Home.

Mr. Richard W. Rynicker, as Chairman of the Central Committee of The Bishop's Men of the Diocese, led that organization in another year of great achievement. Vestryman and Chorister of St. Thomas' Church, Bath.

Dr. Derck Frechettee, Professor of Ceramics of Alfred University, Alfred, N. Y., and Lay Reader in charge of growing Mission of Our Saviour, Bolivar, N. Y.

DIOCESE OF SACRAMENTO

Rev. Carl N. Tamblyn, St. John's Church, Maryville, Calif. Excellent Parish work and as head of Department of Religious Education.

Rev. Arthur W. Farlander, Church of the Incarnation, Santa Rosa, Calif. For a 10 years' Radio Ministry, plus his contribution in the field of Church Music.

Rev. Robert R. Read, Christ Church, Eureka, Calif. For outstanding work among the inmates of the public institutions in Humboldt County.

Mr. Felix E. Daoust, St. John's Church, Marysville, Calif. For exceptional service in Men's Work and World Relief.

Miss Isabelle M. Harris, St. Barnabas Mission, 8th and U Streets, Sacramento, Calif. For splendid leadership in Community Center work.

Mr. George P. Murphy, St. John's Church, Petaluma. For unfailing loyalty and devotion to the Church's work.

Rev. Andrew H. Scott, St. Luke's, Merced, Calif. In 2 years led a weak Mission to independent Parish status, plus many material improvements, despite his personal ill health.

Mrs. Henry Landers, St. Matthias', Oakdale, Calif. Social Relations Chairman of District Woman's Auxiliary. Notable as fund-raiser for Heifers For Relief, Kiddie Kits, Church World Service, as well as the whole Missions program.

Rev. Raymond M. Gunn, Rector, St. Paul's Church, E. St. Louis, Ill. Is doing an outstanding work—a great work.

Rev. Samuel L. Hagan, Rector, Church of the Redeemer, Cairo, Ill. He is doing a splendid work, and in connection with his parish has charge of two colored Missions, and is Priest-in-Charge of Mound City and Anna, Ill., where is located the Southern Illinois Hospital.

Rev. John T. Lillard, Priest-in-Charge of Holy Cross, Jerseyville, Ill. He is doing a quiet and fine work, and has labored in Jerseyville for years. Mr. Lillard deserves a high mention.

Mr. George Washington Thomas, St. Michael's Colored Missions, Cairo, Ill. An able and most efficient colored layman. He practically gives his life to this mission, is a lay reader and warden.

Miss Jeanette Stokes, woman worker, St. Paul's Parish, E. St. Louis. One of the most faithful, devoted and helpful workers of this entire diocese. St. Paul's could not get along without her. For years she has been assistant to the Rev. Mr. Gunn.

DIOCESE OF TENNESSEE

Rev. Robert F. Gibson, Jr., Dean of the School of Theology, University of the South. For an inspiring beginning of his work as Dean.

Rev. Stephen R. Davenport, St. Stephen's Mission, Oak Ridge. For consistently good work under adverse conditions.

Rev. Paul E. Sloan, Quintard Parish, Covington, Tenn. For consistent work in a county-wide Parish.

Mr. Will S. Keese, Jr., St. Paul's, Chattanooga. For fine service in reconditioning the property of the DuBose Church Training School.

Mr. Arthur Crownover, Church of the Advent, Nashville. For effective leadership of the Episcopal Laymen of Tennessee.

Mr. Edmund Vigill, Calvary Church, Memphis. For fine lay leadership.

DIOCESE OF TEXAS

Rev. J. Raymond Denton, St. Thomas', Wharton, Texas. Came out of 20 years in business and has done a grand job; now seven years as a Priest.

Rev. J. Thomas Bagby, St. James', Houston, Texas. The most complete "Activity Program" for all ages, 3 years old and up, of any Parish I know.

Rev. S. Frank Doremus, St. George, Texas City, Texas. Became Rector here three weeks prior to their terrible explosion and disaster, and rendered an unusual ministry to this whole community.

Mr. Karl H. Sherman, St. Paul's, Waco, Texas. As Treasurer of our Missionary Funds for 20 years did excellent service.

Mr. John S. Mellinger, Christ, Houston, Texas. President of the Church Corporation; diligent, patient, efficient and consecrated.

Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, All Saints, Austin. Put life and genuine service into the Women's Work in the Diocese.

DIOCESE OF WESTERN N. C.

Rev. Peter W. Lambert, Jr., Penland, Penland, N. C. Remained at work as Rector Appalachian School, caring for children in spite of hard work and attractive offers elsewhere.

Rev. A. Rufus Morgan, St. Agnes, Franklin, N. C., and about seven others. Ministers to three races—white, Negro and Indian.

Rev. Frank Saylor, Transfiguration, Bat Cave, N. C. After faithful ministry in foreign fields, has done great work in mountain community and built a new church to replace one burned.

Mr. George Wiese, Superintendent of Patterson School, Legerwood, N. C. Ten years of fine work helping boys build character and receive education.

Mr. William L. Balthis, St. Mark's, Gastonia, N. C. Has served Church faithfully many years, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Deputy to General Convention, etc.

Mr. John H. Pearson, Grace, Morganton, N. C. Served his Church many years. Outstanding citizen. Now 94.

Rev. Herbert S. Osburn, D. D. Retired. Tappahannock, Va. Though suffering physically, he continues to render from his bed and wheel chair a ministry of love through his life and his teaching.

Rev. F. N. Huckle, Rector of Leeds Parish, Hume, Va. For many years the scholarly and faithful pastor to his rural flock.

Rev. R. Cary Montague, D. D. City

Missionary, Richmond, Va. He goes about doing good.

Mrs. Jeffrey R. Brackett. Principal St. Catherine's School, resigned 1947, Richmond, Va. For twenty-three years a moulder of Christian womanhood.

Miss Anna Parks, Mission Home, Va. For the quarter of a century the director and inspiration of St. Anne's Preventorium for undernourished children, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

Deaconess Hutton, Pine Grove Mission (St. George's) Stanley, Va. Through character, wisdom and spirituality she is a living power for Christ and His Church.

DIOCESE OF ANKING, CHINA

The Rev. Henri B. Pickens, Church of the Holy Nativity, Anking, An, China. After nearly perishing for Christ he has come back to render further service under hazardous conditions. Practically all of our clergy are Chinese. A roster of citations for them would be a long one, but perhaps the list would have little significance in America.

Dr. H. B. Taylor, St. James Hospital, Anking, An, China. In the face of past and present dangers he has kept cheerful, and kept at the job. Many owe their lives to his loving skill as doctor and surgeon.

Miss Emeline Bowne, St. James Hospital, Anking, An, China. Neither Japanese soldiers, bandits, cold, hunger, typhus, nor any other difficulty could keep her from her loving ministrations as nurse and friend.

Miss Margaret Monteiro, Church of the Holy Nativity, Anking, An. She has risked much and overcome many difficulties in her service as teacher and friend of women and children.

Miss Laura Clark, Bishop's Secretary, and Diocesan Treasurer, Lion Hill, Wuhu, An., China. She has risked her own life and health to save others.

Sister Constance Anna, St. Lioba's Convent, Wuhu, An, China. She has a deep concern for the needs of all underprivileged people, especially women and little children. Nothing but spiritual resources can explain the energy and resourcefulness she has shown in relieving these needs in the face of dangers and hardships.

Sister Louise Magdalene, St. Lioba's Convent, Wuhu, An, China. In the midst of danger and confusion she is always calm and effective, because her spirit is calm.

Mr. B. W. Lanphear, Lion Hill, Wuhu, An, China. In spite of imprisonment, ill health, and hardship he has stuck to his post and helped his friends.

Miss Elda Smith, St. James Church, Wuhu, An, China. The Chinese love her because she is able to identify herself with them. No hardship has been too rugged, and no danger too great for her to endure in witnessing for Christ to young people and women.

Miss B. E. Myers, St. James Hospital, Anking, An, China. Faithful and willing to the last detail.

FINLAND RECEIVES C. W. S. FUNDS

New York, N. Y.—Through the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, Episcopal Church members have been privileged to supply much-needed help to the Orthodox Church people of Finland. Church World Service one month, allocated $15,000 for these people. The request had the special backing of the Bishop of the Lutheran Church in Finland, who is chairman of the World Council of Churches' Reconstruction Committee in that country.

The Orthodox Finns, during the war, suffered a double migration, and as a result, lost almost everything they possessed. Of the 80,000 Orthodox Church members, 55,000 took part in the second evacuation, including the Church government, the two bishops, 18 out of 29 congregations, and 31 out of 45 priests. All four monasteries were evacuated, and the buildings, churches, other properties and woods belonging to the Church from which most of its revenue had been derived, had to be left behind. In figures, the loss was about one-half billion Finnish marks.

The program which will be aided by the CWS allocation, includes youth work, pensions for Church workers, pastoral care for refugees, salary supplements for pastors and Church workers, Church publications and periodicals. The clergy are seriously in need of help, having lost everything.

Prospects for 1948

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The passing of another milestone of the years, with the opening of the New Year of 1948, reminds us again how curiously inscrutable the future is for all the children of men.

How do we know what this New Year will bring forth? Anything is possible, peace or war, further disintegration of an already unstable world or a gradual convalescence of the ailing nations.

This special insecurity in which we live, in an age in which one civilization is dying and another is powerless to be born, is however not unique. It is typical of the insecurity in which the children of men have always lived. Every New Year is an adventure into which we must, as Abraham of old, go out, not knowing whither we go.

We know a great deal about the past. That is the mark of the greatness of man. We know little about the future. That is a reminder of our weakness. Our knowledge of the past symbolizes the human capacity to comprehend and to make history. Our ignorance of the future symbolizes our involvement in history.

For several centuries modern men have given themselves to the fond illusion that man was a weak creature who was gradually becoming strong enough to move toward the complete mastery of his own historical destiny. The argument was that just as we were once limited by nature, but gradually gained ascendency over natural forces, so we would also, though at first subject to historical vicissitudes, gradually triumph over history itself.

Actually the technical instruments by which we conquered nature produced a vast web of history which seems to dwarf the will and the action of the individual even more than our fathers' wills were dwarfed by nature.

The fact is that man never changes his position of being partly the master and partly the creature of historical events. We do have to make fateful decisions; and the future frequently depends upon the quality of these decisions. In that sense we determine the future. But none of these decisions are made in a vacuum.

The vast pattern of historical destiny is either a realm of complete confusion or it is under a more powerful Sovereignty than our own will or the combination of any number of human wills. The faith by which those live, who are informed by a Biblical religion, is that a Divine Providence does govern this vast pattern and that we may therefore approach the future with serenity rather than hysteria, knowing "that neither life nor death—things present nor things to come—shall be able to separate us from the love of God."

Without such a faith mankind oscillates between an optimism which places a too great reliance upon the strength of the human will and a pessimism which has discovered the inability of the human will to bend historical destiny to human wishes.

If we cannot move into this new year by the serenity of such a faith we are not likely to achieve any decent spiritual equilibrium. We will be betrayed by our hopes for a month or two and then we will be betrayed by our fears. The momentary vicissitudes of our generation are bound to vary tremendously.

We must find a way of faith which will help us to meet the promise, and not to fear the terror of tomorrow.

The 1948 Roll of Appreciation

A favorite indoor winter sport of another generation was sitting around the stove of the country store, discussing "shoes and ships and sealing wax, cabbages and kings." The parallel indoor winter sport of the present generation seems to be picking out people and groups for recognition. Perhaps this is our American compensation for our lack of titles of nobility. So there is the serious annual task of selecting the "All American" football team, with all its gradations downwards. There is the awe inspiring responsibility of naming "The Man of the Year!" Think of having to choose one man from the millions in the world! (We have sometimes wondered what the good Lord thinks of our choices!) Even in the Church, there are those who judge carefully and tell us that these five or six are the outstanding Churchmen of the past year.

We make no pretentions to such omniscience or power of judgment, nor is this in any sense the purpose of our annual Roll of Appreciation, printed in this issue. We do not wish to select a few from the many. We would name a great many of the servants of God who merit the gratitude of the Church for their labors. They need not this token of appreciation. They are receiving a blessing from God and deep personal satisfaction in their work. It may be recalled that St. Paul reminded his brethren at Corinth that there were not many who were great or noble in the world's way of judging, among their number. It has been the faith and labor of the humble saints of God that has carried the gospel of our Lord through the ages.

These labor without thought of recognition, yet how else can we tell them that we hold them warmly in our hearts and in our prayers? Perhaps, too, there are times when the expression of our gratitude and understanding helps. Wrote one priest of the Church named last year in the Roll of Appreciation, "I did not know that anyone understood what I have been trying to do here for twenty years." And another, "Your magazine came to me at a time of spiritual discouragement. It was encouragement to me to continue." Still another, "In many ways it's a pretty lonely and routinely arduous work that I have and it is encouraging if some one outside of our immediate circle thinks we are doing worthwhile things here."

Our lists are far from complete. We know also that in many dioceses and places, many others might be named with equal claim to recognition. They will understand and they will not begrudge this small token of appreciation to a fellow-worker. In the 1948 Roll of Appreciation, The Southern Churchman salutes all the faithful who have been laborers for the Lord in His harvest fields.

"281" Revises the Church Year

We have always admired the bravery of those devoted members of the Church, lay and clerical, who serve in the front line trenches at "281," our national headquarters. Many an undeserved bombardment is their's! But at this time we particularly admire their courage. For the National Council has quietly revised the Church Year!

Take this not on our unsupported word. Each year there is issued a personal "Diary and Budget Account," which many a parson and layman finds invaluable. Inside the front cover is the imprimatur, "The National Council, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y." On another page is boldly emblazoned, "The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States of America." Make no mistake, this is official!

What do we find? Ascension Day has been changed from the traditional Thursday, forty days after Easter, to a Sunday, May ninth. This shows how the Episcopal Church is slowing down! For Easter season under this plan will now be forty-three days long. Of course, it may be said that this will be balanced by a shorter Ascension season. But this leads us to our real concern with this new arrangement. Whitsunday appears on Sunday, May 16th, but almost unbelievably, Pentecost is on Sunday, June 13th! Apparently our difficulties with the marriage canon have now crept into other fields of Church life. Two interpretations of the marriage canon now lead us quite logically to two different days devoted to the Holy Spirit. But we are not quite sure which is to be kept by whom. This newer biblical criticism is too much for us!

Our profound sympathies, gentlemen of "281!" For we struggle with the printing gremlins too!

A WAY OF PRAYER

By the Rev. Gardiner M. Day

In practicing the Christian way of life, we begin by giving ourselves to God in prayer. It is of first importance to set aside a few moments every day to draw near with faith.

The length of time we set aside is not important as it is to set aside a few—even two—moments in which we strive to lift our souls into His presence. These moments may be taken at any time during the day, but best of all are one's first waking moments.

A few minutes of meditation and prayer before we arise in the morning will at least insure our getting out "on the right side of the bed."

There is no one method to suggest for a period of prayer such as this. I simply suggest one method that I have found helpful. On waking say, "Lord, I give myself to Thee this morning. Grant that in every thing I do or say, I may be guided by Thy spirit and upheld by Thy strength."

Then express your gratitude to God for anything for which you are thankful. Express your penitence for anything that you have said or done that is wrong. Pray for anyone you know who particularly needs your prayers, and above all in these critical days pray for the leaders of the nations that through the guidance of God they may be able to establish a just and lasting peace. There is no special order. If something is on your conscience, confess it first. If someone you wish to pray for is uppermost in your mind, pray for him.

The order in which you pray is of no special importance, but after you have said your prayers, then be quiet and give God a chance to speak to you by the inner voice.

I cannot stress too strongly the importance of being silent in His presence. Like St. Paul, say, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" And then wait. You will be surprised how many times the Divine Spirit will stir up the spirit within you to perceive something that you will feel confident He would like you to do or say that day. Then you will go forth to live in His peace—in the serenity of God.

This will give you an inner calm and perspective with which to face the experience of the day. Of course, this serenity will not always last. If it did, we would be, indeed, perfect, but when it does fail us, it can always be renewed. We can always step apart for a moment and be alone with Him anywhere, even while riding on the subway.—Taken from The Episcopal Church Times.

"I THANK YOU"

When you read this you have come to the "I Thank you time". It is after Christmas. You and your family have received many presents from "your sisters, your cousins and your aunts". Some are things that you will cherish and others enjoy.

Now is the time to begin to teach our boys and girls to write "notes of thanks". It is one little bit of courtesy that seems to be most neglected. I hope that the boys and girls will be brought up to take a little time to write to people thanking them for their own gifts. There is no greater interest nor satisfaction to an older person than to receive a little note from a child. It may be lots of pictures with a few words but it is the effort that counts. We should do a lot more of "return of thanks" than we do. Most of us are grateful souls but are not prone to be verbal about it. It would be a happier world if we would do so.

I appreciate the time that it takes to spell our letters and to correct it. Try it sometime as you write your own. Children like to do what you do and this is one way to do things together.

It is hoped that we shall keep this Spirit of Christmas throughout the year. It is so much easier to do when everyone is doing it.

Let us try to teach our boys and girls the joys of writing letters. It is one way to keep up with some of the less known relatives. One of the greatest joys I had was to write my grand parents and a few older people and then my young cousins who lived away from their native heath. We might try to see that our boys and girls learn to keep acquainted with them. It is good to get into the habit of letters. They mean much to you as you are away from the homeland.

Let us return thanks to those who have remembered us.

MISS LOVE APPOINTED TO PUERTO RICO

New York, N. Y.—Miss Melba R. Love, R. N., has been appointed for missionary service in Puerto Rico, as successor to Miss Sarah G. White, superintendent of the school of nurses, St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce. Miss White, formerly a missionary in Japan, will return to that field after a vacation.

Miss Love's home is in Los Angeles. She is a graduate of Grossmont Union High School, and of the Mercy College of Nursing, San Diego.

The Kyrie Eleison

The repeated words "Lord have mercy upon us" with the response "Christ have mercy upon us" that have this Greek title are of very ancient use in Christian liturgies, and they are used in both the Greek and Roman churches at the opening of the Mass. They are still sung in some Lutheran churches in Greek.

Their use after the Commandments corresponds in a certain degree to the use of the Gloria after each Psalm in the Psalter, for it dedicates the Decalogue to our Saviour, just as the Gloria makes each Psalm a Christian hymn.

Furthermore the Kyrie puts the name of Christ on the same basis with that of God, thereby emphasizing the deity of Christ.

The following Collect, which is permissive is especially appropriate after the Decalogue since it asks God to "direct, sanctify, and govern, both our hearts and bodies, in the ways of Thy laws, and in the works of Thy commandments". Its language gives the emphasis of repetition without monotony of wording. It also combines the petition for God's care for us "both here and ever, we may be preserved in body and soul". The "here" refers to our bodies, suggesting their temporary nature, whereas the "ever" inspires us with the thought of the immortality of the soul.

This Collect is also used with equal appropriateness in the Confirmation service, which is bringing persons into the full membership and responsibility of the church, and so calls for them to continue "in the ways of thy laws, and in the works of Thy commandments". And we should not forget that the keeping of God's Commandments includes works, which makes our religion positive and not merely negative.

The turning of the clergyman to the people with the words "The Lord be with you", and "Let us pray," seem quite unnecessary when the people are already on their knees. But they were inserted in the Prayer Book revision of 1928 to mark the end of the service over the Decalogue, and passing to the service for the day with its Collect, Epistle, and Gospel. Some better method for doing this may be devised in future revisions, and probably will be.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

THEOLOGICAL SUNDAY—JANUARY 25

New York, N. Y.—Presiding Bishop Sherrill has urged the widest possible observance of Theological Education Sunday, January 25, 1948. In a statement sent to Dean Lawrence Rose, who is chairman in charge of the observance, Bishop Sherrill said:

"This Sunday I hope will be the occasion for addresses in every church upon the importance of the work of our Theological Seminaries, and furthermore that in every parish there will be given an opportunity for the people of the Church to give financial support to the Seminaries.

"Our Theological Schools are vital to the continuing life of the Church, for in them are trained our clergy, who are responsible in large degree for the leadership of our parishes. Thus the Seminaries are of immediate and practical significance to every lay person. The Seminaries are in serious need of financial aid. I hope that there will be a generous response by a wise and strategically minded Church."

AID FOR ENGLISH PARISHES

Boston, Mass.—A call to each of the parishes of the Diocese to help a parish of the Church of England has been issued by the Department of Social Service under the Rev. Howard P. Kellett. Within three days, applications had been received for the first fifty parishes, especially hard hit in the recent war, whose names and those of their rectors had been furnished, on request, by ten English bishops. Further lists are being prepared to promote the sending of food and clothing from America and the interchange of letters, so that a constructive friendship between each set of parishes may be cemented.

Speaking of the project, Mr. Kellett said, "Unlike our situation here, the English people are still rationed in their food and clothing, not to the point of starvation and exposure but to a degree that saps their vitality. A very practical opportunity for Christian fellowship is open to the churches in America, especially to the Episcopal Church which has such close ties with the Church of England." The letter distributed locally contained directions for packing the boxes, and commendation of the packages prepared by "Care, Inc.".

GIFTS HEAPED AROUND MANGER

Boston, Mass.—Representatives from 100 or more parishes brought gifts for the use of hospital and prison chaplains, and heaped them around the manger scene in the chancel of St. Paul's Cathedral on the afternoon of Dec. 17, when the annual Christmas service of the Church Service League Women's Division was held. Dean Edwin J. Van Etten gave the address; and afterward a Santa Claus in the cathedral undercroft distributed gifts to missionaries present and a jolly tea capped the occasion. Among missionaries present were Mrs. Wilfred C. Files of Fort Yukon, Alaska; and, from Wuchang, China, Mrs. John Coe, who, with Mr. Coe of the Huachung University faculty, will sail for China on Jan. 17, by the S. S. General Meigs of the President Line, San Francisco.

LAY READERS COMMISSIONED

Boston, Mass.—Six lay readers were commissioned by Bishop Nash on Dec. 16 at a service in the Chapel of the Diocesan House. The Rev. G. Earle Daniels, chairman of the Diocesan Commission on Lay Readers, presented the candidates: Robert J. Carlson, St. John's Church, Arlington; David K. Howells, Church of the Good Shepherd, East Dedham; Frederick J. Libby, St. Paul's Church, Malden; Dr. Calvin Gates Page, St. Paul's Cathedral; Earle F. Plank, Church of the Holy Spirit, Mattapan, and William F. Seaward of St. Anne's and St. Paul's, Revere. Supper in the Assembly Hall followed, and an informal meeting of the new lay readers with members of the Commission. Also present was the Rev. David R. Hunter, diocesan executive for Christian Education and director of the Diocesan Schools at which the lay readers have received teaching on the Bible, Prayer Book, and the use of the voice.

GRATITUDE FOR BISHOP'S ACTION

New York, N. Y.—"With utmost gratitude," the Supreme Bishop of the Philippine Independent Church, Don Isabelo de los Reyes, has written to Presiding Bishop Sherrill regarding the action of the House of Bishops in November, providing that the Philippine Church shall be given a valid episcopate through the Episcopal Church. Bishop de los Reyes said, "We are fully determined to accept all the conditions demanded for the granting of such a precious gift, and we will endeavor to fulfill the requirements about the adoption of the Book of Common Prayer with the necessary adaptations in all our churches. Likewise we will continue as heretofore, conducting all our services in the dialects of the various communities as well as in English and Spanish, both official languages in the Philippines."

Expressing confidence in the future, Bishop de los Reyes said: "With the inspiration of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Independent Church of the Philippines is sure to become one of the most vital moral forces in the spiritual rehabilitation of the people of the Philippines. Most of my people are presently eagerly seeking to learn more and more about the Protestant Episcopal Church. We envision immense blessings and the salvation of countless immortal souls by the action of the House of Bishops.

"I confidently believe that the bestowing of valid orders to our clergy is only the beginning of a new era in the Philippines. All of us will exert our best efforts to become worthy of the magnanimity of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

SPECIFIC SUGGESTIONS IF YOU RECEIVE LETTERS OF APPEAL

New York, N. Y.—Letters from Germany appealing for packages of food or clothing and coming from unknown individuals should not be answered, nor should such packages be sent. That is the theme of a letter just sent by the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, to the Bishops of the Church.

Dr. Pepper states that many such appeal letters are being received, and some of the bishops and other clergy have sent them to the National Council offices. It has been revealed that many of them are written by the same person or group of persons. "In some cases it is clear that the appeals are a 'racket'. Such letters are going also to the clergy of other Churches and Church World Service has thousands of them."

Dr. Pepper's letter offers specific suggestions: "If you receive such letters, we suggest that you send them to us. Through Church World Service we send them to Hilfswerk, the central agency of the Evangelical, Old Catholic, and Eastern Orthodox Churches in Germany, and a visitation is made and help given if needed.

"Unless you know someone personally we believe that the best way to help the people in Germany and other countries is through the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. The program is personalized in those countries by being distributed through Christian workers."

PLANS EXPEDITION TO UNEXPLORED AREAS

Boston, Mass.—Bradford Washburn, director of the Boston Museum of Science (evolution of the old Natural History Museum), and the son of the Rev. Dr. Henry B. Washburn, dean emeritus of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, plans an aerial expedition to the mountains of Western China, which includes some of the last unexplored and uncharted areas of the earth. Mr. Washburn is already known as an intrepid mountaineer and scientist, and famed for his work in connection with Mt. McKinley, Alaska. The expedition is expected to start on Jan. 1, from Chicago, and last for six weeks. Its joint sponsors are the Boston Museum of Science and Milton Reynolds of the Reynolds Pen Company, who is expected to go on the flight, as is Julian Levi, the company vice-president, who will act as historian of the expedition. The source of the Yellow River will be sought, and the little known mountain range, reputed to contain peaks that top Mt. Everest, will be explored.

Five scientists will form the staff of the specially equipped C-87, piloted by William P. Odom who holds the round-the-world flying record. Professor Walter McKay of the department of aeronautical engineering of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has been invited to handle observation and instrumentation; Professor Richard P. Goldthwait of Ohio State University will study glacial geology; and Grant Ross of Boston University optical research laboratory will help Mr. Washburn with protography.

NEW CHAPEL CONSECRATED

Havana, Cuba.—On Sunday morning, November 30, the Rt. Rev. Alexander Hugo Blankingship, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Cuba, consecrated the new Episcopal Cathedral of the Holy Trinity, built in Havana through the efforts and cooperation of many members and friends of the Episcopal Church in Cuba.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick Deane Goodwin, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, preached the Consecration Sermon, the Honorable R. Henry Norweb, American Ambassador to Cuba, read the Consecration Sentences, the Honorable James L. Dodds, British Minister to Cuba, presented the Instrument of Donation to Bishop Blankingship, and Mr. J. Earl Fowler, Assistant Secretary of the Overseas Department of the National Council, read a message from the Presiding Bishop, as his appointed representative.

In the Order for the Holy Communion the Epistle was read by Archdeacon J. H. Piloto, and the Very Rev. E. B. Mowers, Dean of the Cathedral, read the Gospel. The Ven. R. Gonzales-Agueros, Archdeacon of Oriente, read a Spanish summary of Bishop Goodwin's sermon.

In his salutation to the congregation Bishop Blankingship stressed the fact that Holy Trinity Cathedral was intended to be a House of Prayer for all people.

On the days immediately preceding the Consecration of the Cathedral the Woman's Auxiliary in the Island had their Annual Convention, under the presidency of Miss Eleonora de Jongh, and the Missionary District of Cuba its Annual Convocation. At a Holy Communion Service the United Thank Offering for the second semester in the year was presented in a new alms bason, the gift of the members of the Auxiliary in Cuba as a memorial to Mrs. Ida Soule, founder of the United Thank Offering.

At a luncheon where members and visitors of both Conventions got together Bishop Blankingship was presented by Archdeacon R. Gonzalez-Agueros, on behalf of the whole Church in Cuba, with a check for over one thousand dollars, a gift intended to help the Bishop with his trip to the Lambeth Conference in 1948.

After all these activities were over Mr. Fowler left with Bishop Blankingship and Mrs. Fowler on a brief trip through the Island, a trip which will acquaint him personally with the work in some of the Episcopal churches in Cuba.

"NOTABLE CONTRIBUTION"

New York, N. Y.—All church people should give careful study to the report of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights which is a "notable contribution to our progress toward a working democracy," the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, said in a statement released here today.

Other points of the Executive Committee statement touched on phases of the civil rights report dealing with loyalty investigations and with questions of world peace. "We share the anxiety of the Committee for proper safeguards for the rights of the individual. It should be possible to accomplish all that is needed in the way of security without jeopardizing rights that in our Constitution are held to be inviolable." . . . "We cannot hope to influence other peoples to accept the Christian way of life, or other natons to accept the democratic principles we proclaim unless we can demonstrate in our own community living that we take them seriously . . ."

Recognizing that there may be honest differences of opinion on several recommendations of the Truman Committee, the statement points out that "The Federal Council, having already laid down what it regards as basic Christian principles (in previous actions), is especially interested in what may now be done to work out the implications of these principles in practical procedures."

The statement points to the Christian Concern for the individual which is central in the Civil Rights report. "In several respects the report lifts into prominence certain positions taken by the Federal Council at a Special Meeting in Columbus, Ohio, in March, 1946. It is now the special responsibility and opportunity of the churches to promote discussion of the Committee's report."

The Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches at the same time released a resolution on one specific phase of the civil rights picture—a request that Congress amend our immigration and naturalization laws to eliminate discrimination respecting Orientals. This would extend to all Orientals the right of immigration and naturalization recently extended by Congress to Chinese, East Indians and Filipinos.

SEVENTEEN CONFIRMED

Summerville, S. C.—The Rt. Rev. Thomas N. Carruthers, D. D., bishop of South Carolina, confirmed a class of 17 at St. Paul's Church recently. Assisting him was the Rev. F. W. Ambler, D. D., rector emeritus, and the Rev. O.'Ferrall Thompson, rector.

Final 1947 Report

New York, N. Y.—The National Council has prepared a final 1947 report on the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, showing that during the year Church people gave $1,093,312.25 for this work.

Announcement was made also that in January a booklet will be available which will show the wide variety of services in which this Church has shared.

The new class brings to a total of 66 people the number who have been confirmed at St. Paul's during the past 18 months.

In 1946 St. Paul's led the diocese of South Carolina in the number of confirmations. According to present plans, a large class will be confirmed in the Spring of 1948.

During the past year and a half 134 people have become communicants of St. Paul's. This represents a 33 per cent increase in church membership, now totaling 402 communicants. There are 632 baptized members.

During the past two years the Sunday school has tripled its membership from 45 to a present 148. During the past year the interior of the Parish House has been painted and redecorated, the Women's Auxiliary reorganized and a men's club formed.

ORDINATIONS

Priest

The Rev. David Merriman Talbot, assistant in the Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio, was advanced to the Priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Ohio, in Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, on December 22, 1947. The Rev. G. Clarence Lund, rector of the Church of Our Saviour, presented Mr. Talbot, and the Rev. Samuel U. J. Peard, rector of Grace Church, Mansfield, Ohio, preached the sermon.

Deacon

Lee Wilson Burnett was ordered a Deacon by the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Ohio, in Christ Church, Warren, Ohio, on December 20, 1947. The Rev. John K. Baiz, rector of Christ Church, presented the Candidate and preached the sermon. Mr. Burnett will serve as minister-in-charge of St. Paul's Parish, Bellevue, and Grace Mission, Clyde, Ohio.

Mr. Gerald Stewart Bliss was ordained to the diaconate on December 14 the Third Sunday in Advent, by the Rt. Rev. Frederick L. Barry, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Albany, in Christ Church, Hudson, N. Y. He was presented by the rector of Christ Church, the Rev. Allen Webster Brown, who also preached the sermon. The Rev. J. Hugh Hooper, retired rector of Hudson Falls and an uncle of Mr. Bliss, sang the Litany.

Mr. Bliss has been a Lay Reader for several years and latterly has been officially assisting the rector of Christ Church in administrative and educational ways. He will continue as assistant to Mr. Brown in deacon's orders.

Mr. Bliss is the grandson of a priest of the Church of England and also has a brother in the priesthood of the Episcopal Church. He is a first cousin of Sir Charles G. D. Roberts and Bliss Carman. Mr. Bliss studied at Harvard University and the Julliard School of Music, New York. He served as organist and choirmaster in the Diocese of Minnesota for three years and for a number of years at Christ Church, Hudson, where he has been ordained. He enlisted in the U. S. Navy in September, 1942, and saw service at Tarawa and Tinian and was later instructor in first aid at a Navy Base in the United States. It was during his military service, when on several occasions he escaped unscathed from apparently hopeless missions, that he was moved to consecrate his life to the Church's ministry.

DEATHS

Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein

The Rt. Rev. Edward Trail Helfenstein, D. D., retired Bishop of Maryland, died on December 22 in Baltimore, Md., after a relatively brief illness. The Bishop suffered a severe heart attack in recent weeks but rallied at the Church Home and Infirmary, where he had been taken, and two weeks ago was permitted to return to his home for convalescence. Death came peacefully, the Bishop's wife, Mrs. Grace Nelson Helfenstein, being with him at the end. The funeral took place at the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Baltimore, on Wednesday, Christmas Eve, at 11 A. M., and interment followed in Mt. Olivet Cemetery, Frederick, Md.

Bishop Helfenstein was born in St. Louis, Mo., April 7, 1865, the son of Cyrus G. Helfenstein and Annie E. (Trail) Helfenstein. He was educated at Frederick College; the Episcopal High School, Alexandria, Va.; Johns Hopkins University and the Virginia Theological Seminary, where he gradated in 1889. Bishop Helfenstein was ordained in 1889 and priest in 1890 by Bishop Paret. He was successively Deacon-in-Charge of Christ Church, Rock Spring and Holy Cross, The Rocks, Harford County, Maryland; rector St. Mark's Parish, Frederick and Washington Counties, 1890-1900; Rector St. John's Church, Ellicott City, Md., 1900-1920, and St. Peters, Ellicott City 1913-1920. He served as Archdeacon of Maryland 1920-26; was elected Bishop Coadjutor December 28, 1926, and on the death of Bishop John Gardner Murray, Presiding Bishop and Bishop of Maryland, October 3, 1929, became the Eighth Bishop of the Diocese.

Bishop Helfenstein retired by reason of age, November 1, 1943, and was succeeded by the Rt. Rev. Noble Cilly Powell, D. D., who had been elected Coadjutor and became Diocesan on that date, the Ninth Bishop of the Diocese. While a Priest of the Diocese, where his entire ministry was spent, Bishop Helfenstein served as Secretary of the Standing Committee, a member of the Board of Examining Chaplains and of the Committee on Constitution and Canons. He was a deputy to the General Conventions of 1916, 1919, 1922 and 1925. He received the honorary degree of Divinity from V. T. S. in 1916.

In accord with Bishop Helfenstein's request that the utmost simplicity mark his funeral service, there were two priests only in the sanctuary with Bishop Powell, who officiated. These were the Rev. Canon Harold N. Arrowsmith, of the Cathedral, and the Rev. Dr. Philip J. Jensen, Rector of St. Thomas' Church, Garrison Forest.

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION SUNDAY

At the request of the Joint Commission on Theological Education, I have designated Septuagesina Sunday, January 25th, 1948, as Theological Education Sunday.

This Sunday I hope will be the occasion for addresses in every church upon the importance of the work of our Theological Seminaries, and furthermore that in every parish there will be given an opportunity for the people of the Church to give financial support to the Seminaries.

Our Theological Schools are vital to the continuing life of the Church, for in them are trained our clergy, who are responsible in large degree for the leadership of our Parishes. Thus the Seminaries are of immediate and practical significance to every lay person. The Seminaries are in serious need of financial aid. I hope that there will be a generous response by a wise and strategically minded Church.

REV. H. B. Lee

The Rev. Henry B. Lee, Jr., rector of St. Mary's Church, Edgewood, Md., and a native of Charlottesville, Va., died December 20, in a Washington hospital after an illness of a year.

He was the son of an Episcopal minister, the late Rev. Henry Bedinger Lee, for many years rector of Christ Church, Charlottesville.

The Rev. Mr. Lee was educated at the University of Viriginia and the Episcopal Theological Seminary. After entering the ministry, he served in pulpits in Fairfax Courthouse, Weston, Homestead, Md., and Dawson, Md.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Sue Kent Rust Lee; a daughter, Mrs. Mary Nelson Lee, of Washington; a son, H. B. Lee, III, of Pittsburgh; four brothers, Dr. Claude M. Lee, a missionary who recently returned from China; Edwin G. Lee, of Charlottesville; the Rev. J. Keith Lee, of Cayuga Falls, Ohio; the Rev. Richard Henry Lee, of Amherst, and two sisters, Miss Rebecca Lee and Mrs. W. Eskridge Duke, of Charlottesville.

Rev. Lewis N. Taylor

The Rev. Lewis Nathaniel Taylor, D. D., beloved rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, S. C., for twenty-two years, died December 3 after a brief illness. Funeral services were conducted in the Church of the Good Shepherd December 5 by the Rt. Rev. John J. Gravatt, D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina, assisted by the Rev. A. C. Branwell Bennett and the Rev. J. Kenneth Morris, both of Columbia. Interment was at his old home in Oxford, North Carolina, the following day, with Bishop Gravatt officiating.

The Rev. Dr. Taylor was born October 29, 1889, in Oxford, N. C., the son of Thomas G. Taylor and Mildred Kennon Taylor. He was a graduate of the University of North Carolina and General Theological Seminary. He also took graduate work at the University of South Carolina. He was ordained to the priesthood in July, 1914. He served parishes in North Carolina before becoming rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, in 1925.

During his years in Columbia, Dr. Taylor was not only a pastor to his congregation, but in a sense to the entire city, and it is said of him that no one ever appealed to him for help but that he had some worthwhile suggestion to offer. At the time of his death he was president of the Standing Committee of the diocese, and he had served for many years on the Executive Council, as well as chairman of many important commissions and committees. He was four times elected a deputy to General Conventions of the Church.

Besides his widow, the former Miss Adelaide Henrietta Trehou, of Garfield, N. J., he is survived by three daughters, six brothers, a sister and several grandchildren.

Rev. James Opie

The Rev. James Opie, 73, Episcopal rector, was buried at the Community Church cemetery at Augusta, Montana, Sunday, November 16th.

The funeral was of a community-wide interest and character. The Rev. T. M. Burleson, assisted by Rev. G. Larsen, augmented by a community choir, conducted the services in the Community Church.

The Rev. James Opie, born in England, and came to Montana by way of Canada in the late 90's. He served as pioneer Methodist missionary in various places, including Augusta.

In 1927 Mr. Opie entered the Episcopal ministry under Bishop Barnwell and served in several places in Southern Idaho until his retirement five years ago, when he resumed residence in Augusta.

In the latter part of October Mr. Opie went to Salt Lake City for medical treatment, where he succumbed to an embolism.

The Rev. Mr. Opie is survived by his wife, a daughter, one son and several grandchildren.

CONFUSION CREATED

Sir: On or about November 23, 1947, the American Weekly, a Sunday supplement of the Hearst newspapers, carried an account of the Rev. Gareth Hughes' work in Nevada. If read carefully, the account is correct, but the implications are entirely incorrect.

The Rev. Mr. Hughes was not ordained in the Episcopal Church and is not ministering in any capaciey under my direction. He was ordained in Los Angeles by the authorities of the Apostolic Episcopal Church which, I believe, has no connection with the Protestant Episcopal Church in America.

No little confusion has been created by this article, and I should like to make clear that Mr. Hughes is not connected with the Missionary District of Nevada in any way.

WILLIAM FISHER LEWIS.
Bishop of Nevada.

A CALAMITY FOR THE WORK

Sir: The House of Bishops has accepted my resignation because of old age to be effective March 1, 1948, so that I feel free to make a strong appeal for the work of the Chung Hua Seng Kung Huei.

I have just received word from the overseas secretary that the contributions of the Church have so fallen off that almost 10% must be reduced from our working budget. It has been impossible for me to meet the needs of the work even with the budget which was granted. Any cut means a calamity for the work. I have been in China forty-five years and I believe that at this time we are faced with the greatest opportunity in the history of the Church in the China Mission.

On Christmas Eve I had the great responsibility of trying to present the gospel of the Christ Child to 1,000 Chinese children in St. Lois' School. For many of these children this was their first service in a Christian church. Each class had been taught a Christmas carol. Many more children throughout this part of China would crowd into our schools if we had places for them. Financial difficulties have prevented me from reopening even the primary schools which we had before the war. The whole community cannot understand why the Bishop from the richest country in the world cannot find enough money to do what used to be done. The Bishop also cannot understand.

I appeal to all the members of our Church at home to give more heartily to the support of the work throughout the world. Everyone everywhere now knows that the hope of the world is in the gospel of the Christ Child. American papers are full of stories of the corruption and maladministration in China, and there is a general feeling among the Chinese that the only cure is in the creation of multitudes of faithful Chinese Christians.

ALFRED A. GILMAN,
Bishop of Hankow.

Hankow, Dec. 26 1947.

Personal Notes

The Rev Armand T. Eyler, who has been rector of St. Margaret's Church, Washington, D. C., since November, 1940, has submitted his resignation on account of ill health, and has requested that it become effective immediately.

The vestry announces that the resignation has been accepted.

FIRST SUNDAY AFTER THE EPIPHANY

The Collect

Lord, we beseech Thee mercifully to receive the prayers of Thy people who call upon Thee, and grant that they may both perceive and know what things they ought to do, and also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfil the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Grant that we may both perceive and know what things we ought to do, and also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfil the same."

Perception and knowledge begin with desire, while grace and power begin through willingness. When we give God a chance to direct us through submitting our choices to Him, we shall find it possible to discover what we ought to do and the earnest commitment to the task of doing, not forgetful of God's best nor of the human standards set by God in Christ. When we want to know the right so that we may do it, then it shall be known and done.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Bishop Arne Fjellbu, His Significance to Americans

By HENRY SMITH LEIPER

As we approach the time of the first World Assembly of Churches to be held in Amsterdam, Holland, in August, 1948, it is crucial that we Americans enrich our understanding and appreciation of present-day church life in Europe. We are together committed to an adventure in cooperation. We have got to build that cooperation on knowledge.

When we Americans think of Europe, we are liable to picture bombed out cities and hungry people. That, unfortunately, is indeed a big part of Europe's story today—but it is not the whole story. European churchmen face spiritual and political problems fully as vast, as complex, and as challenging as the needs of physical reconstruction. In this huge spiritual task, Bishop Arne Fjellbu of Norway has taken a lead, and Americans will feel a special interest in Bishop Fjellbu because he was born and received his early education in America.

Arne Fjellbu was born in Decorah, Iowa, in 1890. His father had been educated in Norway, and graduated from Oslo University with a degree in theology. Soon after his graduation, Pastor Fjellbu Sr. took his family to America where Arne Fjellbu was born. He received his first education in a prairie schoolhouse in Walsh County, North Dakota.

When Arne was ten, the Fjellbu family moved back to Norway. Arne Fjellbu received a degree in theology from the University of Oslo. In 1915, he was appointed secretary of the Norwegian Student Christian Movement.

A year later, he was appointed pastor to the Norwegian congregation in Berlin, and during this time studied at the Universities of Berlin and Heidelberg.

After serving as a war correspondent on the 'East front' during the first World War, Dr. Fjellbu returned to Trondheim where he was appointed chaplain of the Cathedral of Nidaros a Norwegian national shrine. He was Dean of the Cathedral when the Second World War started.

The square in front of this Cathedral was the scene of the first open conflict between the Nazis and the Church of Norway. Supporters of the Quisling Government decided to hold a church service in the Cathedral on February 1st, 1942, to celebrate and bless the accession of Quisling to power. Dean Fjellbu vigorously opposed this ceremony, and finally shifted the regular service to afternon of the same day.

A huge crowd gathered outside the Cathedral at the time of the afternoon service in support of the Dean's resistance to the secular authorities. They sang "A Mighty Fortress is our God." The Quisling police broke up the meeting by driving cars through the crowd.

That week, Dean Fjellbu was dismissed from the Cathedral. Two weeks later, all seven bishops of the Norwegian Church, including Eivind Berggrav, the Primate, resigned their posts as bishops of the National Church.

Following his official dismissal as Dean of the Cathedral of Nidaros, Dr. Fjellbu was put under house arrest by the Quisling Government.

Following his house arrest, Dr. Fjellbu was frequently questioned by the Gestapo, and after one of these questionings was ordered into exile. His place of exile was an island in the far north of Norway where he spent a year and a half. Dr. Fjellbu's exile was finally brought to an end when the Gestapo came to get him on the island and put him in a concentration camp. With his family he escaped over the North Norway mountains to Sweden (October 1944). Dr. Fjellbu and his family stayed in Sweden until Finnmark (the extreme northern province of Norway) was liberated by the Russians.

As soon as Finnmark was liberated, Dr. Fjellbu was appointed Bishop of a specially created diocese of Finnmark. He flew to Finnmark by plane with the first Norwegian soldiers.

In April, 1945, at the invitation of the authorities of the Church of England, Dr. Fjellbu paid a visit to London and preached the memorial sermon on the date of the anniversary of the invasion of Denmark and Norway in Westminster Abbey, in the presence of the King and Crown Prince of Norway and the Danish Crown Princess.

Soon after Dr. Fjellbu's visit to England, Germany surrendered, and Dr. Fjellbu was appointed Bishop of Trondheim. He returned to Trondheim promptly to take up his duties at the Cathedral of Nidaros.

At the present time, Europe, far more than America, is a melee of competing ideologies and faiths. Europe's churchmen can no longer afford to keep the faith and order of their churches at a distance from the life of the people. Not all European churchmen realize the extent of this past cleavage, and there are too many churchmen abroad, as there are in this country, who strive vainly to recreate a world which is irretrievably gone. Hence Bishop Fjellbu's words have deep meaning when he says, "If the ministry is to reach today all those who need it, it must be down to earth and real. It must concern human beings in the situation where they are living and struggling today."

Bishop Fjellbu is also confronted with the secular faith of socialism. This faith expresses itself in the Norwegian Labor party—which I emphasize is not a Communist party—but the party which produced Trygvie Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations. The Norse labor party, now in power, hasn't always been on the friendliest terms with the Norwegian church. During the war, however, the Socialists and the Christians worked very closely in their opposition to the Nazi occupation. It is the task of Bishop Fjellbu, and other far-sighted churchmen throughout Europe, to preserve the common bonds of respect and brotherhood between democratic socialists and Christians on the one hand, yet on the other to preserve the unique position of Christianity.

Bishop Fjellbu's policy is one of high Christian Statesmanship: "We must admit in all frankness that we admire many of those who are not our brothers in the faith. . . . Those values for which we fought together during the war are still in the greatest danger. But just as certainly as there is a great deal of good and moral to be found among those who disagree with our Christian view of life, it is equally certain that if God is pushed aside, if the Christian tidings are not allowed to reach the whole of our people, the moral values are riven asunder and we end finally in total nihilism. . . . Rather than to attack . . ., it would be more correct to fortify the position the church still retains, and fortify it well."

Slowly, without crisis or headline, Bishop Fjellbu and hundreds of churchmen throughout Europe work to "fortify" their churches in the strength of Christian faith.

Parishes are tragically undermanned. One pastor in Norway, for example, serves an average of 4000 parishioners. Years of occupation have lowered the level of pastoral education. Teachers in church primary schools, after years of malnutrition and lack of equipment, need heart and help to go on. The internal organization of the Church of Norway shows need for greater representation and participation of laymen and laywomen, and it may be necessary to revise in some way the present voluntary organizations of laity. Finally, relations between the Church of Norway, as an established church, and the present Labor government must be carefully defined.

Each issue faced, each decision made, all add up to a reconstruction of the human spirit which years of Nazi occupation have in many ways made necessary. We in America have never known the blatant "thought control" which Nazi occupation entailed. Nor the opposing need for a centralized and disciplined opposition.

"It is not always correct to wait for orders of the day from above as we did during the war. It is no longer the bishops who must speak on behalf of the church as a whole. Today every individual churchman must understand his responsibility. We have our pulpits. The press is open to us . . . everyone who feels the call must speak out." These words of Bishop Fjellbu's have a strange and tragic ring to our American ears. Yet they give vivid illustration of the gulf of experience which separates us from the Europeans. This is the gulf that we seek to bridge with understanding and humility.

Bishop Fjellbu, in his speeches and travels in the United States, will give us Americans some added insights into the vast importance which Europeans now attach to the task and purpose of the First World Assembly of Churches. The communication which we have taken for granted is to the Europeans a very precious thing. In the adventure of cooperation at Amsterdam, we must be sure that the differences of experience between the Europeans and the Americans do not seriously affect that true communication which Christians the world over must maintain as true internationalism of the spirit.

Nunc Dimittis

To the Shepherds of the Nativity, announcement of the Saviour's birth, was made by the Angel of the Lord; to the Wise Men, the heavens declared the story; but who, or what, directed Simeon to that Child in Mary's arms? Perhaps two things—the fact that the Holy Spirit was upon him, and, that from a child he had known the Scriptures which we call Old, but which the Holy Spirit used to give to Simeon the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. In those Writings he found promises, and he believed those promises. Having seen them afar off, he became persuaded of them, and embraced them, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. In those sacred oracles he meditated day and night, and his reading constrained him to be ready for One who should come. In an early Writing he found mention as to the race in which the Expected One should be born (Genesis 12:3). He became familiar with a word in Numbers 24:17; he thought deeply upon the promise in Deuteronomy 18:15; and the more specific words of Isaiah 7:14, and Isaiah 9: 6, 7, and Micah 5:2 were prayed over again and again. From these, and from other sources, Simeon learned that the Coming One was to be of his own Hebrew race, and of the tribe of Judah; that He would be born of a Virgin, in the city of Bethlehem. So did the Old Scriptures become a lamp unto his feet, and a light unto the path which led to where the Saviour was to be found. It had been revealed to him by the Holy Spirit, that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ, according to the promises, and as he in that charter read, with sparkling eyes, his title to a treasure in the skies, he sang Nunc Dimittis.

That Song was born of God's three great gifts to men—the Scriptures, the Holy Spirit, the Saviour. And, first, the Scriptures, (and for us, the whole of Scripture). When, some thirty years later, that same Saviour said to some, "Search the Scriptures," He referred to the earlier Writings; there were no others then. The Lord Jesus, and all the writers and great leaders of the Second Volume, (excepting perhaps Luke the Gentile), had been reared on the Old Testament. As Christians, the New is our more precious portion, but the second volume is enfolded in the first, and we need the older writings too. We need both books; we need the whole. We should know nothing of the Lord Jesus Christ if God had not been pleased to give us the Holy Scriptures, which have, as their main purpose, the revelation of Christ Jesus the Lord, and unless we are reading and studying our Bible, we shall not come to a perfect knowledge of the Son of God. Without the Book we cannot become mature Christians, and to such of us as can no longer attend our parish church, the home-study of the Word becomes still more important. These Writings have been given that we may believe that Jesus is the Christ, and that believing, we might have life through His Name. The words reveal the Word; so says Jeremiah 15, verse 16. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them, and Thy Word became to me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." The written word reveals the living Word, and He it is who becomes the joy and rejoicing of the heart.

These, then, are our Father's greatest gifts to us—the Scriptures, the Saviour, the Holy Spirit. Before any reading it is good to use such a prayer as is provided on page 92 of the Prayer Book—or such a one as is offered in number 58 in the Hymnal.

The Spirit breathes upon the Book, revealing One, Whom to behold, is to see the glory of the Lord, and Whom to receive, is salvation, and so to be prepared for our own Nunc dimittis.

A suitable summary is provided in John 5:39; John 16:33; Romans 14:17.

In them, the Scriptures, eternal life;
In Me, the Saviour, Nunc Dimittis;
In the Holy Spirit, righteousness and peace and joy.

SCHOOL OF EVANGELISM FOR WOMEN

Richmond, Va.—The Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson of the Cathedral of Toronto will be in Richmond for several weeks, arriving January 9. He will conduct a Class on Evangelism at the Mayo Memorial Church House, starting on Monday, January 12, from 11 to 12 o'clock.

Canon Paterson has had wide experience in this field, having conducted Schools of Evangelism with great success in various dioceses in Canada.

His subject will be—"Definite Evangelism—the need, the evangel, the method and the workers."

The School is open to all denominations.

The Church's One Foundation

By REV. FREDERICK C. GRANT

Sermon preached at the Ordination of the Rev. Harold F. McGee, Immanuel Church, Old Church, Virginia, October 13, 1947, by the Rev. Frederick C. Grant, Professor of Biblical Theology, Union Theological Seminary, New York City.

I Cor. 3:11. "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

It is appropriate to take a text from St. Paul, since so much of the New Testament comes from his pen.

And this is a text which one who is being ordained can take with him for the rest of his life, for warning, encouragement, and inspiration.

I

It is a sentence that Paul elaborates in a paragraph, but it sums up, in one clear, flashing utterance, all his thought on the subject. It is not only the key to the solution of the church problem in Corinth, but a motto set over Paul's whole life. I wish it could be carved on the cornerstone of every Christian institution, printed on the letterhead of every parish and diocese, stamped on the corner of every Christian's engagement book, stencilled on the wall of every parish house, study, and church office! We need the reminder constantly. For the Christian is a builder, and the clergyman is an architect—as the word means in Greek, he is a 'chief builder'; not, perhaps, one set over the builders to tell them how to build, but one who himself builds, a foreman, and leads others by example. Even God is the 'builder and maker'—not only of the heavenly city, but of all things, visible and invisible; and, as the Johannine Christ declared, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work". That is the first lesson—we are not to spend all our time drafting blueprints and issuing directions for others to carry out: we must ourselves lead in the work of building. That is precisely what Paul says in the verse before: "As a wise master-builder I laid a foundation". That foundation is already laid, well and truly laid: it is nothing else than Jesus Christ himself! Let every man take care how he builds on that foundation! A time of testing is at hand. Someday a fire will break out—fire, which was the most terrible foe of ancient cities, which were close-built, inflammable, and had very inadequate protection. Then, as now, a fire showed up the kind of workmanship and materials that had gone into the structure: "The fire itself shall prove each man's work, of what sort it is", he adds. These words, I say, are a warning, an encouragement, an inspiration to each one of us, according to the kind of material and workmanship we are putting into the building upon which we are each engaged.

But there is a wider application. "Each man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it is revealed in fire"—undoubtedly Paul is thinking of the Day of Judgment, which he supposed was near at hand. Then every man's work would be tested! It would come like a holocaust over the whole world, "and the third part of the earth would be burned up", as the seer of the Apocalypse foresaw; "the elements melting in fervent heat", as II Peter expected; the baptism of the fire of judgment, as John the Baptist had predicted. It is easy to dismiss such language as derived from ancient Jewish apocalyptic—unless one realizes the horror that fire has become for whole cities, and great ships, and armies of men on land and in the air. Judgment Day is not only the "last great day" of the final assize of men and nations; there are lesser days, but still terrible enough, when God's judgments are in the earth—indeed, as some of our Barthian friends maintain, "every day is judgment day". These lesser judgments, in the ordinary—or rather the extraordinary—course of history, do not have the fine surgical discrimination and skill of the Last Judgment: their consequences are on the whole and in a general way an expression of the divine judgment; but they are not exact, or final, and they create evils as well as destroy them—as the ancient Greek poets always insisted; and in their crude way, being human, not divine, they injure the good as well as punish the wicked. I. e., even God's temporal judgments are limited by the necessity of using—he chooses to use—human instruments; and the human instruments are imperfect. How many innocent children have been destroyed by this recent war, for example! It cannot be the judgment of God, pure and final, for the Lord's judgment is perfect. Instead, it is a crude approximation, human, not divine, moving in the right direction, motivated in general by the love of justice and belief in fair-play, but also motivated to some extent by other concerns (trade, national prestige and prerogatives, the sense of superiority—even the sporting spirit comes into the picture!) But it certainly is one of the days of judgment, this terrible war that has destroyed "the third part of the earth".

It is because it is a test of the Christian foundation that we are thinking about it. Will Christianity survive the revolution that is now taking place, of which the war was one phase—the revolution that began in 1914, or really long before then, and which produced this war because the forces opposed to it represented no "wave of the future" but the most backward looking survival of blind force, of tyranny, of selfishness and pride that human society has faced. It is not only in Berlin and Tokyo that Satan has had his seat! Wherever the primitive stupid "will to power" sets out to take what it wants, and keep it at all costs, there the forces of human freedom are challenged, and there the cause of Christ faces a stone wall of opposition.

II

Now the question is, Will Christianity survive? Will it survive (a) its enemies, and also (b) its allies? I think there is no question it will survive the foe, and triumph victoriously in the life-or-death conflict. I often think of the line in Virgil, where Aeneas encourages his handful of veterans: "Ye who have endured worse trials than these, surely God will give you victory over these also."

The Church has seen dark days before now; and when civilization has been all but totally wrecked, again and again, the Church has come forward and set about its task of healing and restoration. The Barbarian Invasions, the fall of Rome, the menace of Islam in the 15th century, the thirty years war! Read Toynbee—of 19 civilizations which have developed upon this earth, only three survive. As the great reformer, Theodore de Beze, said to the French king, "Sire, the Church is an anvil which has worn out many hammers." Or as one of my colleagues, a historian of human thought has said, "This old world has seen many crises, and will probably survive the present one."

It might have been different, this past ten years; yes, if Britain had fallen, if Russia had not taken a hand, if America had been destroyed, if the faithful within Germany and the occupied countries had been all rounded up and massacred —then the prediction of a Russian aristocrat in 1935 might have been fulfilled: "Christianity cannot survive the next war."

But it is the allies of Christianity who sometimes threaten its survival—by substituting their own programs for the one to which the church is committed, and offer other foundations than that ancient one that is already laid, even Jesus Christ.

Our times are—or were, before 1939 —like those of the prophet Ezekiel:

"The word of the Lord came to me, saying, Son of Man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, the vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of times that are far off. Therefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: There shall none of my words be deferred any more, but the word which I shall speak shall be performed, saith the Lord God."—Ezek. 12:26-28.

It is the irrelevance, the remoteness, the inconsequence of Christianity that is the chief charge against it, where it is attacked today. Other ages accused it of moral obliquity, priest-craft, oppression of the poor, the suppression of truth and learning; but those charges have fallen dead. Now people say, "Yes, the Gospel is a beautiful dream—and would that it could be realized! But it never will be realized in a world like this!" Indeed, it is not an attractive dream to some, who say it only shows up our wickedness and impotence, it passes judgment upon us—and we would be happier if we had never heard of it!

And so there is a temptation to the church to go in for relevance, something more up to date, streamlined, more attainable by human flesh and blood, less idealistic and utopian, more "practical". Let us call it loyalty to the church, or the regular use of the sacraments, or daily Bible reading, or evangelism, or church publicity, or—anything that will work, and does not require the full 100% un-denatured application of the Gospel of Christ! Now of course—as so often!—what is really needed is both: "These ought ye to have done, and not leave the other undone."

Indeed, there never was a time in all human history when the pure, full, undiluted Gospel of Jesus Christ was more needed, or promised more results, than today. Other foundation can no man lay: we have tried them, e. g., material benefits for everybody—and it only sharpened the tongues of greedy masters; we tried concessions, and saw the Czechs sold outright to preserve "peace in our time", and it only unchained the ancient serpent from his dungeon; we tried appeasement—plus, profits for some—and sold oil to Italy and Japan, scrap iron for bombs and shells for blasting Chinese to bits, and they were turned on us at Pearl Harbor and Bataan. Will we never learn?

What is wrong with human life as a whole is what is wrong with many plays and novels—and many individual lives; what is wrong is its motivation. Unless something can be done to remotivate the lives of men and women, and of society generally, who can see any future for this so-called human race? It will end in blank frustration and defeat, and the purpose of God its creator will be brought to nothing. Man will go his way to extinction, along with the dinosaur and the pterodactyl and the sabre-toothed tiger.

The hope of mankind is Jesus Christ and his gospel of love, of justice and fair play, of concern for the welfare of others, of humility, of child-likeness, of penitence and faith. He alone has the key to unlock a real future for humanity, better than that of the beasts— however 'blond'. Talk about the 'relevance' of the Gospel—there is nothing else so relevant today, if permanent peace is to be achieved, and not remain a flitting, tantalizing, maddening, elusive will o' the wisp.

III

St. Paul viewed his work, his ministry, against the background of the "last days": as we say in the seminary, his outlook was "eschatologically" conditioned. By that very fact, he saw things sub specie aeternitatis—eternity might begin next week or next month. He spoke to men "upon whom the ends of the world were come", and he was such a man himself. Hence his urgency. There was no time to lose!—But we also live in times equally urgent. And even if we do not expect the end of the world, or the Last Judgment, as soon to come, we know how precarious life is. The atom bomb is here!—But even apart from that, human life is short, and we know not what a day may bring forth. Hence we must work "while it is day", knowing that "the night cometh, when no man can work". All our activities of preaching, teaching, pastoral work, evangelism, administration of sacraments—the whole work of the ministry—is conditioned by the fact of impermanence. We preach "as dying men, to dying men". There is no use scouting this as pessimism: it is simple fact—as Plato saw, long ago.

Such a thought helps one to overcome timidity and reticence—granted the major conviction that drives us forward in the first place. The late Amos R. Wells once explained how he overcame timidity: "Think where you are, on a platform, or in a pulpit; in a church, or meeting, in a city, on a continent, on one of the smaller planets, in a solar system somewhat off-center in the Milky Way, in a vast, unimaginable cosmic space." But this is an even better way to overcome our shyness (which every minister has probably felt, at first): "You have only a few minutes to speak, and the opportunity will never come again. Never again will you have just this group of people before you. Some will be gone next week, perhaps tomorrow. Here is your one chance. What will you say to them?"—"If I had only one sermon to preach" ought to be the preacher's thought every time he goes to his study to work on a sermon, every time he mounts the pulpit steps!

The Bishop of London, Dr. Wand, who has recently visited our country, has told us of the advice given him when a young curate. "How are you getting on", a friend asked. He replied that he felt very unsure of himself. "Then", his older friend said, "Let the people know you are interested in them, and there is no question of their accepting you, and of their responding to your preaching." That is sound advice. We older men can all testify to its truth. Long ago, I myself discovered that whenever I thought I had nothing to say in next Sunday's sermon, my parish calls from Monday to Thursday—Friday at latest—would give me plenty to talk about on Sunday. We don't—or shouldn't—preach mere sermons, but words addressed to people, where they live, in the midst of their needs, their wants, their aspirations and disappointments and sorrows and hopes. We have a few chances, not many, to speak "the words of eternal life" to men and women hungering to hear that word.

IV

Our work is in the Episcopal Church —we are Anglicans. And it may seem that our church lays less emphasis upon preaching and evangelism than others do. True, our sermons are shorter, and they form only part of the service of worship, not the central feature. But it takes more effort to preach a good short sermon than to preach a long one equally good! And it is the glory of Anglicanism that it makes the worship of God central, and uses the most beautiful prayer book in the world (as we view it), and lays stress upon order and decorum and well-tried ways of doing things. By the use of music, by architecture and interior arrangement of the church, we make our services as beautiful as possible—they are addressed to God, not to the congregation! We use as much of the Bible as possible—most of the service is right out of the Bible, and the language of the whole Prayer Book is biblical. Our theology is biblical. We do not exalt the preacher, but instead we recognize the authority of the church itself, functioning through the bishop, the priest, the deacon, the vestry, the convention, the parish meeting. The Bible is the sacred and inspired book of the church: but we exercise freedom in its interpretation, and we recognize the authority of learning and scholarship—we do not place ourselves at the mercy of any self-appointed interpreter, who follows his whims or fancies, or a theology which concentrates everything upon one sole doctrine to the exclusion of all else. As contrasted with Rome, Anglicanism is more democratic. As contrasted with some types of Protestantism, the Anglican Church is authoritarian. Thus we occupy a middle ground, both Catholic and Protestant—a position which is perfectly reasonable, and has worked for four hundred years; for the words Protestant and Catholic are not mutually exclusive or opposed, and as if we occupied some "No man's Land" between the two. They overlap—in fact, protestari means to affirm, not to deny; for it means, in its original and true significance, to be a witness. Thus within the wide-embracing circle of Catholic Christianity, Anglicanism witness to the truths affirmed by Protestantism (which was also Catholic, in origin!) and protests, i. e. affirms, the truth of salvation by faith as well as by grace, the one sacrifice of the death of Christ, the open Bible (now coming to be recognized and practiced more by Roman Catholics too), the use of the vernacular in worship—and the other principles of genuine Protestantism. (For genuine Protestantism is essentially a tremendous intellectual and spiritual movement, not to be identified with millennial speculation, or Bible-thumping, or 19th century camp meetings, or disregard for sacraments, or Bibliolatry, or any of the strange and extravagant phenomena that have been found on its extreme fringes.)

We are Anglicans; and in honest pride, but also in genuine humility, we thank God, and go forward to our task. The foundation is already laid: the one foundation, which is Christ Jesus: and it is upon that one foundation that all our work of building up the church proceeds, in this as in every generation. We are not peculiar; our task is still the old one—we must rise up and build.

My brother, ye have been called to be a builder, indeed a master builder or foreman, in the great edifice God is erecting in this world. Far from the times discouraging us, they challenge us—to do our best, to beware of wood, hay, stubble, indeed of gold, silver, or jewels—they are not proper structural materials for this Temple of God which is rising at his command and by his own toil as Creator and Builder of all. You are called to share with God—think of it, as a "fellow-laborer with God", as Paul described it!

You have gifts: consecrate them: you have skill—perfect it; you have devotion—follow it; you have courage and faith—never be discouraged. Let God use you where he will, and how he will, in the working out of his plans, and you will thus prove yourself, in the end, "a workman that needs not to be ashamed", for your work will last—"the day will declare it"; not the Day of Judgment only, but also the new day of divine justice, love, righteousness, and peace that (pray God) is soon to dawn on this earth, and to last, not a thousand years only, but forever—here, and beyond here.

The Imperiled Family

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

A recent statistical study of the sexual habits of Americans reveals that 40% of the men examined confessed to extra-marital relations. This disquieting fact may, or may not, be related to the more substantially attested fact that we are now reaching the alarming total of one divorce for every three marriages.

The most ancient and most hallowed of all our moral and social institutions, monogamy, is quite obviously seriously imperiled among us. In a world of broken communities we have not even been able to preserve the integrity of the most organic and the most fundamental of all human communities.

It is almost equally disquieting that the most immediate reaction to this peril is the request for more stringent laws. It may well be that we ought to have uniform divorce laws, rather than the present chaos of state provisions. But marriages are not held together as vital and creative communities by the force of law.

Law does not have the power of itself to overcome incompatability or to eliminate any of the other factors which wreck marriage. Nor is it possible to overcome increasing promiscuity merely by the reiteration of the ancient commandment from the decalogue: "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

Marriage is a very intimate community of persons. It has a natural basis in the sexual partnership of husband and wife. But though sex is a powerful force of cohesion, it is also a vagrant force. Sex alone does not hold any marital partnership together.

If there does not develop, upon the basis of the sexual partnership, a genuine and responsible relation between persons, appreciative of each other's virtues and good intentions, forgiving toward each other's shortcomings, and loyal to each other in weal or woe, no law can hold this community together.

Those of us who believe that all human relations have a religious dimension in the sense that not only our wills and desires are involved in them, but the will of God, must seek to clarify this ultimate dimension by teaching and precept.

The family is disintegrating in our modern life, as all communities are tending to disintegrate, because modern man is a technical expert who knows how to master pure nature, but he lacks the wisdom to master himself and to know himself and his fellow-men. He lacks this wisdom because it is rooted in humility and charity. It is not an intellectual but a spiritual achievement.

Men are primarily personalities and selves, rather than minds. They must come to terms with one another as selves. The charity and the loyalty which the marriage relation requires are also increasingly absent in all our other human relations.

Modern culture is proud of its many achievements, but most of its triumphs are intellectual, more particularly technical. Modern man is a miserable failure as a personality, as a self. He fails in coming to terms with his fellowmen and with himself. Perhaps he fails in the former task because he fails in the latter one.

One wonders, for instance, how many marriages fail because neither partner has the humility to confess that there is usually mutual guilt in a wrecked marriage even if the guilt is usually not equal.

We are unforgiving, in other words, because we are self-righteous. In any case we are confronted with a problem which belongs not primarily in the realm of "law," but in the realm of "grace."

FOR FAITH IN GOD'S GUIDANCE IN THE NEW YEAR

"Eternal Father, from whom every family in Heaven and Earth is named, who did send Thy Son to seek and save that which is lost, grant us to begin the New Year in Thy faith and to continue it in Thy favor, that being guided in all our doings and guarded all our days, we may spend our lives in Thy service and to Thy glory through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.

The Ministry of the Church

The heart of any plan of reunion is its proposals relative to the ministry of the Church. This is particularly true when such a plan would bridge the differences between the episcopal, presbyterial or congregational philosophy of orders. This was the crux of the proposals we were asked to study relative to the Presbyterian Church, USA. This is the core of the successful solution of the new United Church of South India.

Therefore any book of stature in the realm of the ministry may assume importance in the ecumenical context of Christian life today. Such a book appeared in England last year. It was entitled "The Apostolic Ministry." A distinguished group of Anglican Churchmen contributed essays to this volume, under the leadership of the Bishop of Oxford. The scholarly reputation and the intellectual probity of its authors led many to immediate paens of praise on both sides of the Atlantic.

But the vantage point of this book was rigidly anglo-catholic. It defended the belief that theologically and historically the ministry embodied in the historic episcopate is derived from the apostles and is "endowed with grace and authority from on high"; and that only those who already by being in this office possess this supernatural blessing can ever convey it to others. Further, this "essential ministry," to use the book's omnipresent phrase, is of the "esse" of the Church. Writes the Bishop of Oxford, "Priority, theological if not historical, must be assigned either to the ministry or to the Church; one must be derivative from another . . . the writers of this book if forced into the dilemma, would find themselves obliged to assign independence and therefore priority to the ministry." (Page 30, "The Apostolic Ministry.")

Which rendered in simpler English means that the Church of God is dependent upon a certain conception and type of ministry for its continuing being. A certain type of ministry is all essential to the Gospel, rather than the Church.

What of Other Ministries?

Charitable as the book is verbally to other ministries, it is clearly a defense of reordination and assimilation as the only possible methods of Christian unity. There can be no correlation, even temporarily between this episcopal ministry and other non-episcopal orders. Non-episcopal orders may be spiritually helpful, but they lack due qualifications for the work they claim to do.

Let not the laity think this is an abstruse theological point, to be argued over by the clergy. For right at this point is the great divide in respect to all approaches to Christian unity. Those who hold to this doctrine of the ministry never will agree to any plan, proposal or arrangement looking towards Christian unity with any other Protestant body unless it frankly provides for reordination. Since this demands that those uniting with us deny the validity of their own spiritual ministry, the road to reunion is effectively blocked.

Lest this be thought to be an over-dramatic statement, consider a recently issued circular signed by two Anglo-catholic priests of the Church of England asking the clergy to arrange services of the Holy Communion in their parishes as part of "a concerted act of reparation" for the harm done to "the cause of Christ" by the recent formation of the United Church of South India!

"The Ministry of the Church"

Many reading "The Apostolic Ministry" will feel inclined to reject this pattern of the ministry and the Church dangling from it, yet will be awed by the weight of apparent evidence adduced. Such will find help in reaching an objective position in a series of detailed reviews of "The Apostolic Ministry" written by scholars of equal repute, first printed in "The Record," a newspaper of the Church of England, and now issued in pamphlet form under the title, "The Ministry of the Church." (Canterbury Press, 33 Ludgate Hill, London, E. C. 4, England, two shillings). One of the contributors is Dr. F. W. Dillistone of our own Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Massachusetts. Because it is not likely that this pamphlet will have large circulation in America, we would like to quote at some length from the introductory "General Survey" by Bishop Stephen Neil of Cambridge. Writes the Bishop:

"The writers (of 'The Apostolic Ministry') take a common standpoint and have planned their whole work in defence of a certain attitude towards the Church and its ministry. Throughout the reader has the disturbing feeling that the conclusions were reached before the evidence was considered, that a certain structure of thought has been imposed on the facts, rather than deduced from them." (Page 8).

"I find myself left with an uncomfortable feeling that, in spite of the elaboration of these chapters, the writers are making things a great deal simpler than they really are. There are so many things we should like to know which we do not know, and about which it is only fair to admit our ignorance." (Page 11).

"The central chapter in the book and that which both contains the largest amount of new material and is most likely to provoke controversy is the chapter by Dom Gregory Dix on 'The Ministry in the Early Church.' . . . Dom Gregory writes as though no use of these (Jewish) sources had been made by English scholars in recent times. In this, he is not correct. . . . But here more than anywheres else let us be scrupulous in making the distinction between what is certain, what is probable, and what is merely conjectural. Unfortunately, this is a distinction which Dom Gregory . . . is always inclined to forget. All his writings reveal the same tendency to mistake inference for evidence, and possibility for certainty. . . . Dom Gregory will state alternate views and come down on the side of that which he regards as the more probable. A few pages later, this probability is re-stated as a certainty, and some further inference is built upon it. Then that inference is itself treated as certain and something else is erected upon it!" (Pages 12-15).

"But what I miss still more is any frank recognition by the writers of 'The Apostolic Ministry' that the Church of England is one of those Churches which is committed by its official documents to the doctrine of justification by faith only. The statement of Article XI 'Of the Justification of Man' is unequivocal. . . . No statement of Anglican doctrine which tends to gloss over or disregard this fact can be accepted as true to history or to the tradition of our Church." (Page 20).

Previous Co-existence

In writing of the Anglican position towards non-episcopal orders, Bishop Neil states that the co-existence of two types of the ministry, episcopal and non-episcopal, is not an innovation in Anglicanism, though it is so treated in "The Apostolic Ministry." Bishop Neil refers to the situation in Scotland in 1661, following the restoration of episcopacy there, when Archbishop Leighton said, "Episcopacy doth not re-ordain those whom presbytery hath already ordained." Again, in the Anglican Mission in India, bishops were lacking for over two centuries, during which time most of the missionaries maintained by the S P G were in German or Danish Lutheran orders. When the first Bishop arrived in 1813, these ministers whose orders derived from Lutheran sources were not reordained.

Following Bishop Neil's survey, an eminent group of scholars answer in detail the assumptions and arguments of "The Apostolic Ministry," and suggest a more central interpretation of the Anglican position. In brief, this is that the Church stands prior to the ministry; that the only necessary outward condition of a valid ministry is the solemn commission of the Church through those appointed by it to ordain; that episcopacy has existed since early times, and is therefore to be "continued and reverently used and esteemed" among us, but it must never become mediaeval prelacy. "The view of the ministry set forth by the writers of 'The Apostolic Ministry' may be the right one," said one critic, "but if so, it is one which was not accepted in the Anglican Communion before the beginnings of the Tractarian or Anglo- Catholic Movement in the middle of the 19th Century."

Bishop Neil's final paragraph takes us to the heart of the controversy: "Every question of Church order or practice resolves itself ultimately into a question of theology. We have seen the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Our apprehension of that glory is no doubt dim, but it is the only criterion we have. Of every theological doctrine or proposition, we have to ask whether it corresponds to the character of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. If we feel ourselves bound in honesty to answer that it does not, then, however plausible the argument, however attractive the conclusion, we are bound to reject them with an uncompromising No! Those of us who reject the doctrine of Church and ministry set forth in "The Apostolic Ministry" reject it, not on grounds of minute differences on points of archaeological interpretation, but because we cannot recognize as Christian the doctrine of God which seems to underlie this imposing theological edifice.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

BE STRONG IN THE LORD. By William T. Manning. Morehouse-Gorham. $2.50.

The retired bishop of New York has published twenty-five of his most outstanding sermons covering the period from 1921 to 1946. While primarily of historical and human interest, they are good sermons on many different subjects. There is his famous "Marriage and Divorce" sermon of 1923, which Judge Lindsay disliked. There is his treatment of the "World Conference on Faith and Order" in 1927. The Bible, race relations, the episcopate, the cathedral, and many other topics are presented.

THE PASTOR AND THE CHILDREN. By Mildred Moody Eakin and Frank Eakin. Macmillan. $2.00.

The recent suggestions that the pastor is responsible for the educational program of his church which have appeared in various books and periodicals are underscored by the Eakins in their recent book of advice to pastors. The minister can know his children, master educational methods, and supervise the entire educational program; but he needs help unless he has had modern seminary training in education. This book will bring the rector up to date on what to do and how to do it.

A HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN THOUGHT. VOLUME II. By O. W. Heick and J. L. Neve. Muhlenberg Press. $3.50.

The second volume of this fine history of Christian thought deals with the period from the Reformation to the present day and is almost the only volume of its kind. It begins with Calixtus, and then covers the Arminians, the "Inner Light" groups, the English Deists, the French Naturalists, the German Rationalists, the Unitarians, Kant, Schleiermacher, Hegel, the Confessional Theology, the Ritschlians, the Barthian theology, neo-Lutheranism, the Lundensians, the development of theology in Great Britain including Coleridge, the Oxford Movement, and the various theological movements of the twentieth century, and a final seven chapters on Theological Thought in America. It is remarkably comprehensive in its treatment, and is an invaluable source-book for anyone interested in this whole great period. It is also a one-sided treatment, for every theologian is presented in the light of what Luther would think; and rather than examine a position on its merits, there is always the simple question of whether it is consistent with the Biblical Reformation tradition.

A NEW YEAR

Baron Von Hugel was accustomed to distinguish "clock time" from the concept of timeless eternity. We know full well that the New Year marks merely an artificial division; but, none the less, with us all there is the consciousness that we are entering upon a new and significant voyage on the ship "1948", and we cannot help but wonder what God has in store for us in this unknown future. The New Year at least marks a point when most of us look back and forward.

It is in this spirit and mood that I write of our Church, for I keep dreaming dreams and seeing visions of what we might accomplish in the year to come.

The times indeed are evil, take it by and large. There can be no use in denying that. But in spite of that fact or, perhaps, because of it, I sense a new spiritual and moral earnestness. It is my deep conviction that not in many years have there been so many people eager to find and to know the deep sources of strength and of power which can alone make possible a better day, not only for individuals but for the entire world. The Rev. John Magee told a number of us that the word crisis when translated into Chinese calls for two words—danger, opportunity. We stress, naturally, the danger but we must not forget the aspect of opportunity. It is not enough to condemn the world. That is an easy matter. We must realize that God sent His Son that the world may be saved.

The Christian Church is almost two thousand years old. We must beware of the ruts of conventionality and of formalism. We must avoid the feeling that our task is simply to keep the ecclesiastical machinery in operation. We must keep our minds and hearts open to the leadership of the Spirit of God. Christianity is not at the best a machine, but a living fire of consecration and of purpose.

Our greatest service to the world is in the faithful performance of the duties and opportunities which are at hand. The only way to make the Church effective is not by the issuing of general statements, but by a revelation of the power of the Spirit of God in the worship and work of every parish. 1948 is bound to be a momentous year in woe or in weal. Tremendous issues are at stake. What are we to be and to do in the Service of God in Christ?

I wish for you all a New Year happy in the service of Him who said Be of good cheer. I have overcome the world.

Editor's Note: The above was written for the year 1940 by the Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, D. D., then Bishop of Massachusetts—We have taken the liberty of changing the year dates.

THE STAR

Epiphanytide is a season of "light". It is a season when we see the manifestation of the activity of Jesus Christ. As some one said, the coming of Christ was God's first missionary journey into the world.

As we think of the missionary emphasis of this season of "light" we should plan to act. Too often we neglect to utilize the true value of this season. The "Feast of Lights" services sponsored by many of our youth groups have done much to teach the meaning of this tide.

There are two movies which might be mentioned here. "The Road We Walk" is an excellent one telling of the needs and showing constructive work of our Church World Service Program. It is important for us to continue to see these needs portrayed. One woman who saw "Seeds of Destiny" commented that she could not sleep afterwards. It is that vivid.

The other movie is "Beyond Our Own". This is a story of two brothers and their life's adventures. It is a film keyed to the 1948 theme, "World-wide Evangelism". It is well produced and dramatically presented. It is a film that the whole family would enjoy. It is the first theatrical quality film to be produced through the cooperative efforts of the Protestant Churches. Try to arrange to have it perhaps at your Parish Meeting.

Today there are so many wonderful teaching aids. We must be aware of them and use them properly. These two films will do much to help you to teach and to carry out your teaching. After showing them, have a discussion and an immediate follow up project. Too often we catch the spark but let it grow dim and flicker out. We must be prepared as leaders, teachers and parents to kindle the flame and do our task.

"O Jesus, while the star of grace
Impels us on to seek Thy face
Let not our slothful hearts refuse
The guidance of Thy light to use."

THE COLLECT FOR THE DAY

At this point the Communion Service changes from what might be called a "fixed feast" to a "movable feast." In other words, it merges into the Christian year. This arrangement is of much more ancient origin than the preceding service, for the use of a collect, epistle and gospel dates back to the Sacramentary of Gelasius in the year 494 A. D., and probably was in use much earlier than that.

We shall discuss more in detail these prayers and portions of Scripture when we come to them in their regular order in the Book of Common Prayer, so that here they will be dealt with only in a general way. According to Evan Daniel in his excellent book, The Prayer Book, Its History, Language, and Contents, there are five essentials to a collect that distinguish it from a prayer; first it is addressed to God with some mention of His glorious attributes; second, the ground upon which we are encouraged to offer up the petition; third, the petition itself; fourth, the object for which the petition is preferred; fifth, the pleading of Christ's merits.

According to the same authority "In early times the Office of Holy Communion was contained in four separate volumes, viz.: the Epistolarium, containing the Epistles; the Evangelistarium, containing the Gospels; the Gradual, containing the Anthems; and the Sacramentarium, containing the fixed part of the service and the Collects. These were subsequently combined into one volume, called the Missal."

The collects as contained in our present Prayer Book are of very ancient origin, and for the most part have come down to us from pre-reformation days and are still found with slight variations in phraseology in the Roman Catholic Missal, and in service books of the Lutheran Church.

The post reformation collects are those for the first three Sundays in Advent, Christmas Day, the Sixth Sunday after Epiphany, Quinquagesime, Ash Wednesday, the First Sunday in Lent, Easter Even, First and Second Sundays after Easter, and the Feasts of SS. Stephen, Philip and James, Luke, Andrew, Thomas, Matthias, Mark, Barnabas, John Baptist, Peter, Matthew, Simon and Jude, and All Saints, and some that are only found in our American Prayer Book, such as the Feast of the Transfiguration, Independence Day, and Thanksgiving Day.

PLANS FOR CONGRESS SERVICE AT CATHEDRAL COMPLETED

What the Christian religion has to say to the lawmakers of the United States in 1948 will be the theme of the sermon to be preached by Dr. Clark G. Kuebler at the special service being held at 11 A. M. Sunday (Jan. 11) in Washington Cathedral for members of the Eightieth Congress. Dr. Kuebler, who is president of Ripon College in Wisconsin, is an outstanding churchman and speaker.

The Congressional service will be conducted by the dean of the cathedral, the Very Rev. John Wallace Suter, assisted by other members of the clergy staff.

Among the special prayers to be offered will be a Litany for the Nation written by the Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, former dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York.

Dr. Kuebler became president of Ripon College in 1943. He had previously taught at Northwestern University, where he also served as head of the University Tutorial Program, on the General Faculty Committee, and as student adviser. He is a graduate of Northwestern, class of 1930, and has done graduate work at Princeton and at the University of Munish, taking the Ph. D. degree at the University of Chicago, where he also did part-time teaching.

For the past several years Dr. Kuebler has lectured in various parts of the country on education, problems of democracy, international affairs, current events, and religion. Much of this activity grew out of nine visits to Europe, during the course of which he became increasingly interested in the preservation and further growth of traditional American institutions and systems, especially the relation of education and Christianity to this purpose.

Members of the Congress will be seated in a special section of the Cathedral for teh service. Reservations have been received from 300 Senators, Representatives, and members of their families and staffs.

PROTESTANT CHURCH CONVOCATION JANUARY 13

Atlanta, Ga.—Twenty-five Protestant church leaders, including clergymen, laymen, and laywomen, representing ten Southeastern states, fourteen separate denominations, and several inter-denominational councils of churches met in Atlanta on October 21 and formulated plans for an inclusive Protestant Church Convocation to be held in Atlanta on January 13 to 15, 1948.

These leaders agreed among themselves upon the urgent need for increased spiritual stimulus and a united, practical approach to the serious personal and social questions in which center the dominant issues of present day life. Under the chairmanship of Dr. John M. Alexander, of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., these churchmen issued a call for one thousand to fifteen hundred chosen delegates from all departments of church life, from councils of churches and ministerial associations, Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and church related colleges and theological seminaries to convene in what they described would be "the most significant church gathering ever to assemble in the Southeast."

They proposed to focus the attention of all Protestant forces upon the distinct moral and religious needs of the time and to address to them in a united voice the full import of the Christian gospel. Their plans envisaged calling upon the services of outstanding religious, educational, and scientific leaders throughout the south, the nation, and some of international repute as speakers and group leaders for the sessions of the Convocation. They agreed upon a schedule by which to secure proportionate, adequate representation from all of the Protestant churches in the region.

The group of churchmen which met in Atlanta consisted of members of the Advisory Committee to the Southeastern Inter-Council Office, inaugurated there the first of this year, under the sponsorship of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the Home Missions Council of North America, and the International Council of Religious Education, all three of whom have agreed to help sponsor the Convocation. This regional office is under the executive direction of Dr. Forrest Cleburne Weir.

As a prelude to the Convocation, the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches, departing from its customary habit of meeting in New York, will hold its bi-monthly meeting in Atlanta on January 13 under the chairmanship of Charles P. Taft.

ST. MATTHEW'S AND CHURCH OF REDEEMER UNITE

Boston, Mass.—St. Matthew's Church, incorporated as a parish in 1816 when it was the first and only church in South Boston, will unite with the Church of the Redeemer, and, as the "Church of St. Matthew and the Redeemer," continue a ministry which is now serving the third generation of some of its parishioners. The church fabric, as of January 1, will become the property of the Albanian Protestant Church. This union of parishes, in line with the principle of strategic consolidation when change of neighborhood warrants it, has been hastened by the retirement through illness of the rector of the Church of the Redeemer, South Boston, the Rev. Frederic S. Armstrong. The Rev. Frank M. Rathbone, rector of St. Matthew's for the past thirty years, will assist in the combined parishes for the first half of 1948, and give, as soon as feasible, full time, instead of part time as heretofore, to his work as diocesan hospital chaplain. The church building of St. Matthew's, now being sold, is the second one erected for the parish that is well on its way to a sesqui-centennial.

PREACHING MISSION TO BE GREAT EXPERIENCE

Richmond, Va.—Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman, Virginius Dabney, Walter R. Bishop, W. Stirling King, J. Joseph May, Carlisle R. Davis, Alex Armour, Stanley P. Reed, and other leading laymen are cooperating with the Richmond Ministerial Union in planning and projecting the eight-day preaching mission scheduled to be held at the Mosque, February 1-8.

Bringing a score of the nation's outstanding lay and ordained speakers here for a combined spiritual and moral offensive, the mission will be the greatest thing of its kind experienced by Richmonders in the past 20 years.

Dr. Freeman and Mr. Dabney are serving with a newspaper advisory committee headed by Overton Jones of The Times-Dispatch. Other members of the committee are: Frank Fuller, chief of the Richmond bureau, the Associated Press; Miss Katherine Warren, of the News Leader; and Matthew Griffith, of The Times-Dispatch .

Mr. Bishop, who is director of public relations of WRVA, heads the radio committee, and the members of his committee are: Irvin Abaloff, manager of WLEE; Allen Phaup, program manager of WMBG, and Richard Velz, program manager of WRNL.

Messrs. May, Davis, Armour and Reed are working out the finances.

A great number of laymen will serve as ushers at the Mosque throughout the week. B. H. Cousins (Virginia Electric and Power Company), and George E. Jones (George E. Jones Auto Top Company) are assisting Dr. A. P. Williams, of Monument Methodist Church, in working out these arrangements. Hundreds of laymen and women will also cover the city in a house-to-house visitation inviting everyone to the meetings.

James R. Sydnor, professor of sacred music at the Union Theological Seminary and the Assembly Training School, is in charge of arrangements for the music and choir participation. Other members of his committee are: Alton Howell, instructor of music in the East End Junior High School, and minister of music at the Ginter Park Presbyterian Church; Mrs. Mary Ann Mathewson-Gray, minister of music at the Centenary Methodist Church; Eugene Bayless, minister of music of the Barton Heights Baptist Church; Charles Craig, organist and choir director, All Saint's Episcopal Church; and James Copeland, minister of music, Ginter Park Baptist Church.

Laymen on the Youth Committee, with the Rev. Robert W. Kirkpatrick, chairman, are: R. E. Bridgman, and Billy Barker, editor of Youth Page of the News Leader. Clergymen in this group are: the Rev. Messrs. Reno S. Harp, Jr., of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church; Byron N. Wilkinson, Grove Avenue Baptist Church; L. W. Boynton, of Hanover Christian Church; and Murril S. Heinz, of Church of the Brethren.

PROJECT OF MINISTERIAL UNION

Richmond, Va.—No expense is being spared to bring the best leadership to Richmond for the eight-day Preaching Mission February 1-8, according to J. Joseph May, vice-president of the Bank of Virginia, who is heading a committee of laymen directing financial arrangements.

To provide for advance financing of the preliminary planning phase, many churches are contributing to expenses.

Working with Mr. May are: Carlisle R. Davis, vice-president of State-Planters Bank and Trust Company; Alex Armour, partner in the firm of Davenport & Company, and Stanley P. Reed, secretary treasurer of the Wilson Paper Box Company.

This project of the Ministerial Union, in which the Virginia Council of Churches and other inter-denominational organizations are assisting, will bring to the city eighteen or more nationally known lay and ordained speakers. The Mosque will be the center for programs twice daily, and the speakers will also appear before noon-day gatherings in various parts of the city.

DOOR-TO-DOOR VISITATION

Richmond, Va.—Plans for a complete door-to-door visitation by laymen and women of the churches of the city have been announced by the Rev. Robert Lee House, chairman of a special committee of the Richmond Ministerial Union. This visitation will precede the 8-day Preaching Mission at the Mosque February 1-8. Every family will be invited personally in this way.

Working with the Rev. Mr. House are: Dr. M. Jackson White, of Woodland Heights Baptist Church, for the Southside area; Dr. James H. Ivey, of the Second Baptist Church, for the Central area; the Rev. Rufus J. Womble, of Epiphany Episcopal Church, for the Northside; and the Rev. Frank L. Baker, Jr., of the Fairmount Methodist Church, for the East End. The Rev. Mr. House will direct activities in the West End.

MR. G. B. CRAIGHILL, SR., APPOINTED CHANCELLOR

Washington, D. C.—The appointment of Mr. G. Bowdoin Craighill, Sr., as chancellor of the Diocese of Washington was announced today by the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, bishop of Washington. The appointment has been approved by the Standing Committee of the diocese and is subject to ratification by the Diocesan Convention, which will be held in May.

Mr. Craighill was born in Bel Air, Md., but has lived in Washington most of his life. His father, James Brown Craighill, was the first minor canon of the Washington Cathedral and in this capacity conducted daily services in the sanctuary at St. Alban's School before the school was opened or the Cathedral built.

A member of the law firm of McKenney, Flannery and Craighill, Mr. Craighill has served as general counsel for the Washington Cathedral for many years and is a communicant of Christ Church, Georgetown, where he takes an active interest in the life of the parish and acts in an advisory capacity for many parish undertakings.

He is a graduate of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., and of Georgetown University Law School. He is a Mason, a member of the Rotary Club and the American Bar Association.

The chancellor of the diocese acts as legal advisor of the bishop and of the Standing Committee and other committees of the Convention.

SOCIETY OF COLLEGE WORK ELECTS DR. KOLB PRESIDENT

The Rev. J. Clemens Kolb, chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania, was elected president of the Church Society for College Work, at the meeting of the Board of Directors, held in New York, December 1. A large number of directors were present headed by the Presiding Bishop. Dr. Kolb succeeds the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of St. John's Church, Washington, who retired January 1, 1948, having served his term as president. The Society is extremely fortunate in having a clergyman of Dr. Kolb's experience to lead it.

Dr. Kolb is a graduate of Harvard University and the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, and was rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Matapan, Massachusetts, from 1930 to 1941, where he had a chance to observe the annual exodus of college students from their home parish. He was elected chaplain to Episcopal students at the University of Pennsylvania in 1940, an appointment which he declined. In 1941, he was elected the University chaplain, in charge of the religious work of the entire University, the position which was held by Bishop Bayne at Columbia University and which Bishop Aldrich now holds at Princeton, and Dr. Grant Noble at Williams College. Dr. A. L. Kinsolving, Dr. Charles Cadian and the Rev. Jesse Trotter held successively a similar chaplaincy to the entire student body at Amherst College.

Dr. Kolb is also the Boardman Lecturer on Christian Ethics at the University. This also is a coming development in Christian work in the universities. The Rev. Gray Blandy holds a similar new position at the University of Texas.

Dr. William H. DuBarry, executive vice-president of the University of Pennsylvania, was elected treasurer, succeeding Mr. E. R. Finkenstaedt, of Washington. New directors are: Dr. G. Keith Funston, president of Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, and the Rev. Frederic B. Kellogg, Episcopal chaplain at Harvard University.

With the resignation of Mr. Donald M. Wright, as executive secretary, the Society is looking for a clergyman or layman to be executive vice-president under Dr. Kolb's direction. The business office of the Society will remain at 821 Sixteenth Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Dr. Kolb's address is Houston Hall, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 4, Pa., the city where the Society was originally incorporated. Letters may be addressed to either place.

CLERGY WIVES TAKE COURSES

Sewanee, Tenn.—A series of courses to acquaint the wives of future clergymen with the part which they will play in their husbands' work has been started at Sewanee under the direction of the Dean and faculty of the School of Theology. Weekly lectures are planned on the organization, the activities and the teaching of the Episcopal Church.

The courses will continue for three years, which period corresponds to the time required for the seminarians, half of whom are married, to complete their work at St. Luke's. This semester two courses are being offered. The first course this year is being led by Mrs. Robert M. Grant, wife of the Associate Professor of New Testament Language and Interpretation and concerns women's activities and organizations in the Church. Dean Robert F. Gibson, Jr., led on "Why there are organizations in the Church." Mrs. R. W. B. Elliott discussed the Women's Auxiliary, its national organization, and the United Thank Offering. Mrs. Bayard H. Jones discussed the local organization of the Women's Auxiliary, Mrs. Edward McCurdy led on the Altar Guild. Three other lectures for this semester: Practical Altar Guild Training led by Mrs. Hugh McKee and Mr. John Benton, a seminarian and sacristan of St. Luke's Chapel; the general theory of Religious Education, the cradle role, the nursery, and the visual educational aids will be discussed; and on January 28 the discussion of the Religious Education program will be continued. The second course, the Churchmanship, including preparation for confirmation and grounding in general church teaching is offered under the leadership of Dr. Bayard H. Jones, professor of Ecclesiastical History.

The classes meet alternately every Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Grant and in the St. Luke's Hall Common Room. Courses in other fields of religious study are planned for the second semester and the following years of the three year curriculum.

The courses were organized through the need which the married students' wives felt for a better understanding of their husbands' work. The aid which a clergyman's wife can offer her husband's work is probably greater than it is in any other calling.

CHURCH HAS INFINITE NUMBER OF JOBS OPEN

The only doctor within a radius of hundreds of miles! What an opportunity for service! That is the dream of many young medical students—particularly of young women who want to find a niche in the world of medicine where their services will fulfill a vital need in the community.

In Fort Yukon, Alaska, the only doctor is surgeon, X-ray technician, hospital superintendent, and pubilc health officer.

That doctor is a woman!

Dr. Lula M. Disosway runs Fort Yukon's forty-bed Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital. She is the only doctor for hundreds of miles around. With four white nurses and trained native aides, she mends broken bodies and cares for the sick and dying.

Fort Yukon Indians have come to depend on the hospital staff not only as healers of their bodies, but also as shepherds of their daily lives. While the Indians are being treated they often ask the dotor or nurses questions about God and the Church. It is not a one-way ministry, though, for frequently the natives come to the aid of the hospital staff with their prayers. Such examples of faith are an inspiration to missionary doctors and a reward far more gratifying than a fee.

The medical mission field is just one that offers rewarding opportunities. The Church has an infinite number of jobs that must be filled by professional women. Both at home and abroad, there is urgent need for well-trained social workers, evangelists, religious education directors, college workers, parish assistants and directors, and teachers in Church-sponsored schools.

This partial list gives some idea of the scope of opportunity for women in the Church today. In the United States women are urgently needed for service in the cities, towns, and isolated villages of the mountains and wide western plains. There are jobs to be filled, but not enough applicants.

If there is to be a strong, efficient body of professional women in the Church, the right kind of young women must be informed that there is a place for them. One of the best points at which to reach them is the parish. There the rector and the lay leaders are able to observe closely the young people who are potential professional Church workers.

What qualities should they look for in the young women of the parish? Religious devotion is, of course, a necessary prerequisite, but it is not the only one. To be successful in her chosen profession a Church worker must have self-confidence; she must like people, and she must possess a magnetic personality. She must be an organizer and a leader.

If a girl is physically and mentally healthy, magnetic, self-sufficient, and devout, she has the background for work in the Church. Since the Church needs professionally trained workers, one of the first requirements a candidate should complete is a full college course ending with a bachelor's degree. With that foundation she should take two years of graduate study, which should combine the study of "religious content" material (such as the Old and New Testament, Theology, the Prayer Book, etc.) with special study (including methods and technique) appropriate to some type of work, such as social science, psychology, education, personnel counseling, etc.

Graduate study ought to include provision for practical experience or clinical training under careful supervision in keeping with the highest modern standards. Continuation of such supervision during the first year of work is recommended.

There are currently vacancies in the Church for a variety of professional women. For example, English, history, science and mathematics teachers are needed in the Brent School for foreign and missionary children in Baguio, P. I. St. Faith's School, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., requires a mathematics and a physical education instructor.

Many domestic and foreign hospitals are understaffed. The Hospital of the Good Shepherd, New Bern, N. C., the only Negro hospital in the region, has an opening for a Negro supervisor of nurses. A nurse is needed at St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce, Puerto Rico.

There are positions for directors of Christian education in two southern dioceses and one large mid-west city. Directors of Church School by Mail are needed to call on the people in isolated Montana and Nebraska farms and ranches, where the inhabitants' only contact with the Church is through the Church School lessons received by post.

BERKELEY DIVINITY ELECTS REV. ELMER J. COOK TO PROFESSORSHIP

New Haven, Conn.—Dean Percy L. Urban has announced the election, as Professor of the Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament in the Berkeley Divinity School, of the Rev. Elmer Jay Cook, Ph. D., at present Professor of New Testament in the Hartford Theological Seminary and Librarian of the Hartford Seminary Foundation. He has accepted the election and will take up residence July 1, 1948.

Dr. Cook was born at Howell, Michigan, August 20, 1901. He is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College and the Hartford Theological Seminary. In addition to the usual college and seminary degrees, he holds the degrees of B. Litt. from Oxford University, Ph. D., from the Hartford Theological Seminary, and B. S. in Library Science from Columbia University. He has been a member of the Hartford Seminary Faculty since 1936. Since his ordination to the ministry of the Episcopal Church, Dr. Cook has been active in the affairs of the Diocese of Connecticut. He has been a member of the staff of Christ Church Cathedral, Hartford, and most recently Assistant Minister at St. John's Church, West Hartford. He is a member of the Board of Examining Chaplains of the diocese and was formerly a member of the Standing Committee.

CHRISTMAS AT TRINITY CATHEDRAL

Phoenix, Ariz.—The 1947 observance of the birth of the Prince of Peace was a noteworthy event in the annals of Trinity Cathedral. There were two services on Christmas Eve—a service of Lessons and Carols in a candle-lighted church together with a Meditation by Bishop Kinsolving; a midnight Celebration of the Holy Communion and Meditation by Dean Carman. Each of these services was met with throngs of worshippers, many of whom could not gain admittance, necessitating overflow services. Again on Christmas Day there were two well-attended services of the Holy Communion, at the latter of which Bishop Kinsolving was the Celebrant and the Preacher.

The attendance at these observances are potent indications of the substantial growth and influence of Trinity Cathedral in the See City of the Missionary District of Arizona. The offerings and pledges of the congregation for the year 1948 are in excess of $50,000, an all-time record. No small amount of credit for this is due to a thorough-going Every Member Canvass under the aegis of Dean Carman.

PART OF NATION-WIDE PROGRAM

Boston, Mass.—As part of the nation-wide program initiated by Presiding Bishop Sherrill and the National Council, the clergy of the diocese met on December 1 in St. Paul's Cathedral for a morning of meditations and devotions led by the Rev. Dr. Frederick W. Dillistone, of the Episcopal Theological School faculty; a noon-day address by the Rev. Philip B. Clayton of All Hallows' Church, London, and founder of Toc H.; a luncheon, followed by addresses on "Evangelism in the Diocese of Massachusetts," given by the Rev. Dr. Theodore P. Ferris, of Trinity Church, the Rev. George Keirstead of North Easton, and the Rev. Paul Wessinger, S. S. J. E., representatives of urban and rural parishes and varying types of churchmanship.

The Massachusetts Clerican Association, whose luncheon meeting it was, co-operated in this effort, a preliminary to the training of the laity in Epiphany and the Corporate Communion of the whole Church on the first Sunday in Lent.

REV. C. E. HUNTINGTON SUCCEEDED BY REV. LEON LAYLOR

Phoenix, Ariz.—The Rev. Charles E. Huntington, chaplain at St. Luke's-in-the-Desert, Tucson, and pastor to the Health Seekers of Pima County, Arizona, has announced his intention to retire from the active ministry as of January 1, 1948. Mr. Huntington has contributed a noble and successful effort in carrying the healing ministry of the Church, during the past nineteen years, to the sick and infirm in Tucson and environs. When he undertook this ministry there was only one priest in Pima County. In 1929 Mr. Huntington reported having made over 1,500 calls on the sick in addition to his ministrations at St. Luke's. Last year he reported over 2,500 visitations. He and Mrs. Huntington will continue to reside at the Chaplain's House at St. Luke's. The work of ministering to the sick will be carried on by the clergy of whom there are six in Tucson.

Succeeding Mr. Huntington as chaplain at St. Luke's will be the Rev. Leon Neff Laylor, formerly Canon at Trinity Cathedral, Newark, N. J. Mr. Laylor will also be chaplain at the Episcopal Student Center at the University of Arizona.

REV. J. W. KENNEDY TO PREACH IN EUROPE

Lexington, Ky.—The Rev. James W. Kennedy, rector of Christ Church, has been chosen as one of twelve American clergymen who will preach next summer in England, Scotland and France under the auspices of a joint committee of the World Alliance for International Friendship, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the Church Peace Union.

Twelve clergymen will be sent from Britain to preach in this country under the auspices of the British Council of Churches.

The vestry of Christ Church has granted Mr. Kennedy a leave of absence to accept the appointment.

Mr. Kennedy will be accompanied by Mrs. Kennedy. They will sail from New York the latter part of June and will return early in September. During his absence, the parish will be in charge of the Rev. Donald W. Crawford, newly appointed director of religious education and assistant rector. Mr. Crawford and his family will move to Lexington in January.

Mr. Kennedy was a former rector of All Saints Church, Richmond, Va., and is a weekly contributor to the Southern Churchman.

U. T. O. PRESENTATION

San Antonio, Texas.—The fall presentation of the United Thank Offering of the Women of St. Mark's Church, the Rev. J. Wilson Hunter, rector, was made on the Second Sunday in Advent. Two of the Servers' Guild in their white vestments bore to the Altar just ahead of the vestrymen and their offerings, a large reproduction of the "little blue box" in which the offerings had been placed. When counted the amount was found to be the largest ever presented here at any one time—$652.96 (with more to come), making the total for 1947, $1,224.43.

The Advent class presented to Bishop Jones for confirmation by the Rev. J. Wilson Hunter, rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, and bishop-coadjutor-elect of the Missionary District of Wyoming, brought the number confirmed during 1947 to 140. There were 175 presented by Mr. Hunter during 1946, a total of 315 for his two years of rectorship.

DEATHS

MRS. JOHN J. GRAVATT

Mrs. Helen Stevens Gravatt, wife of the Rt. Rev. John J. Gravatt, bishop of Upper South Carolina, died in her sleep early the morning of December 17 at the Bishop's Residence, Columbia, S. C.

Mrs. Gravatt had been in ill health recently but her condition had apparently shown some improvement and her death was unexpected.

She was born June 23, 1883, in Fort Wayne, Indiana, the daughter of G. W. Stevens and Virginia (Wilson) Stevens, and lived for many years in Richmond, Virginia, where her father was President of the C. & O. Railroad.

She is survived by her husband, Bishop John J. Gravatt; a daughter, Helen; a brother, Cecil W. Stevens, of Virginia Beach, Virginia, and several nieces and nephews.

The funeral service was held in Trinity Church, Columbia, by the rector, the Rev. Louis C. Melcher, assisted by the Rev. A. C. Branwell Bennett, president of the Standing Committee; the Rev. B. Duvall Chambers, and the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell, bishop of Georgia. Interment was in Trinity Churchyard.

A WARNING

A. Robert Valenzuela has presented himself to several rectors of our church in the east, claiming to be a member of St. Mark's, San Antonio, and also claiming to have known me for years. He further claims that his mother has been the organist at St. Mark's. He then asks for money to help him get back to San Antonio, where, he says, his mother has just died. There is no truth in these statements. I do not know him or any of his family.

I wondered if you could place a warning in an issue of the Southern Churchman in order that any future ones that he may approach will be on their guard.

"THE BISHOP'S WIFE"

Sir: Having recently had the opportunity to preview the newest Sam Goldwyn picture:: "The Bishop's Wife," I should like to commend it to your readers and to take exception to the review of it published in The Southern Churchman in Reviews and Ratings of Current Films (Dec. 13, 1947) by the Protestant Motion Picture Council.

"The Bishop's Wife" is a Christmas treat of the first quality. The bishop in the story is pretty obviously the bishop of New York, and he is thoroughly Episcopalian. Acting and direction, and the whole technical side of production are expertly handled.

"The Bishop's Wife" is surely as deserving of an Academy Award as was "Going My Way," and you will find it just as entertaining. Therefore it seems too bad that the Protestant Motion Picture Council is only lukewarm in its praise, pointing out that one of the miracles wrought by the angel is the continual replenishment of a wine bottle. Surely this is rather similar to one of the miracles Jesus Himself wrought at Cana of Galilee. It is too bad that, when a producer goes all out to give us a picture so well done and so entertaining, the Council cannot be more enthusiastic. Hollywood dearly wants to produce pictures the public will like, but the only way the producers know is by the evidence of our letters and our box-office admissions. When a picture like "Going My Way" appears, Roman Catholics go all out in its support, which is just what they should do. When a picture like "The Bishop's Wife" appears, not only Episcopalians, but all Protestants as well ought equally to support it. Only in this way will we have later pictures of the same qualiy.

ONE OLD MAN MADE HAPPIER

Dear Aunt E.:

Happy Christmas to you, especially as you have made Herr Moller's very happy indeed with the overcoat—the brown one. Unfortunately I cannot write as legibly as he does—but, by gosh, neither can you!

Anyhow, he is about 70 years old and had no overcoat, so you can imagine what a new look things now take on for him. He also has two sisters older than he—one of them a chronic invalid who is expected to die, but so far has not done so. She does not suffer, but is weak, cold, hungry and feeble. None of the poorer people in Berlin get enough to eat. Very few have anything but a few sticks to burn in their stove—if they have a stove. And last winter the temperature stayed below freezing for two and one-half months. If they also don't have an overcoat or its equivalent in warm clothes, or lots of blankets, they freeze to death in their sleep, as quite a few of them did. So you may have saved the old boy (Mr. Moller) from going to heaven prematurely. He is very lively for his years—says he walks so fast in order to keep warm, and that is bad for his heart. Now he ought to slow down. The next time I see him I'll ask him to write you a letter.

By the by, in return for some food I gave him the first time I ever saw him, his sisters sent me a Bible. You shall see it when we meet soon again.

But his case is one among hundreds of thousands. I really don't feel so sorry for the middle-aged people as I should, because too many of them are grasping, selfish, dishonest, great pretenders, terrific self-pityers, and inclined to think the world owes them a fine living with-

Second Sunday after The Ephiphany

Almighty and everlasting God, who dost govern all things in heaven and earth; Mercifully hear the supplications of Thy people, and grant us Thy peace all the days of our life; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

"Grant us Thy peace all the days of our life."

Peace is wonderful. Peace between nations, within families, among employers and employees, but above all the kind of peace which releases us from the disturbing conflicts within our own minds and hearts. God's peace comes from faith and is to be found in its fullest expression in Christ. His life was peaceful within though turbulant without, simply because He placed His trust in God. There was never argument within but submission to God's will. When we pray for God's peace we mean we are willing to face all that wars within us and turn it over to God.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Epiphany and Epiphanies

By The REV. G. MACLAREN BRYDON, D. D.

It was in conformity with the driving urge of the Christian faith in its early centuries to reach out into the Gentile world that the Star in the East and the coming of the wise men to Bethlehem should have developed into one of the great outstanding feasts of their worship. It is one of the oldest feasts in the Christian year, older by far than the celebration of December 25th as the birthday of the holy Child Jesus.

The reason of this is not hard to find. Into a world in which every nation had its own gods and its own conceptions of deity and forms of worship a new faith had come and was spreading rapidly: a faith presenting a new conception of God and of man, and announcing as its basic message that their God was the God of the whole earth, and that Jesus was the Saviour of all mankind. The first problem of the Church was to convince the world that the new faith was for all men everywhere; that it transcended all national and racial boundaries in order to reach and to save the men of every race and nation.

In a way in which it might be hard for us of today to understand, that fact had to be emphasized and placed in the forefront of all the Christian teaching: that a Greek or Egyptian or Babylonian had the right to come into the faith of the God of the Jews and worship Him as their own. So the early Christians made much of the wise men who had come from a far country because they had seen a new star. "We have seen his star in the east and are come to worship him." Regardless of what the wise men thought or believed, the story meant to the Christian Church that God Himself had made the announcement to the gentile world. And the early Christians could point back, far back, into the earlier centuries before Christ, to the prophecises of Isaiah recorded in their sacred scriptures, about the Child who was to be born to become a Light to lighten the Gentiles: "The Isles shall wait for His law." "In him shall the Gentiles trust."

This concept, of the outreach of the Christian faith into an unbelieving world, is still and must always be one of the basic thoughts of the Epiphany celebration, and of the whole Epiphany season. To us it means that we must still go out into the far places to carry the Good News of a God and Saviour to nations and tribes which have not yet heard it, and into the dark places of our own and of all lands where He is not yet adequately known and loved.

But it would be as untrue to the fulness of meaning of the Epiphany season to confine its teaching to the one concept of Missions as it would be to confine the meaning of the Advent season to the one thought of preparation for the birth of the Christ-child. The thought of Epiphany must widen out to include all the ways in which Christ was able to manifest His presence and power in individual lives; and all the ways in which God can in every day and generation manifest His presence and power in the lives of all who seek Him. Every story that is told of Our Lord's earthly life and ministry, the healing of the sick, the unstopping of deafened ears and opening of blind eyes, reveal His eager desire to bring down into individual lives the love of God and whatever help was needed. His offer as related by St. Matthew, made to the centurion who asked for the healing of his servant, "I will come and heal him", is wonderfully revealing as showing His eager desire to come into the homes and lives of people in their times of need.

All this is written into our conception of the Epiphany Season. It is not merely the commemoration of one or of many past incidents; it is rather the celebration of the joyous realization that the God Who could and did appear in the lives of humble folk in the person of Jesus Christ, to heal their sicknesses of soul and body and to give them a new conception of the Divine, is still the God Who can come down into human lives today with help and strength in every time of need. So we believe with grateful hearts that every experience through which a human life may be called to go, whether of joy or sorrow, anxiety or fear, can become the scene of a new manifestation of God's presence. To the earnest Christian a case of illness or any crisis or catastrophe which can come into his life may bring an entirely new realization of the meaning of God's presence and power to bless. A Christian family can hardly experience the miracle of the birth of a little child into their midst without a new thought about God and His creative and protective love.

It takes all the experiences that can come into an individual's life to enable him to learn all the ways in which God can manifest His presence. And there is even then that one last manifestation, when the book of life has been closed, and one must go through the last gateway; which we look forward to in the faith that One will be there who said "I have the keys of death and of the unseen world."

NEW CHURCH DEDICATED

Port-au-Prince, Haiti.—Bishop C. Alfred Voegeli, Haiti, has dedicated the new Church building at Grande Riviere de Leogane. More than 1,000 persons attended, and the Bishop commended the architectual construction of the new church, saying, "for all the crush we had plenty of air, and the sun was mighty hot too."

The old church was formally set aside for a parochial school and other parochial activities.

Many people came to the dedication service the night before, and the congregation included most of teh officials of that area, as well as a representative of the President of the Republic of Haiti, M. Boileau Mehu, Prefect of Port-au-Prince. After the dedication the Bishop confirmed a class of young people and adults.

Bishop Voegeli announced also that he has advanced to teh priesthood the Rev. Messrs. Previus Dumervil Gay and Pierre Philippe Jeanty, at St. Thomas' Church, Arcahaie. Mr. Gay works as assistant to the Rev. B. E. Genece on the Island of La Gonave, and Mr. Jeanty assists the Rev. J. S. Lindor at the Church of the Redemption, Leogane.

Reviews and Ratings of Current Films

By the PROTESTANT MOTION PICTURE COUNCIL

Picture of the Month:

BUSH CHRISTMAS

Without any pretense at ambitious production or super-dramatic effects, this charming story of a Christmas vacation spent by five children in the Australian bush is, in our opinion, the best of the month's crop of current motion pictures. The younger members of the family will love it. But so will the adults, so engaging is its story, so natural and unaffected its acting, and so instructional its presentation.

Besides providing excellent entertainment, as filled with suspense as it is lacking in horror, "Bush Christmas" is as good—or almost as good—as a trip to the fascinating back country so well known to thousands of our ex-service men. After you have caught, as background to this lively story, some of the majesty and awesomeness of this "Land Down Under," you can understand why so many of the latter have returned to settle in Australia.

But do not judge by these passing comments that "Bush Christmas" is merely a glossed-up travelogue. The story is the thing. And it has to do with five lively and resourceful youngsters who get lost in the wilds while tracking down some horse thieves. It is Christmas time (which is summer-time in Australia) and they forget the Yule celebrations at home long enough to go gallantly chasing after the thieves on the pretext of going camping.

The adventures and dangers they encounter are related as believably and entertainingly as though they happened to your own children. The children's initiative, self-reliance, good sportsmanship and courage—as well as their fears—are portrayed with a naturalness that is delightful. It goes without saying that the thieves are finally coralled, but not until the story, spiced here and there with laughter-provoking situations, has run its exciting course.

If you saw the famous saga of one of Australia's most spectacular war efforts, "The Overlanders" (reviewed here in March, 1947), you will be gratified to find five of that picture's featured players here. And it has the same capable director, Ralph Smart. J. Arthur Rank, who brings this film to America through Prestige Pictures, is to be congratulated for sponsoring such films. We trust that this is the forerunner of many others as fine and clean and altogether enjoyable. A, Y, C.

C—Children under 12

MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA (RKO). In this modern adaptation by Eugene O'Neill of the ancient Greek tragedy, the secret motives which actuate people's lives reach to the very depth of human character, showing the relationships existing beneath a commonly accepted social exterior. In this case "hate destroys everything and everyone it touches." Its complete portrayal is given in all its relentlessness and horror. The logical outcome of conscience's own punishment is fully explored, and the play's delicate theme is excellently handled. All characterizations are perfect. Both music and photography are excellent. A.

CAPTAIN BOYCOTT (Universal-International). This British-made picture tells us the origin of the word "boycott." In County Mayo, Ireland, in 1880 there was a captain by that name who abused his tenant farmers and, when they resisted, resorted to mass evictions and cruel treatments. How this difficulty is resolved after the rebellious farmers heard Parnell advise passive resistance by ignoring the oppressor rather than taking to mob violence, makes a picture with social importance and historical values. The plot is well integrated, the direction excellent and the photography of the rolling country of West Ireland is outstanding. A, Y.

TO LIVE IN PEACE (Times-Film Corp). An Italian war drama, beautifully done and highly entertaining. The spoken word (in Italian, with English titles) is quite outshone by characterization, facial expression and emotional reactions which anyone can understand. It is the portrayal of what happens to an Italian mountain village when the forces of war take it over. Qualities of compassion are manifested, the recognition of men as brothers—regardless of color or origin—is examplified and the desire to "live in peace" is paramount. A, Y.

NIGHT SONG (RKO). The tragedy of a talented composer-pianist whose life is shattered by blindness is deftly portrayed in this stimulating drama. The love and help given by faithful friends, devoid of either patronizing or pity, are skillfully played by Merle Oberon, Hoagy Carmichael and Ethel Barrymore. Music in a modern mood is dignified by the playing of Artur Rubinstein and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. A, Y.

IF WINTER COMES (MGM). The well-remembered novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson finds a new interpretation in this picture which, while it has a fine cast, does not come up to expectations. Some of the acting gets in the way of the story's dramatic possibilities. A.

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST (Lopert Films, Inc.) This enchanted tale, dear to our childhood, lives again in this beautifully executed film. Transposed to adult level, but retaining the charm of phantasy, it satisfies through its artistic conception, descriptive music and excellent acting. In French, with good English sub-titles. A, Y.

THE EXILE (Universal - International). A dashing story of adventure, written and produced by Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., reminiscent in action and treatment of those made in the past by his famous father. It concerns the years of exile to which Oliver Cromwell consigned Charles II, his encounters with the Roundheads sent to Holland to kill him, the devotion he finds in a humble country woman on whose farm he has found refuge, and his ultimate return to the English throne. A, Y, C.

ROAD TO RIO (Paramount). The Bing Crosby-Bob Hope-Dorothy Lamour trio in a typically hilarious comedy with musical embellishments. The action depicts the escapades of two musicians who have gone broke, stow away on a Rio-bound boat and rescue the rich heiress in distress. A, Y, C.

CAPTAIN FROM CASTILE (20th Century-Fox). An episodic story of Spain and Mexico in the 16th Century, drawn on a grand scale with the help of Technicolor, and taking great liberties with historical facts (especially in relieving the official ecclesiastical authorities of any blame in connection with the Inquisition). Much of the dramatic power of the novel has been sacrificed to cinematic effect and artificial suspense. On the whole, disappointing. A, Y.

SUMMER HOLIDAY (MGM). Based on the play "Ah! Wilderness," this comedy-drama is, on the whole, good entertainment. It has excellent acting (Mickey Roney, Gloria DeHaven, Walter Huston, Frank Morgan are among the distinguished cast), fine music, wholesome family relations in a typical American community, and a happy ending. On the debit side, we would cite an unnecessary drinking contest and the depiction of a boy's inflamed emotions when he meets "life" in its most sordid aspects. That he is cured after this excursion into a world he had no need to enter is good, but it might not be so interpreted by the morbidly curious. This removes the picture from family audience suitability. A.

ESCAPE ME NEVER (Warner). The loyalty of an emotionally driven woman to a no-good music composer is the compelling force of this story with continental and English backgrounds. Unconvincing, and unsuited to family audiences. A.

SONG OF MY HEART (Allied Artists). A sentimental and somewhat juvenile conception of the life of Peter Tchaikowsky. The film is poor in comparison to the magnificent music which carries it, but even that is not always well recorded. A, Y.

GOOD NEWS (MGM). Good-humored college life in the "flapper" era—in which football players are heroes, no serious studying is done, everyone breaks into raucous singing at the least provocation and general bedlam prevails most of the time. We do not know the import of the "god news" except that the singing football star (Peter Lawford) finds in time that the girl for him is studious June Allyson instead of a gold-digger with a flair for the misuse of French. A, Y, C.

PIRATES OF MONTEREY (Universal-International). A story of Southern California when it was part of Mexico, with a slight tinge of history, a touch of romantic rivalry, some duelling, colorful and interesting settings, fiesta atmosphere, adventure and pirates. A, Y, C.

DRIFTWOOD (Republic). Clean and wholesome story showing a young doctor's devotion to humanity, a child's faith in God's care, and the lessons she has learned from her minister great-grandfather. A, Y, C.

TYCOON (RKO). An overdrawn "action" picture in a South American locale where bridge building and tunnel digging are in progress under the hard driving of a "tycoon" whose beautiful daughter falls in love with the engineer directing these enterprises. A, Y.

WILD HORSE MESA (RKO). A rip-roaring Zane Grey Western in which right triumphs after much fighting and hard riding. Rapid action, wild horses, good scenery. A, Y, C.

DANGEROUS YEARS (20th Century-Fox). An earnest attempt to show that divided families, badly administered discipline, lack of love and companionship are incentives to juvenile delinquency. The over-dramatic plot partly defeats this purpose. A, Y.

THE LAST DAYS OF BOOT HILL (Columbia). The "Durango Kid" assists in catching government-mail robbers and helps the "sweet young lady" come into her inheritance. A, Y, C.

SIX GUN LAW (Columbia). The bad man who bosses a prairie town plans to overcome the stainless and durable "Durango Kid," but is defeated and pays the price. A, Y, C.

BIG TOWN AFTER DARK (Paramount), A fast-moving picture building up the public press as a power against gambling and crime. A, Y.

DEVIL SHIP (Columbia). The captain of a small transport vessel, victim of a gangster's frame-up, is finally vindicated after many unpleasant encounters. Some good photography and interesting shots of tuna fishing. A, Y. C.

BLONDIE'S ANNIVERSARY PARTY (Columbia). The Bumsteads go on their complicated and hectic way, raising laughs and providing suspense in a comic fashion through their chronic discomfitures. A, Y, C.

God's Purpose

A Paraphrase of Isaiah 14, Relating it to the Present World Problem

By SISTER PRISCA, C. S. M.

Kemper Hall, Kenosha, Wisconsin

Thou, O GOD, art the Creator, the Ruler; of Thy hand are all things.
Man Thou hast made in Thine image. To him Thou hast given dominion.
Through him Thou workest Thy Purpose—that Purpose which none can turn backward,
None disannul, nor withstand when Thy hand is stretched out, save in seeming
When Thy long-suffering patience waiteth, as in days of Noah.
Thou, Lord, Who in mercy dost chasten, Thou Who still seest in Jacob—(Jacob the heir of the Covenant, yet, fearful, obeying Rebecca;
Jacob, deceiver, supplanter) in him Thou still seest Thy chosen Israel; prince; man of power when to Thy guidance he yieldeth.
Then, humbled, devoid of resources, Jacob his birthright receiveth.
Back to his own land he journeys; brings with him his seed to possess it.
Back to GOD'S good land of promise after the long years of exile;
Back, with his brother's forgiveness.
Now he can claim Abraham's blessing:
In him all kindreds and peoples, strangers who join him in worship,
Who cleave to his SEED, long awaited, as servants and handmaiden's free
In him shall all nations be blessed; in Him shall all peoples find rest.
Babylon, queen of the nations, for her power and wealth much desired:
GOD'S Purpose by her long forgotten, GOD'S glory long trampled in dust.
This proverb they take up against her—against him that weareth her crown:
"How hath the oppressor now ceased! the golden city hath ceased!
Her king is now given to torment; none hindereth the justice of heaven.
The GOD she despised and rejected, the GOD she ignored, laughed to scorn,
Now breaketh the staff of the wicked, the sceptre of rulers and kings
Who ruled o'er the nations in anger unceasing; who smote them in wrath."
The whole earth is resting and quiet; into singing they break forth. Yea,
The fir trees and cedars of Lebanon rejoice at her king, while they say,
"Since thou art laid down we stand safely. Hell riseth to meet thee today!"
The dead are stirred up at his coming, all those who were chief ones of earth.
From their thrones rise the kings of the nations. In hell they greet him, and say,
"Art thou become like unto us? Art thou also become weak as we?
Where now is the noise of thy viols? Thy pomp is brought down to the grave!
The worm is spread out for thy couch; and the worms, as a robe, cover thee."
How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!
How art thou cut down to the ground, who didst weaken the nations by scorning;
Thou, who hast said in thine heart, "I will ascend the heights into heaven.
Above GOD'S stars my own throne I'll exalt; yea, even there will I sit Upon the north side of Mount Zion where all the nations do gather.
Above the heights of the clouds I'll ascend. I will be like the MOST HIGH!"
Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell; be brought down to the sides of the pit.
There shall they look upon thee; those that see thee consider thee, saying,
"Is this the man that shook kingdoms, the man that did make earth to tremble,
That made the world waste, destroyed its cities, released not his prisoners?"
In glory the kings of the nations each one in his own house doth lie;
But thou, an abominable branch, art cast out as a garment defiled,
As a carcase by feet trodden down—down to the stones of the pit.

Thou shalt not be buried with kings because thou hast destroyed thy land.
Thy people were slain by thy hand. Evil deeds keep thy seed from renown.
His children are slain for his sins, lest they rise and inherit the land,
For thus saith the LORD GOD of hosts, "Against Babylon will I arise;
I will cut off both remnant and name, both nephew and son," saith the Lord.
"The bittern its streets shall possess; pools of water for palaces stand.
I will sweep with destruction, make waste!" thus saith the LORD GOD of hosts.
The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, "Surely now will I bring it to pass.
Surely all of My Purpose shall stand; and as I have thought shall it be!
The Assyrian I'll break in My land—underfoot on My mountains tread down.
His yoke shall depart from off them—from their shoulders his burden depart."
On the whole earth this is purposed. On all nations this hand is stretched out.
His Purpose, who shall disannul it? His outstretched hand who turn back?
The WORD eternal hath spoken, revealing the will of the FATHER.
Through Him all things have their being. Through His power all things are sustained.
That WORD comes down through the ages, ever evolving the Purpose divine.
Nations are raised up for that Purpose, then swept with the besom of time.
The rulers of Israel and Egypt, of Babylon, Rome and Japan,
Unwitting, were GOD'S Purpose fulfilling: His will through them being done.
The righteous, who seek Him, live ever: the wicked, resisting, depart.
Are we of all peoples GOD'S chosen, that we in our own power can stand?
Rejoice we, and trust in our riches? 'tis GOD that doth bring things to pass.
Though the rod that smote us is broken, the serpant can slay us at last.
Of yourselves, O Nations United, think not you can bring the world peace, Though by you the Nazi was broken, by you has his yoke been removed.
'Tis but as GOD'S sons we are brothers; 'tis only His service brings peace.
The poor and the needy, the humble, shall feed, and in safety lie down.
The rich, the self-trusting, the greedy, shall by a sore famine be slain.
Captive shall be they who make captives: the servants of those who them serve.
This is the answer, O Nations, that your messengers hasten to bring,
"Return to your GOD all you peoples; own Him your Creator and LORD.
He calls you to love and forbearance; remember, His Purpose is sure!
His hand is stretched out on all kindreds, His Love on all races is shed,
The poor and the needy GOD'S Chosen; His Zion, those who do Him trust.

RECHARGE

There has certainly been at least one time when you went out to start your car on a cold winter morning, and, when you stepped on the starter, the only response you got was a low groan. You probably groaned yourself when you heard that, but you knew what was wrong. The battery was down. Of course, you hadn't expected it, but you needn't have been surprised.

It may not have been the best battery ever made, but it had been in service for a long time, and it had served reasonably well. It had turned the starter over on many a cold morning. It had kept the spark plugs firing regularly for many thousands of miles. It had sent a brilliant beam of light down many a dark highway. And it had sounded many a warning blast upon the horn. All of these things had taken the charge out of it, and they had taken it out faster than the generator could put it back. Finally, it got so low that it just couldn't do any of them any more.

When this happened, you knew there was only one thing to do. You took the battery out of the car and carried it to the garage to be recharged. It may have been an inconvenience, but it was a necessary one—and a profitable one. When the battery had been recharged, you put it back into your car, and it served as well as before.

All of us are more or less like that battery. We go about our daily round of duty, and of pleasure. The constant demands of life, the dull routine and obnoxious duties take a lot out of us. The obligations of social life, and the conventions of "pleasure" build up great nervous tensions. All of them sap our strength. Our patience wears thin, and our nerves become raw. Finally, we feel that we just don't have the strength or courage to face anything any more. There is nothing left in us with which to do anything any more.

When that happens, some of us feel that life is over. However, most of us are wiser than that. We know that all we need is a recharge, and when we get it, we will be as good as ever

To get a recharge, the first thing we need is to get out of ourselves and our job—far enough to face them both objectively and honestly. We need to see, not only what we are doing, but why we are doing it, and what we aim to accomplish. That makes all the difference in the world.

From that point of view, any job takes on a different meaning. For example, washing dishes, or hoeing corn are obnoxious jobs. There is nothing in either of them which could possibly appeal to the imagination of anyone. If, on the other hand, we were convinced that washing dishes, or hoeing corn, were the necessary consequences of giving life to people we love, both jobs would take on an entirely different meaning, and both would become terrifficaly important. They become, not jobs of massaging crockery, or digging dirt, but jobs of creating people.

This applies to any job, whether it be adding a column of figures, filing papers, selling merchandise, or any job whatever. They all add up to the same thing. It isn't the job that counts. It is why we do it, and for whom we do it.

When we see it this way, we know that in everything we do we are sharing with God in His work of creating new life where there was little or none before we went to work. That means also, that we are working with unlimited power. Then, however much may be taken out of us, we can draw on more than enough to replace the loss. We can never be exhausted.

With this knowledge, we have all the "recharge" we can possibly need. We can put the old battery back into our life, and be sure it will supply abundant power for every need.

TORONTO CANON VISITOR TO RICHMOND

Richmond, Va. — Canon Douglas Paterson of the Cathedral in Toronto has been a visitor in Richmond for the past week and has been conducting a School of Evangelism in the Mayo Memorial Church House, besides filling other engagements.

Canon Paterson's deep spiritual message and personal charm have impressed all who have heard him.

The Canon is available for other speaking engagements—his desire is to serve during his stay here.

Annual Parish Meetings

The date of the annual parish meeting varies widely in the Church. Some are held in Advent; others at this time of the year; some on Easter Monday. In all too many cases whenever they are held, they are attended by only a small band of the faithful. Business is transacted in a dull and routine way. Elections are held perfunctorily. The whole occasion bores everyone and offers no inspiration whatsoever.

Some Churches try to gain a respectable attendance by baiting their communicants with a free dinner. Yet this is to miss the central truth that a parish meeting ought to be a vital expression of the democratic character of the Church. It should be attended for itself as a privilege, and not as the price of enjoying a good dinner.

A rotating vestry will help to make a Parish Meeting come alive. Too many Churches are like the one-party South. Why bother to vote, asks the Church-citizen, when everyone knows that the same gentlemen will be re-elected to the vestry again? There are many good reasons for a rotating vestry, and few points to be made against it, but not the least of its benefits is the new importance it gives to the right of suffrage in a Church.

The canons in many instances require certain reports to be made. As much of this routine as possible should be edited, attractively printed or mimeographed, and given to those attending. Then these reports become printed missionaries instead of sleep-provoking time-killers. They can be given to new comers in the parish throughout the year. They can be explained in confirmation classes. And the time saved in the parish meeting can be given to the presentation of vital matters of parish strategy and program. Discussion on such matters should be invited, and decisions reached. Let the parish meeting become the town meeting of the Church! How much better it is when the whole parish, informed and interested, is behind a new venture, rather than when it springs simply from the thinking of the vestry or the rector.

In such a planned parish meeting there will generally be time for an outside speaker who will give the parish the vision of the larger fellowship, diocesan, national, or ecumenical. Thus the evening would end on an inspirational on-going note of challenge. Parish meetings thus arranged become high points in the life of a Church!

We Need A National Department Of Evangelism

Why is the "Forward Movement" off on a side-track in relation to the general activities of the national Church? Why, among other reasons, did "Forward in Service" fail and die? What is the weakness of the program of evangelism which the Presiding Bishop is suggesting to the Church? Why do we have these sporadic, rocket-like programs of evangelism rather than a sane, constructive, continuing program from year to year?

The answer is the lack of a continuing organization to function in the field of evangelism. We are the only major denomination in America which does not have a strong Department of Evangelism! Such a department is the largest one of the Federal Council of Churches! We don't even have a secretary with responsibility for this field!

There ought to be a Department of Evangelism at 281 on a par with the other departments there in dignity, in budget and in strength of personnel. In planning the total program of the Church, it ought to function with the other departments instead of in opposition to them as "Forward in Service" too often did. It would integrate the work of the departments of evangelism which exist in some of our dioceses. The peculiar and particular work of such a department is not being done at 281. What is supposedly everyone's business becomes no one's! Look through the 1948 edition of "Parish Helps,", the catalogue of 281, and note that there are almost no materials in this field. Consider that during the war we heard of the numbers of young men who planned to offer themselves for the ministry, and then realize that the actual number in our seminaries right now will not begin to meet our need for manpower.

The lesson of history is clear. When a Church neglects evangelism, it petrifies and slowly dies. The vital core often splits off from such a Church and forms a new Church, paying the price of schism to regain the radiance of the evangel. Those who will not learn the lessons of history are doomed to repeat them! The Church, we believe, would eagerly support with money, men, interest and prayer a national Department of Evangelism.

The Realm of Love

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The newspapers have reported a divorce case in which the husband is seeking separation from his wife because she demanded a wage of 75 cents an hour for her household work. He felt this to be an outrageous demand, which warranted a dissolution of the marriage tie.

The formal facts do not, of course, reveal the actual human situation behind them. It is just possible that the wife felt herself forced to demand an hourly wage because the husband is niggardly in his financial support.

The incident illustrates how important it is in the most intimate and most intricate relations of life to be governed not by exact norms of justice but by mutual consideration. The family is, of all human institutions, the most dependent upon attitudes of mutual love.

If a husband is not fair to his wife, the demand for an hourly wage does not cure the situation because that demand does not change the disposition of the heart which prompted the unfairness. The effort of the wife to achieve justice merely resulted in the dissolution of the family.

Family life is too intimate to be preserved by the spirit of justice. It can only be sustained by a spirit of love which goes beyond justice. Justice requires that we carefully weigh rights and privileges and assure that each member of a community receives his due share. Love does not weigh rights and privileges too carefully because it prompts each to bear the burden of the other.

It would be wrong to suggest that family life can be healthy without some calculations of justice. Indeed a careful examination of wholesome families invariably results in the discovery of something like a family constitution, a kind of unwritten law which grows up through the years and which defines the rights and the duties of each member. These constitutions vary tremendously from family to family.

But definitions of justice create intolerable tensions, if there is not something more beyond them. That something more is the love of mutual forbearance and of mutual forgiveness. If forgiveness does not overcome the resentments and frictions which arise from the infractions of the canons of justice, these become intolerable and destroy the unity of the family.

There are sentimental versions of Christianity which suggest that if only we loved each other perfectly enough we could be rid of laws and canons of justice in the larger community as well as in the smaller one of the family.

This is a mistaken counsel. The point is that we do not love each other perfectly enough outside the family (and frequently not even in the family) to be able to dispense with the calculations and the canons of justice which assure each man his due, even if the disposition of the neighbor is not benevolent.

The human heart is too selfish to permit us to live amicably with one another, with no restraints, except those which love imposes upon the self. But the restraints, calculations, and balances of justice become sources of friction if the discipline of love is not added to them. The more initmate our contact with each other, the more must love be added to justice.

DR. EDGAR TAYLOR ORDAINED TO DIACONATE

St. Louis, Mo.—One of the better known personalities in the fields of education and public affairs for the past 23 years in St. Louis has entered the ministry of the Episcopal Church. Dr. Edgar C. Taylor, headmaster of the Taylor School for Boys and active in many of the city's cultural enterprises, was ordained to the diaconate on Sunday, December 28, by the Rt. Rev. William Scarlett, bishop of Missouri.

Dr. Taylor has long been an interested churchman, as a lay communicant of Christ Church Cathedral. He was recently chairman of the Reconstruction and Advance Campaign Committee for the Cathedral Parish. Because he was a gifted speaker on public affairs and an interested churchman a request of Bishop Scarlett for him to help out in an emergency led him eventually into the ministry.

In October, 1946, with a shortage of clergy in the diocese, Bishop Scarlett asked Dr. Taylor to take the services, as lay reader, in St. Mark's Church, St. Louis. He continued to supply that pulpit until the arrival of the new rector, the Rev. Murray Kenney, during the summer. St. Stephen's Church, Ferguson, in the suburbs, was then vacant untl the elected rector would become available in February, 1948. Dr. Taylor shifted to St. Stephen's and continued his lay preaching.

In both St. Mark's Church and in Ferguson, Dr. Taylor's ability as a speaker attracted large congregations and inspired the local lay leadership to a more vigorous maintenance of the parish life during the inter-regnum periods.

IN MEMORY OF THE HONORABLE ALEXANDER WEDDELL AND MRS. WEDDELL

At the hour at which funeral services for Mr. Alexander Weddell and Mrs. Weddell were being held in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, a memorial service of prayer was also held in St. Luke's Church, Hot Springs, Virginia, where for years they have been regular attendants during their residence at Hot Springs.

That service, conducted by the Rector of St. Luke's Church, included the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the true and faithful life of Thy servant, Alexander Weddell, for three score years and ten Thy loyal child in many lands; and we earnestly pray that he, and she whom he greatly loved, being now called unto Thy heavenly home, may go by Thy Holy Spirit from strength to strength and may receive from Thee Thy commendation: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"

So, also, may she, who strengthened him with her sustaining love, likewise enter into Thine eternal joy.

This we ask in Christ's name. Amen.

As an expression of our love and esteem for these two admirable citizens of Virginia and our sympathy with those others who also loved them, we, whose names are written below, here say our "Amen" to the prayer of the memorial service, despite the fact that illness or other hindrance prevented us from attending the service in Richmond.

THE WALL OF SEPARATION

No longer can I see your eyes, or hear your voice,
Or grasp your hand. Between us is this wall,
So hard and dark and cruel and cold and deep.
I beat upon it with my longing hands
And try to thrust away the heavy stones.
I strain my eyes to pierce the midnight gloom,
But all in vain; no ray of light appears;
Only the dread partition, and my heart
Disconsolate, beats and beats in dull despair.
But time keeps pacing; day and day and day
Pushes me farther back, and step by step
The distance grows and still I gaze upon
The cruel wall; yet now 'tis somehow changed.
I now can see above it, where the sky,
Cloudless and blue, protects both worlds
in joy.
I now can see the shadows on the wall
Made vivid by the sun's outpouring beams;
And, best of all, I see that here and there
Are gates, inviting, holding joy beyond.
I know that through these portals, when God wills,
I shall advance and find a welcome there
From every loved one who has gone

HARRIET BROWN MOORE.

The above poem was written by an old outstanding member of the Woman's Auxiliary. In the 1930's she was the Provincial President of the Auxiliary of the Province of Washington, and a valuable worker in the Summer Conferences. We copy from a letter of her's to us the following paragraph which will be of interest to the members of this family:

"I was particularly attracted to the poem, "The Wall" by Polly Tucker. Her lines indicate the fact that from the other side the wall is slight; mine give the view from this side. I wrote them several years ago from a sermon given by Bishop Huston, then my rector at St. Mark's Church here (San Antonio, Texas). I use them regularly for my notes of condolence."

COMFORT FOR DARK DAYS

"The land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven; . . . the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year." (Deut. 11:11, 12).

WE WHO STAND

During luncheon I talked with a clergyman about what to write for an article. He suggested that I write about God Parents. It is an important subject for us to think through once in a while.

It is necessary for us—"we who stand before God and the congregation" to take our responsibility for this new member in our Church Family very sincerely.

When one considers securing Godparents it is important to think about their duties. It is, therefore, important that they be Christians, not only in name but in action and devotion to the Church. They are to be, in most cases, closely associated with the growing child. So many times a child gains more from actions of the adult than from being "told".

It would be a wonderful thing if all the clergy, and many do, meet with the godparents and parents. They could talk about the faith, the duties of the godparents and parents, and how to carry them out. They could go through the Service of Holy Baptism so that it would take on real meaning. We should prepare ourselves. Too often I have had to show people at the last minute and hope that they will read the correct response.

It is good to have this preparation so that when the service takes place during church time, things go smoothly. It is a religious service. It is not merely getting the child done.

The gifts of the godparents should be simple ones, if necessary to give any. A Prayer Book used at the service can mean much to the child as he grows up. A remembrance on the date of his baptism and the godparent taking the child to Church are important. This could help with the second child's baptism, especially if there has been evidence of being a bit jealous of the new comer in the family. The child would know that he or she was loved in the same way as this new child.

It might be a good thing to have a prayer for all godparents at the public baptism. It would remind some of us of our responsibility which we sometimes forget, especially when the child is away from us. It would help if during the year we might have a sermon and service pointed to the God Parents. It might be done. We have days for every other group in the church. We need reminding. We need to be told from time to time.

Let us see if we can do more for godparents to make the Service of Holy Baptism one of accepting it as a privilege and responsibility for the newborn soul coming into the Church. Let us select people carefully and have them prepared for their task.

Consultant of Christian Education,

The Nicene Creed and Rubrics

We have already sufficiently discussed the Nicene Creed so that nothing more need be said here except that it is the Creed that is most frequently used at Communion Services even though they do not fall on the festivals when it is required to be said.

The rubric calling for announcements and "the Banns of Matrimony" brings to our attention a practice which has fallen almost entirely into disuse in the church in the United States, although in Canada it is supported in an interesting way. If the Banns are announced for three Sundays and the clergyman so certifies to the clerk of the court it is not necessary for the bride and groom to pay for the license. Our Canon requiring that the minister have three days notice before performing the marriage ceremony, which is now supplemented in many states by laws requiring a physical examination, to some extent fulfills the publishing of the Banns. In this connection however we may say that it is our belief that the best way to meet the growing divorce menace is with laws requiring marriage to be more difficult in the matter of giving longer notice before the ceremony can be performed, this however will have to be brought about through state legislation rather than by canonical requirements.

It is an odd thing that the Communion Service should be the only one that specifically mentions a sermon, although the service in itself is so long, and of such a devotional character that any sermon seems like an intrusion, and more than fifteen or twenty minutes will certainly be tiresome.

Concerning the sermon it is only necessary to quote here from an article on "The Art of Preaching" by the late Dean George Hodges in which he said, "For good preaching it is necessary that both the preacher and the congregation should be present. Sometimes the preacher is so busy reading his manuscript, or gazing up at the ceiling that he is entirely detached from the congregation and this detachment on his part is apt to produce an absence in mind of the congregation. Furthermore it should be remembered that the preacher is in error who thinks he can make his sermon immortal by making it everlasting."

News of the Church

EVERY EPISCOPALIAN TO HEAR BROADCAST

New York, N. Y.—"The only thing comparable to this is a Presidential broadcast," commented an official of the Mutual Broadcasting System on the arrangements for Presiing Bishop Sherrill's message to the Church on Sunday, February 29.

At the Church Missions House it was stated that indications point to the fact that substantially every member of the Episcopal Church will hear this broadcast . . . most of them in their parish churches, those unable to be in church, in their own homes.

Already hundreds of parishes have arranged for receiving sets to be installed shortly before the 29th, and rectors and parish organizations are seeing that everyone in the parish knows of the broadcast and intends to be present to hear it.

Bishop Sherrill will tell the Church in a simple, direct and intensely earnest way, the needs of our fellow-Christians in Europe and Asia. Following his address, rectors everywhere will explain how every church member may have a part in alleviating this suffering and need.

As Episcopal Church people gave more than a million dollars through the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief in 1947, there is widespread determination to equal or surpass that achievement for 1948, and the special presentation of the whole program on February 29, at the regular 11 o'clock Sunday morning service will, many believe, assure the giving or pledging of the greater part of that million in one day.

CHURCH CONGRESS

Hartford, Conn.—At the December meeting of the Executive Committee of the Church Congress in the United States, Bishop Gray, coadjutor of Connecticut, tendered his resignation as president, since he had completed a five-year term, and the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Boston, was elected president. A resolution expressing appreciation of Bishop Gray's services was adopted, and he will continue on the Executive Committee.

The Rev. Dr. Ferris has been active in the work of the Congress, having been one of the speakers at the 1947 National Meeting in Toledo and serving as editor of the publication on that meeting. "Episcopalians United," which is being brought out by the Morehouse-Gorham Company.

New members added to the Executive Committee were:

The Rev. Messrs. Gordon M. Jones, Jr., Toledo, Ohio; William C. Munds, D. D., Greenville, Delaware; Lauriston L. Scaife, D. D., Pittsburgh, Pa.; and Benedict Williams, Sewickley, Pa.

It is the plan of the Congress to make regular changes in its officers and executive committee in order to bring new points of view and to secure a country-wide participation in its leadership.

Membership in the Congress now stands at 446, the highest in its history.

The syllabi for discussion in 1948 will be written by:

1. The Rev. Granville M. Williams, S. S. J. E.
2. Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, Ph. D.
3. Dr. Kenneth C. M. Sills.
4. Rev. Thorne Sparkman, D. D.

The topic will be the "statement of faith and order in harmony with the Lambeth. Quaderilateral," which may serve as a basis of union between the Episcopal Church and others and which will be a main subject.

Tentative plans were made for the holding of a National Meeting of the Congress in the spring of 1949, to concern itself with this "statement of faith and order" and with possible further revision of the Marriage Canon.

IMPORTANCE OF THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION SUNDAY

New York, N. Y.—Last year's Offering on Theological Education Sunday was the largest in the history of the Offering, according to figures released by the Very Rev. Alden Drew Kelley, President and Dean of Seabury-Western Seminary, and in charge of the promotion of the Offering. The figures for fiscal year ending November 1, 1947, are:

General Theological Seminary	$ 27,422.32
Berkeley Divinity School	5,255.49
Bexley Hall	2,488.14
Bishop Payne Divinity School	1,624.72
Church Divinity School of the Pacific	6,918.47
Episcopal Theological School	9,316.21
Nashotah House	15,312.60
Philadelphia Divinity School	7,509.74
School of Theology of the University of the South	(no report)
Seabury-Western Theological Seminary	10,531.11
	$100,182.29

Dean Kelley said that more and more parishes are including a special item in their budgets rather than having a special Offering on Seminary Sunday. It is being urged from many quarters that this plan be widely adopted. At the same time it is felt that the Sunday should be used to recall to the mind of Church people the needs of the Seminaries, the importance of theological education, and the need of the Church for properly qualified and trained men.

In order to meet rising operating costs and the increased number of students in all the seminaries, it is hoped that the offerings for theological education this current year will be at least 25% larger than for the year 1947.

Because the seminaries of the Episcopal Church are in every respect "independent" institutions and do not receive subsidies from the national Church, the only way in which Church people in general can support this most important work is through direct contributions to the seminaries or through the Theological Education Offering of their parishes. It is not generally realized that contrary to the custom of practically every other religious group of any other size in the country, the Episcopal Church seminaries stand alone in not receiving national financial assistance.

Until recently, when the plan of Theological Education Sunday was inaugurated, the Seminaries have not been supported by the living but by the endowments of the dead. It has been reported that during the last year 2,165 parishes and missions contributed to the total offering. According to The Living Church Annual, 1947, there were in the continental United States 7,648 parishes and missions; this leaves a huge field still untouched (about 5,500 parishes and missions) if every congregation of the Church is to be doing its share of the support of the Church's program for its Ministry.

STATE COUNCIL OF CHURCHES TO MEET IN RICHMOND

Annual Sessions Set for January 20-21

Richmond, Va.—Representatives of Protestant denominations and local Councils of Churches will come to Richmond for the annual meeting and convocation of the Virginia Council of Churches to be held January 20-21 at the Second Presbyterian Church, according to a recent announcement by the Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., Executive Secretary of the Council.

The Council's Executive Committee will meet at the Cecil Memorial building next to the church from 9:30 A. M. to 12:30 P. M. Tuesday, and the Executive Board of the Council of Church Women will have a luncheon session from 12:30 to 2:30 P. M. at the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Donald W. Richardson, chairman, will preside at the luncheon.

The General Session will begin at 2:30 P. M. with Dr. R. B. Montgomery, President of Lynchburg College and President of the Council, presiding. This will be followed by a banquet, honoring Weekday Religious Education Teachers at the Y. W. C. A. at 6 o'clock. The evening session will convene at 8 o'clock.

Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison to Speak

Among the visiting speakers at the Convocation are listed Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor Emeritus of the Christian Century, who will speak at 2:30 on Tuesday on The Protestant Situation" and again at 8 P. M. on "The Church Between Two Worlds."

Continues on Wednesday

Wednesday's program begins at 9:30 A. M. with a worship period led by the Rev. C. L. Evans and concludes with a worship service at 4 P. M. conducted by the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, Bishop of the diocese of Virginia and Vice-President of the Council.

Featured on Wednesday will be two addresses by the Rev. Ivan Gould, D. D., Executive Secretary of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches, formerly with the International Council of Religious Education. Dr. Gould will speak at 9:45 A. M. on the topic "Major Issues Concerning the Church and Christian Education" and at 12 noon on "The Council That Cannot Fail."

Among those representing the Episcopal Church on the executive committee of the Council are: Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, Dr. R. A. Magill, of Lynchburg, Diocese of Southern Virginia; Rev. William Sydnor, of Petersburg, Diocese of Virginia; the Rev. James D. Beckwith, Culpeper, Va.; the Rev. F. J. Warnecke, St. Mark's, in Richmond, is chairman of the Department of Radio of the Council.

DEDICATION OF TWO BISHOP'S CHAIRS

Galveston, Texas.—Trinity Church, Galveston, on November 9, 1947, was the grateful recipient of two beautiful Bishop's Chairs. One was presented by Mr. Francis Allen Redmond in memory of his grandmother, Mrs. Francis Davis Allan, nee Virginia Radcliff Lowndes, born at Cobbs near Petersburg, Va., 1816; the other through the will of Miss Virginia Allan Neuman, granddaughter of Mrs. Francis Davis Allan, in memory of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Neuman.

Three generations of the Allan family have been closely associated with the growth and spiritual development of this Church and Parish since 1857. Mr. and Mrs. Allan were beloved by all the people of Galveston, he being called "The Patriarch of Charity," and she being termed, "The Mother of Trinity Church." Mrs. Allan and two daughters worked as volunteer nurses throughout two yellow fever epidemics. As a poet of no mean ability Mrs. Allan published numerous hymns and verses. For nearly fifty years she was a subscriber to and ardent reader of The Southern Churchman. At the age of 96 she wrote to her great niece, Florence S. Peple, of Richmond, Va.: "I am so glad, my dear, that you wish to be a writer. From now on let us exchange copies of our writings." She lived on in complete possession of all her faculties until shortly before her 99th birthday in 1914.

'PILGRIMAGE TO AMSTERDAM' BROADCAST SERIES

New York.—Mr. Raymond Swing, noted radio commentator, will interview four leading Protestant churchmen in a series of quarter-hour transcribed radio broadcasts on the issues of the forthcoming First Assembly of the World Council of Churches, it was announced today by Dr. Douglas Horton, chairman of the American Committee for the World Council.

Entitled "Pilgrimage to Amsterdam," the series of interviews will cover events leading up to the formation of the World Council and also the issues now being deliberated by the four preparatory study commissions composed of leading Orthodox and Protestant churchmen throughout the world. The Assembly will meet in Amsterdam, Holland, in August of this year.

The historical background of the First Assembly will be discussed by Mr. Swing with Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Associated General Secretary of the World Council. Dr. Henry Pitney Van Dusen, President of Union Theological Seminary, will report on the work of the study commissions on church organization and the world mission of the churches.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, of the Methodist Church will be interviewed by Mr. Swing on developments in the study commission on The Church and the Disorder of Society. Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, Dean of the Graduate School of the Lutheran Seminary at Philadelphia and Director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, will consider with Mr. Swing the place of the Christian churches in the development of a moral international order.

The series of transcripts will be broadcast by independent stations throughout the country during Lent.

PUERTO RICO OBSERVES CHRISTMAS

New York, N. Y.—From William Lee Richards, who recently gave up his work at Church Missions House to head the Colegio De Agricultura San Jose at Ponce, Puerto Rico, comes the account of the observance of Three Kings Day. Christmas, he said, is observed as a religious festival, and a few presents and cards are exchanged. Also roast pig is a popular delicacy. Some families have Christmas trees. After Christmas the mood of gaiety grows stronger and stronger. Beggars dressed as one of the three Kings appear on the streets.

"Before going to bed on January 5," Mr. Richards said, "good little boys and girls and others too, I suppose, cut green, fresh grass and get some corn from wherever they can get corn, and put it, with a bowl of water, under their beds. This is to lure the camels. Touched by the children's generosity the Kings shower down gifts with profusion."

Parents have the task of smuggling out the corn and water during the night, and supplying the gifts.

Three Kings Day is less a religious festival than Christmas, Mr. Richards said. "It is more the time for gift giving and fun and parties. At the church there is an early celebration but the congregation is small. The party given in the afternoon is what draws the congregation."

ANGLICAN CHURCH TREASURES IN WAR TIME

By B. S. Townroe, M. A. (Oxon),

(A member of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Publicity Commission.)

London.—Some interesting facts have just been published in Great Britain about the action taken early in the war to protect the treasures of the Church of England from the risk of damage. Even today it has been decided that it is still unwise to release the names of most of the places used for storage as valuable objects still remain, in crtain cases, owing to difficultis of transport. Thus the mediaeval bells of the great Norman Church of St. Bartholomew in the City of London are still in safety at Cleeve Abbey in West Somerset.

No less than twenty-nine lorry loads of valuable furniture from the London city churches were stored during the war in the stone vaulted cellars of a West country school. Valuable church plate was stored in the cellar of a farm house. An ancient Saxon cross, supposed to commemorate Anlaf, the Danish King of Northumbria, A. D. 942, was hidden away during the war and has now been restored to the Leeds Parish Church.

Some of the most beautiful canopied stalls were taken from the local Priory Church and stored in the base of the Keep of Lancaster Castle. Stained glass dating from mediaeval times in Yorkshire Churches was stored underground in the disused galleries of collieries. Most of this glass has now been replaced at an enormous cost. The opportunity has, however, been taken to execute repairs and releading, so that in most cases the glass will be in better condition than it has been for very many years.

The Central Council for the Care of Churches also arranged for the storage of artistic objects not belonging to the Church of England. These included 25 crates of ancient books from the library of the French Protestant Church in Soho Square in London and scrolls of the Law, and candelabra from the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue and from the United Synagogue.

BISHOP OLDHAM HONORED AT SERVICE

Albany, N. Y.—Clergy and laymen gathered from various parts of the diocese to attend a service of thanksgiving for the safe return of the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, bishop of Albany, from his recent mission to the Church in Australia on the first Sunday in the New Year. Bishop and Mrs. Oldham had been away since October 11 and near the end of their tour almost lost their lives in an airplane accident over the Tasman Sea. Inasmuch as the twenty-fifth anniversary of Bishop Oldham's consecration fell on October 24 and was quietly observed by him at an altar in Honolulu, the service in the Cathedral of All Saints, Albany, on Sunday afternoon, January 4, was likewise in recognition of his quarter of a century in the episcopate.

The majority of the diocesan clergy participated in the service and the Cathedral choir, under the direction of Mr. Robert W. Morse, organist and choirmaster, rendered Evensong in an exceptionally beautiful manner. The Rt. Rev. Frederick L. Barry, bishop coadjutor, welcomed Bishop and Mrs. Oldham on behalf of the diocese. Bishop Barry also read letters of congratulation to Bishop Oldham from prelates and officials of state, including the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of Sydney, the Bishop of London, President Truman, Governor Dewey, the Mayor of Albany, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Presiding Bishop. He also cited a collection of letters from the majority of the members of the House of Bishops and from various lay individuals, as well as special greetings from each of the six Rural Deans of the diocese.

Bishop Oldham made an address, recounting in part his recent travels in the Pacific. He portrayed impressively the history, glory and unity of the Anglican communion.

After the service the congregation gathered on the Cathedral plaza and joined with Bishop Barry in presentation of a new Chrysler car, a gift to Bishop Oldham in recognition of his twenty-five years in the Diocese of Albany. Mrs. Oldham received flowers from the Deaneries, a travelling bag from the diocese, and an over night case from the wives of the clergy. Despite the winter atmosphere, there was a delightful outdoor reception, as the congregation filed by to greet the Bishop and Mrs. Oldham.

18 VISITING SPEAKERS FOR PREACHING MISSION

Richmond, Va.—Congressman Walter H. Judd of Minnesota, Judge Camille Kelley of Memphis, Tenn., Bishop Clinton S. Quin of the Diocese of Texas, and Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes of the Methodist Church are among leading speakers who will be in Richmond for the Preaching Mission at the Mosque and other points February 1-8.

Others just announced by the Rev. Dr. Theodore F. Adams, chairman of the speakers committee for the Richmond Ministerial Union in this effort, are: Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y., president of the United Council of Church Women; Dr. Frank Crossley Morgan, son of the famed Dr. G. Campbell Morgan; Dr. Raymond I. Linquist of Old First Presbyterian Church, Orange, N. J., and Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

There will be 18 visiting speakers in all during the week.

The schedule provides for daily afternoon and night meetings at the Mosque, with daily noonday services in five areas of the city, school and college assemblies, and civic clubs and other groups addressed by the nationally known figures.

A project of the Richmond Ministerial Union, the mission is being assisted also by the Virginia Council of Churches, the Richmond Council of Church Women, and the Richmond Federation of Christian Young People.

Congressman Judd is a former medical missionary to China and an authority on Far Eastern affairs and other international relations. Mrs. Kelley was the first woman in the South, and the second in the nation, to become a juvenile justice. She has made an enviable record on the national scene.

Bishop Hughes, one of the most popular Bishops in his denomination, will give his famous address on "The Home", among the topics he will discuss. Mrs. Sibley is active nationally and internationally in many phases of Christian and forward looking projects for people everywhere.

Dr. Linquist is particularly interested in the New Life Movement in the Presbyterian Church and has appeared for it in many of the nation's cities. Dr. Bonnell has written a number of books, including "Pastoral Psychiatry" and "Britons Under Fire."

Dr. Morgan, a native of London, completed his theological studies under his father in this country after serving in the British Army in World War I. He is now giving his full time to Bible conference work.

SERIES: "A REPORT FROM FRONTIERS" AT ST. MATTHEWS

Wheeling, W. Va.—Because of the response to the missionary giving over the past three years on the part of parishioners of St. Matthew's, Wheeling, W. Va., the rector and vestry are rewarding them with a special series of Addresses on the four Sundays after Epiphany, by representatives of overseas workers of the Church. This series is entitled "A Report From The Frontiers" and given at a time when no funds are sought. The series has aroused great interest. Preceding the services the two Church Schools of the Parish will meet for a missionary service—all other lessons being discontinued.

Dates, Speakers and Fields to be represented are as follows:

January 11 — The Rev. George Packard—Latin America; January 18—The Rev. Benson Harvey—Philippine Islands; January 25—The Rev. Frank Titus—Japan; February 1—The Rev. Harvey Simmonds—Liberia.

The Rev. J. Moulton Thomas is rector of St. Matthew's.

CONFERENCE ON THE MINISTRY

Hartford, Conn.—Sixty-five men and boys came through a snowstorm to attend a Diocesan Conference on the ministry held at the Cathedral in Hartford January 2d. The purpose of the gathering was to present to men and boys of college and high school age the work of the ministry and the channels by which men enter it. Bishop Gray, coadjutor of Connecticut, presided, and the other speakers were Postulants and Candidates for Holy Orders of the diocese, plus the president of the Standing Committee, the chairman of the Board of Examining Chaplains, and the Chaplain of Trinity College, Hartford. Lyman C. Ogilby, a student at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, spoke on "Why the Ministry," and the Messrs. David B. Bronson, Raymond Cunningham, Jr., Edwin A. Skipton, Peter B. Tomkins, and Percy L. Urban,

Jr., told of life at their respective seminaries. Literature on the work of the Church was distributed and plans were made for future diocesan gatherings of this sort. Much interest was shown by the men in the work of the Church.

MISS SHREINER APPOINTED TO HUDSON STUCK HOSPITAL

New York, N. Y.—Miss Gladys A. Shreiner, R. N., has been appointed for missionary service as a nurse at Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska, according to National Council announcement today.

Miss Shreiner expects to leave for Alaska early in January. She is a member of St. Barnabas' Parish, Haddington, Philadelphia. She is a graduate of the Germantown High School, and of the School of Nursing of the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia. While taking her training, she was active in the Altar Guild, the Doctors' and Nurses' Choir, the Student Council, and as a staff member of the school newspaper. Since her graduation in September, 1946, she has continued at the Episcopal Hospital as a general staff nurse. During the past summer she served as staff nurse for the Church Conference held at Beaver College, Jenkintown, Pa.

RUSSIAN SCRIPTURES PRESENTED TO METROPOLITAN

New York, N. Y.—Ten thousand copies of the first Russian Bible to be published in this country, together with 5,000 Russian Testaments and Psalms, 100,000 Russian Gospels and 1,000 Greek New Testaments were presented by Daniel Burke, president of the American Bible Society to Metropolitan Gregory, of Leningrad and Novgorod of the Russian Orthodox Church at the Bible House, in New York City, October 30. Metropolitan Gregory was on a special mission in this country.

These copies of the Holy Scriptures were a Christmas gift from the American Bible Society, to Patriarch Alexei of Moscow for the churches and people of Russia. Metropolitan Gregory had already cleared the import license for these Scriptures, so that it is expected they would be in Russia very shortly and will constitute a gift from the people of the United States through the American Bible Society and Patriarch Alexei of Moscow to the churches and people of Russia.

All of these Russian Scriptures are in the Holy Synod Version and in the new Russian orthography. They have been set up and published in the United States by the American Bible Society in the past few years to show the good will and gratitude of millions of American Christians to the Russian people for their supreme courage and sacrifices in the great fight against military aggression. The Greek New Testaments will be distributed among the theological students.

The Holy Synod Version was first published in 1860 in St. Petersburg by the Holy Synod of the Russian Orthodox Church. In 1926 the American Bible Society paid for having a Russian Bible in the Holy Synod Version set up and printed in the Government printing office at Leningrad. This Bible was in the new orthography, but after two editions were printed the plates were lost.

The American Bible Society, however, recently set up and published in the United States several editions of the Russian Gospels and of the Russian New Testament and Psalms in the Holy Synod Version and in the new orthography.

The 10,000 Russian Bibles now being donated to Patriarch Alexei of Moscow through Metropolitan Gregory are part of the first edition of the American Bible Society's new Center Reference Russian Bible just off the press. As long as the shortages of paper and binding materials caused by the war continues, the American Bible Society considers it a Christian privilege and is prepared to continue to donate such gifts of copies of the Word of God to the churches and people of Russia in Russian, Slavonic and in other languages.

CURRICULUM COMMISSION IN THREE-DAY SESSION

New York, N. Y.—The Curriculum Commission together with the Parent Education Commission and the Committee for Teacher Training worked for three days at Seabury House. Dr. John Heuss, director of the National Department of Christian Education, chaired the general meetings. Canon Gardner Monks, of Washington Cathedral, chairman of the Curriculum Commission; the Rev. Felix Kloman, Philadelphia, chairman of the Parent Education Commission; the Rt. Rev. L. B. Whittemore, Bishop of Western, chairman of the Committee for Teacher Training; Mrs. Marian Kelleran, diocesan director of Christian Education in Washington, D. C.; the Rev. Reuel Howe, of Virginia Seminary, and the Rev. Ernest Piper, of Detroit, together with Dr. Heuss, comprised the Executive Committee.

The Rev. James Smart, editor-in-chief of the new Curriculum Development of the national board of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, gave a presentation of the working procedures. Miss Merle Easton, director of the new curriculum work of the Congregational Church, Boston, Mass., also gave a very helpful description of the way their national board is working on new materials.

The Rev. William Crittenden, executive secretary of the Division of Youth of the National Council, and Miss Elizabeth Rhea, assistant secretary of Rural Work, Division of Domestic Missions, were in attendance at the conference.

Lively discussion took place both in the general sessions and the smaller group working periods, resulting in definite assignments being given to each member of the commissions. The Commission for Curriculum Development will meet again in February. The members of the three groups are: the Rev. Hamilton West, Augusta, Ga.; Dr. Clark C. Kuebler, Ripon College, Ripon, Wis.; the Rev. Bernard W. Hummel, Minneapolis, Minn; the Rt. Rev. L. B. Whittemore, bishop of Western Michigan; the Rev. Robert R. Brown, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Dora Chaplin, Chestnut Hill, Mass.; the Ven. W. S. Thomas, archdeacon of the diocese of Pittsburgh; the Rev. Giraul M. Jones, New Orleans, La.; the Rev. Randolph G. Miller, professor of Religious Education, Divinity School of the Pacific; Canon G. Gardner Monks, Washington Cathedral; Miss Maude Cutler, Philadelphia Divinity School; Mrs. Harold C. Kelleran, director of Religious Education, Washington, D. C.; Dr. Adelaide T. Case, Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass.; Dr. Wilbur G. Katz, dean of Law School, University of Chicago; the Rev. L. Douglas Henderson, St. Paul, Minn.; the Rev. Reuel L. Howe, Virginia Theological Seminary; Mrs. V. O. Ward, San Francisco, Calif.; Mrs. Alfred Chapman, executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary; the Rt. Rev. Charles C. J. Carpenter, bishop of Alabama; Mrs. Rutherford Platt, New York City; the Rev. Felix Kloman, Philadelphia; Miss Charlotte C. Tompkins, member of the staff, Department of Christian Education of the National Council, New York City; the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, bishop of Washington, chairman of the Department of Christian Education; the Rt. Rev. Elwood L. Haines, bishop of Iowa, chairman of the Childdren's Division.

"SPIRITUAL AWAKENING," THEME OF SERVICES

Leading Up to Preaching Mission, February 1-8

Richmond, Va.—With "Spiritual Awakening" as a theme, members and leaders of 125 Richmond churches, of ten denominations, will take part in a program of area meetings and services leading up to the Richmond Preaching Mission to be held at the Mosque February 1-8. Announcement of the plans has been made by the Rev. Dr. Garis T. Long, pastor of Grace Baptist Church and chairman of a special committee of the Ministerial Union directing these pre-mission activities.

Simultaneous services will be held twice daily, at 2 and 8 P. M., in the five major areas of the city, from Monday, January 26, through Friday, January 30. They will be led by local ministers as guest speakers. The emphasis will be largely on prayer, with topics centering around the place of the Bible, prayer, the Holy Spirit, Christian living, and witnessing in a spiritual awakening.

Cottage prayer meetings on Saturday night, January 31, will also be organized within the various congregations on the eve of the Preaching Mission.

The Mission itself, while set for daily afternoon and night meetings at the Mosque for the first eight days in February, will also fan out all over the city. There will be special addresses by nationally known speakers in the schools and colleges, and at club and group meetings during the mornings. Each major section of the city will also have a union church service daily at noon, which will be addressed by one of these visiting speakers.

Sponsored by the Richmond Ministerial Union, of which the Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, is president, the mission has as its general chairman, the Rev. Dr. J. Blanton Belk, pastor of St. Giles Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Dr. William E. Hudson, of Staunton, is the director. Others active in the planning and staging are: J. Joseph May, financial manager; the Rev. Dr. Theodore F. Adams, First Baptist Church, speakers; the Rev. Dr. William F. Dunkle, Jr., Barton Heights Methodist Church, publicity; the Rev. Dr. T. Rupert Coleman, Ginter Park Baptist Church, area meetings; the Rev. Dr. A. P. Williams, Monument Methodist Church, ushers; Dr. Edward T. Grant, executive secretary, Presbyterian Committee of Publication, extra meetings and clubs; the Rev. Dr. R. W. Kirkpatrick, youth; the Rev. Robert Lee House, First Congregational Christian Church, visitation; James R. Sydnor, Union Seminary and Assembly Training School, music.

Assisting organizations include: the Virginia Council of Churches, the Richmond Council of Church Women, and the Richmond Federation of Christian Young People.

BISHOP NASH ADDRESSES DINNER CONFERENCES

Boston, Mass.—"An increased ministry of laymen" has been the main theme in addresses by Bishop Norman B. Nash in the series of five dinner conferences for the laymen of his diocese.

In his call for strong churchmen, the Bishop defined the latter as not those with a poor opinion of other denominations,—a failing that makes religion a derisive rather than a cohesive and constructive factor in the community. The days of denominational isolationism are ended; the great convictions of faith unite rather than divide, he said in his address in St. Paul's Church, Brockton, in the course of his argument which was varied by differing illustrations in Lawrence, Watertown, Brockton, and, as the climax on November 18, Christ Church, Quincy.

Hailing establishment of local and state councils of churches as a fine achievement, Bishop Nash termed it high time that strong churchmen of all denominations should work together in the present day of attempts to found nations based on ideals other than Christian. "The role of the Church of Christ is worldwide," said he, "knowing no bar for color, race, or language; and it is the most nearly universal peace society in the world today."

'Today's problems are too tremendous and the perils too awful to be met by any nominal profession of faith," he continued, as he stressed that "one-day-a-week-religion" is not enough. "We must have one world or none; that is our faith; one world that is God's world and in which all men are brothers, one family under God. It will be a world of law and order where no nation dares claim final and absolute loyalty from its own subjects, with disregard of the higher law."

In church life, the laymen were urged to play high part in the spiritual life of the Church, as well as on the business side. With regard to the current church year's campaign of evangelism, Bishop Nash cited the co-operation of laymen with their rectors as essential for success; they, it will be, who can point out the focal points within the parish, reach the men who have lost touch with the church and win them back. "The Church must make known to a world in despair what it is to live in confidence within the love of God as a "colony of Heaven."

The annual autumn series of dinner conferences which bring the Bishop into intimate, inspiring relationship with his laymen, is always sponsored by the Men's Division of the diocesan Church Service League. Well established by Bishop Sherrill in the earliest days of his episcopate, it continues as a force in the laymen's church life.

ADDITION TO ST. MICHAEL'S PARISH HOUSE

Savannah, Ga.—On December 17, an addition to St. Michael's one-story parish house was begun. The cost will be $16,000 and it will be in keeping with the architecture of the Church and the present parish house. The new building will provide a large assembly hall on the first floor and five rooms on the second floor to be used as class rooms for the church school and for the day kindergarten, the latter having been started under the direction of the rector, the Rev. Theodore Patton, at the beginning of the school year.

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION SUNDAY, JANUARY 25

Washington, D. C.—In urging the whole Church to observe Theological Sunday, January 25, Bishop Angus Dun, chairman of the Joint Commission on Theological Education, points to a "familiar passage of Scripture which reminds us that the Church is a body with many members, and that when one member suffers all the members suffer or when one member is honored, all the members rejoice with it. On Theological Education Sunday we are asked to turn our thoughts and prayers and giving towards those members of the body which we call our Seminaries.

"It requires little thought to recognize that the spiritual fortunes of every congregation of our Church are bound up with the fortunes of our Seminaries. The young men who in these days are crowding into our Seminaries come chiefly from families where there has been some living faith and prayer kept alive by a faithful mother or father. There would be no seminaries in which they could make ready for their ministries, unless in past years lay people in our parishes had seen the need and given the resources for teachers and books and buildings, above all for teachers. The life and strength of all our seminaries depend absolutely on the life of the whole Church. Let the supply of men or of gifts for theological education fail, and our seminaries will be like an arm into which the circulation of the life-blood has been blocked.

"Too many of our seminaries are working for us all with inadequate resources because they are living on the gifts of the dead rather than on the continuing gifts of the living.

"Equally true is it that all the congregations and parishes of this Church are alive at all because there have been men who with all their human limitations stood in these communities as ambassadors for Christ. At the center of the life of every parish there have been men who spoke for God and His Christ, who baptized little children, who called men to prayer, and brought Christ into marriage and sickness and sorrow. The great majority of these men have come out of our seminaries. The quality of their ministries has depended in very large measure on the quality of the seminaries out of which they came.

"The Church can be strong only when it feeds its life and its gifts into the Schools which prepare its ordained leaders for their high calling."

DEFINITION OF EVANGELISM

To evangelize is to present Christ Jesus in the power of the Holy Spirit, that men shall come to put their trust in God through Him, to accept Him as their Saviour, and to serve Him as their King, in the fellowship of His Church.

out ever admitting what many many Germans did to millions of other people during the war—starved them to death, beat them, tortured them, shot them, gassed and burned them, murdered them during experimental operations and with new and untried drugs—things too horrible to contemplate. About 6,000,000 people were murdered by Germans under the Nazi regime and another 30,000,000 (estimated) lives were lost as a result of the war which Hitler started.

But the children and the old people —we can feel sorry for them, no matter what. And I'd like to wish you, Aunt E., an especially happy Christmas because you were good enough to bother about one poor old man over here.

Best love, B.

Mr. Taylor was presented by the Very Rev. Sidney E. Sweet, who also preached teh sermon. Mr. Taylor may be addressed at 7 Briarcliff, Ladue 5, Mo.

DEATHS

REV. R. C. COWLING

The Rev. R. C. Cowling, retired rector of St. Margaret's Church, Annapolis, Md., for more than twenty-five years, died at his home near St. Margaret's Church on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, December 14, 1947. Funeral services were conducted by the Rt. Rev. Noble C. Powell, bishop of Maryland on Tuesday, Dec. 16—interment in St. Margaret's churchyard. Mr. Cowling had been in feeble health for some time due to a complication of troubles and his death was due to a sudden heart attack. He was the last rector of Wickcliffe Church, Clarke Co., Va., which church he served for eleven years before going to St. Margaret's, Annapolis, Md.

The Church of the Good Shepherd, a mission of Wickcliffe Church was built while he was rector of Wickcliffe Parish. He was a native of Alexandria, Va.; was educated at the College of William and Mary and the Virginia Seminary. He is survived by one son, Philip Thompson Cowling, by one brother, Milford Cowling and a number of nieces and nephews.

UNABLE TO APPROVE ALL

Sirs: In renewing my subscription to your excellent paper, which has been taken by some member of my family for more than a century, permit me to commend the good work you have done in thus continuing this old publication and enlarging its usefulness. You have improved the paper much over what it was a few years ago. I give my praise to you the more cheerfully because I have often wondered what I would do myself, if I were the editor of a religious paper. The situation is very difficult. You have done well. On only one point do I dwell here, in difference from you: I wish you would drop the column managed by Mr. Niebuhr. It adds nothing to the value of the paper, in my judgment. I also wish you were not so completely captivated by what passes under the name of "liberal" thought. Being a disciple of what was taught by Bishop Meade, Dr. Packard and others of a former day, I am unable to approve all you say. But of course you are entitled to your own views, quite as much as I to mine. I thank you, however, for taking a stand against the loose views on marriage and divorce which are now so prevalent among many clergymen of the "liberal" school.

With much respect,

WILLIAM A. ROBERTSON.

UNION WITH THE METHODISTS, LET'S PUSH IT

Sir: As a missionary who knows too well the tragic results of Christian disunity and the confusion caused by it, I am interested in the cause of Christian unity, and especially in the recent proposal for union with the Methodist Church. I am for that proposal, heart and soul. Why didn't we think of it sooner? I believe it is the most sensible proposal that has yet been made along that line. We and the Methodists have a common heritage. The Methodists began as a much needed spiritual revival within the Church of England. They might never have separated from us had the English bishops of that time been a little more tolerant, instead of antagonistic. We like to talk about what we have to offer. The Methodists have something to offer too, and much to forgive. Let us face that fact and admit it. Our church has launched a campaign for evangelism; certainly a most worthy cause. The Methodists could teach us something about that. They have been evangelizing persistently for some 200 years, and they get results.

Another church with which we could easily unite is the Moravian Church. The Moravians likewise have much in common with us. They value the Sacraments. They are accustomed to a liturgical form of service. They believe in long and thorough preparation for confirmation. We would do well to imitate them in that respect. They are great missionaries. They began missionary work on the Kuskokwim River in Alaska at about the same time that we began work on the Yukon. My impression is that they were in Alaska a year or two ahead of us. Their gifts for missions are out of all proportion to their numerical strength. Their zeal in that respect should jolt us out of our complacency.

Formal proposals for union should properly come from our own Commission on Approaches to Unity; but let us not sit back and leave it all to the Commission. Let our bishops show the same courageous and forthright leadership in this matter that they showed in the matter of the Philippine Independent Church. Let the rest of us, clergy and laity, get behind this proposal for union with the Methodists and push it. Let us rally the enthusiastic, persuade the pessimistic and prod the lethargic until we get action.

(REV.) HENRY H. CHAPMAN.

ST. PAUL.

PAUL was a man who knew his God.
He therefore loved Him dearly
And set down in inspired word
His soul's experience clearly.

In thirteen letters we may scan
Of Paul, the heart and mind.
His mind keen ranging for God's plan;
His heart God's love divined.

An ample, seeing, trusting faith
In Christ Who lived and died.
A hope that pierced beyond grim death;
A charity world-wide.

This poor tormented battered "Ace",
Consumed by love for all;
Conscious of sin, but more of grace
Christ's great Apostle Paul

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Bexley Hall, The Divinity School of Kenyon College---Its Past History and Present Purpose

By DEAN CORWIN C. ROACH

Bexley Hall, the Divinity School of Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, has been training men for the Christian ministry for almost a century and a quarter. It is the oldest Church seminary west of the Atlantic seaboard and the third oldest in the entire country. Bexley is also the first seminary in the history of our Church to have associated with it in the same institution from its very founding a college of arts and sciences. Bexley came into being through the vision and sacrifice of one man, Philander Chase. Migrating to Ohio as a missionary priest in 1817 and being elected first Bishop of the infant diocese in 1818, Philander Chase found his work as Bishop hampered by a lack of clergymen, the stumbling block of missionary bishops ever since. To the diocesan convention of 1823 he wrote, "With anguish of heart inexpressible, I have been forced to see the field of God's husbandry lie waste for the want of labourers." Bishop Chase, however, was not content to let the opportunities for evangelization go by default nor to man his new parishes with inferior men. In his opinion, a judgment that more than a century has but served to confirm, the demands of the pioneer missions could be met by nothing less than the best men with the best educational background. The frontier had no place for mediocre men. Accordingly, Bishop Chase was determined to establish a school in the wilds of Ohio which would give men an academic preparation second to none. That first ideal of Ohio's pioneering bishop has remained constant in the six score years that Kenyon and Bexley have been preparing men for the ministry.

In that same year, 1823, the year which marked the founding of the Virginia Seminary at Alexandria, Bishop Chase went to England to solicit funds for his seminary. Henry Clay had provided him with letters of introduction to Admiral Lord Gambier whom Clay had met in connection with the negotiations leading to the treaty of Ghent which ended the War of 1812. Through Lord Gambier, Bishop Chase met the other early English patrons of Kenyon and Bexley, including Lord Kenyon, the Bishops of London and Durham, Sir Thomas and Lady Acland, Lady Rosse, Hannah More and Lord Bexley.

So successful was Bishop Chase's appeal for a seminary in the western wilderness that on his return to Ohio that next year he was able immediately to expand his original plan to include collegiate as well as seminary instruction. The charter of 1824 established "The Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Ohio." This association of a college and a seminary in the same institution has been of distinct mutual value. From its very beginning Bexley has had the double advantage of being a small school set in the quiet of a rural environment, but at the same time enjoying the intellectual stimulus which comes from close association with the vigorous intellectual and social activity of an undergraduate college.

Bexley students eat in a common dining hall with the Kenyon undergraduates. They mingle with them in the lounge or billiard parlor, they listen to the stated record concerts in the music room or more informally in the half-hours after meals. On such occasions they may test their budding theological wings on the perennial questions about religion that are always forthcoming from the thoughtful college student. The College gymnasium and the Shaffer swimming pool are available for the athletically disposed and the theologues have the opportunity of participating in the intramural sports. On the more serious intellectual plane, Bexley students have access to the various libraries on the Hill which have a combined total of over 103,000 volumes. Bexley is a member of the American Association of Theological Schools and requires of its entering students the pre-theological courses demanded by the Association. For men who, though college graduates, lack some of the prerequisites it is possible to supplement their collegiate preparation with work in the College. Likewise, seminarians may elect some of the more advanced College courses. All the special lectures are open to Bexley men and in particular the regular Tuesday assemblies at which the students have the opportunity to hear outstanding scholars and experts in all walks of modern life. At the same time the seminarian has the quiet and the privacy which serious study and meditation demand. Gambier, by its lack of distractions and its pleasant setting, encourages reflection.

From its first founding, Bexley has continued to emphasize thorough scholarship. The titles of the early English benefactors, Admiral Lord Gambier, Lord Kenyon and Lord Bexley, are reflected not only in the names of the village, the College and the Theological Seminary, but they are also inscribed in many of the priceless volumes in the Bexley and Kenyon libraries. From these first beginnings the library of the Seminary proper has grown to approximately 25,000 items, books and pamphlets. In 1904, Colburn Hall was built to house the collection but the Seminary has outgrown its present shelving space and is looking forward to the time when the new Kenyon library will be able to accommodate the relatively inactive but extremely valuable research material in the theological collection, keeping Colburn Hall a student reference "live" library of around 20,000 volumes.

Books are worthless, however, unless they are read and understood properly when they are read. It is here that the teaching staff must make its contribution. No school can be any better than its teachers. Bexley is fortunate in having the largest and best qualified faculty in its long history. There are eight resident instructors including two Kenyon professors who give part-time instruction in their specialties, Speech and Church Music. It is interesting to note that there are twenty-four degrees held by its members and that earned doctorates have been received from Berlin, Vienna, Harvard, Yale and Iowa, as well as Kenyon. There is thus a healthy balance in the Bexley faculty between men who have received their theological training in the institution itself and those who have been educated elsewhere in this country or abroad. The present faculty has a similar balance as respects age and maturity on the one hand and relative youth and freshness of outlook on the other. There is the same division between those whose background has been mainly academic and the other members who have had extensive parochial experience.

In addition to the resident faculty, numerous visiting lecturers and speakers come to the Hall. The two regular lectureships, the Bedell and the Easter series, during the past ten years, have brought such outstanding theologians and scholars to Gambier as S. J. Case, E. F. Scott, Henry J. Cadbury, William F. Albright among our American scholars and Richard Kroner, Jacques Maritain and V. A. Demant from overseas. Numerous speakers in the field of practical theology and social relations keep the students informed of the new movements and techniques in these areas. Classes at Bexley are small and are held in seminar rooms which encourage informal discussion between teacher and learner. The student is not told what to believe but is stimulated in clarifying his own belief. A tutorial system is designed to facilitate this process. Teacher and student are very close at Bexley.

In theological point of view Bexley has always been comprehensive. Its first outstanding scholar, Dr. Sparrow, who subsequently went to Virginia to crown his teaching career at that sister seminary, left his mark upon Gambier, as well as Alexandria. Bexley students, too, have been trained in his principle, "Seek the truth; come whence it may; cost what it will." That is the truly liberal position which is not a rigid dogma but the scholarly method of free and relentless inquiry. Historically Evangelical, Bexley is not partisan. It has been said of the late Dr. Davies, beloved professor of Systematic Theology to generations of Bexley men, that he could state the other denomination's position more clearly and fairly than its own representatives. Bexley men have been trained in that same fair-minded, inclusive scholarship. Whatever their own theological position may be, they have a reason for the faith that is in them. If there is any "Bexley stamp" it consists in this quality of firm conviction in one's own position with an understanding tolerance of the other man.

From the very start Bexley flourished and prospered because of the generous contributions from both English Evangelicals and old school High churchmen.

PRAYER FOR THE STUDENTS OF BEXLEY HALL

"Almighty, everlasting God, who hast given unction to Kings, Who didst raise up and sanctify Thy prophets, Who calledst the just; so call and choose Thy servants, the students in this Hall, that they may be good stewards in Thy Church, bestowing on them the gift of Thy Holy Spirit, granting that they may love the beauty of Thy House, and the communion of Thy Sacraments; and plant them as fruitful olive trees to bring forth the fruits of righteousness unto Christ Jesus our Lord—Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Indeed, Dr. George F. Smythe, one time Dean of Bexley and distinguished Church historian comments on Bishop Chase's efforts, "It was regarded as a remarkable result of Bishop Chase's visit to England that he brought together into harmonious cooperation men, such as Gambier and Kenyon, Gaskin and Pratt, who had previously stood apart because of difference in churchmanship." It is interesting to note that Bishop McIlvaine, second Bishop of Ohio, staunch Evangelical and close friend of Bishop Meade of Virginia, in duplicating Bishop Chase's money-raising and book-collecting efforts should have brought back to Gambier volumes from the library of Dr. Edward B. Pusey, one of the early Tractarians. In later years, in the persons respectively of Bishop Leonard on the one hand and Bishop Bedell and the present Bishop of Ohio, the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, on the other, the two great historic schools of thought and practice in our American Church, Connecticut and Virginia, have been represented at Bexley.

Along with this rich intellectual heritage of the past, Bexley retains the missionary faith of its English patrons who were concerned to promote religion and piety in the rude culture of the then primitive western frontier. Bishop Chase could speak of a "literary and religious famine" and could state, "The whole community of the western settlements are sinking fast in ignorance and its never-failing attendants vice and fanaticism." We live amid a culture which is precociously knowledgeable but without the moral insight to control an otherwise blind science. We need to raise up a ministry which will foster a saving faith in God in a world which has forgotten Him. To do this, men today must see, as did the pagans of the first century, that "These men have been with Jesus." That companionship must be fostered in the seminary. The three years in the seminary can deepen and transform the religious devotion and earnest conviction of the young men who come to it. This is of paramount importance. Accordingly, the life of Bexley revolves about the Chapel. There are daily services of Morning and Evening Prayer and the Holy Communion is celebrated on Sundays, Thursdays and feast days. There is regular faculty and student preaching. Periodic Quiet Days are held and there are informel meetings of faculty and students to discuss matters of religion. All this is not a barren routine but made a means whereby "the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church" can be made effective in the students' personal life and carried forth in all the subsequent relations of every day living. Bexley is not ashamed to say that it is training men of God in the severest sense of that phrase although it would be the first to admit that its members fall far short of the demand which Christ has laid upon His followers. Yet the only formula by which the Church can redeem a Godless world today is that by which the Church of the apostles wrought its victory. We must outthink and outlive our contemporary pagan rivals. The Seminary must be as stern and unyielding in its demands upon its students as the world will be when those students go out into it to minister to men. Bexley believes that Bishop Chase was right. Whatever the parish he may occupy, by his training and ability the minister must be able to become the "parson" of the community, a man of influence in every activity for good.

Whatever measure of effectiveness Bexley Hall, in the person of its graduates, has achieved in the past has been due in large part to the fact that it has put the cause of its Lord and His Church above selfish interest or party spirit. This is its only reason for being, the training of faithful and consecrated servants and stewards of its Lord. Bexley has taken as its ideal a spirit of devotion and self-denial, an enthusiasm for the work of the ministry, a sound, comprehensive and fearless scholarship upon the part of the faculty and students and a genuine love of people. Its motto magnanimiter crucem sustine is one which characterizes its graduates and members. Because Bexley Hall believes that the cause of Christ is paramount in the world today and because it stands dedicated to that cause it asks for the prayers and support of all who, like it, believe that in Christ alone is to be found the solution of the problems which confront an anguished world.

Student Life At Bexley Hall

By JOHN D. HUGHES

Bexley Hall opened the 1947-48 year with the largest enrollment within living memory. This marks the third year of the Seminary's return to Gambier after its combination with the Virginia Theological Seminary during the war emergency. In this short post-war period Bexley has shown a new development and growth which bids fair to surpass anything in the history of the Seminary. Like all other schools, the number of married students is disproportionaately large. Less than one-third are single which means that there is plenty of room in the Hall but accommodations for married students are at a premium. Apartment hunting is one of the major extra-curricular occupations in and around Gambier. The heavy demand for housing on the part of the married veterans attending Kenyon College creates a constant demand for every available space. Plans are under way to secure additional housing for our married veterans and it is hoped that in the near future there will be ample accommodations for all married students. At the same time we have facilities to double our present unmarried student body without inconveience.

Sixty per cent of our present enrollment are veterans, and include a cross section of the services with the added wealth of experience gained in their military training. Most of our students were employed in various civilian occupations before the war. A recent survey showed that we have in our student body former teachers, medical students, accountants, business men, and ministers of other denominations. The students are older than might be expected, the average age being slightly over twenty-eight years. This would seem to indicate that most of the men at Bexley had made their decisions to enter the ministry after long and varied experience in other fields of endeavor. It also indicates that Bexley is appealing to a type of man who is taking his vocation very seriously and is willing to make a real sacrifice of material and economic position in order to achieve the ideal of becoming an effective servant of Christ and His Church.

There is an extensive and varied extracurricular program at Bexley and the average Bexley student is frequently called upon to serve in several capacities. This often means contributing from a varied background in not only one but in several fields. It tends to make the student a sort of jack-of-all-trades and certainly helps to develop initiative and enterprise. Sometimes the going is tough with a full class schedule and home duties but our students have responded magnificently and have participated enthusiastically in the program of the Seminary. There is a spirit and a consecration among our men which expresses itself in the chapel, in the classroom and in student relations which will carry out into the dioceses and the Church at large in the years to come.

And it is expressing itself in a concrete way here at Bexley. Last spring a committee was appointed to overhaul the constitution of the Bexley Society. In addition to the usual provisions for student government, two new objectives were added: (1) to promote those activities which are designed to provide for a fuller realization of the Christian ministry and, (2) to engage as far as our means permit in furthering the missionary work of our Church. Bexley now has an energetic student government which welcomes all students to membership and participation. Most of the student activities are carried out through committees working on athletic, alumni, college relations, devotional, interseminary, missionary project, and publicity programs. Last year the Bexley students contributed to the financial support of a student at one of our other seminaries. Plans are under way to continue and enlarge the student missionary program, possibly to assist one of our Indian priests as well. The work of the Bexley men at Bedell Chapel, one of the mission stations of Harcourt Parish, Gambier, was revived and strengthened and a thriving congregation of approximately forty formerly unchurched people is now functioning. The work at Bedell was surveyed and planned under the supervision of the rector of Harcourt Parish, the Rev. R. Emmet Gribbin, and the professor of Practical Theology and Rural Work, the Rev. Dr. John R. Stalker, and carried out with the aid of student volunteers. A seminarian now conducts regular services at Bedell Chapel as well as performing pastoral functions. Plans are under way to survey another unchurched area with the possibility of establishing a mission there.

Bexley is also an important link in the Central Region of the Interseminary Movement. A delegation of four men represented the Seminary at the Interseminary Conference at Oxford, Ohio, last June. Harry W. Vere, president of the Bexley Society, was recently elected president of the Central Region of the Interseminary Movement, representing twelve denominational seminaries in six states. Another delegation of four men represented Bexley at the conference of the Central Region held at Eden Seminary at Webster Groves, Missouri, last October. The Rev. Dr. O. J. F. Seitz, of our faculty, was one of the principal speakers at this conference, speaking on "The Nature of the Church." It is interesting to note that Bexley was host to the Interseminary Regional Conference held in Gambier last spring. The strategic location of our Seminary enables us to play a large part in the Interseminary Movement in the Central Region and enables the seminarian to gain a grasp of the problems confronting us in the way of Christian Unity.

More and more of our students are availing themselves of the opportunity to gain actual field experience in the work of the ministry. This past sum-

Bishop Beverley D. Tucker and Dean Roach

A Vital Seminary

By The RT. REV. BEVERLEY D. TUCKER
Bishop of Ohio

Bexley Hall, the Divinity School of Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio, is today a vital and flourishing theological seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church. A decade ago, a familiar statement in the consideration of theological education was that we had too many seminaries, and Bexley Hall, with a reduced faculty and student body, seemed to some to offer a convenient starting point for this pruning process. Today Bexley Hall has increased its faculty to six full-time members, with the addition of two Kenyon professors who give part-time instruction in the seminary. Moreover, the student body has, with the influx of returned service men, secured an encouraging increase in numbers, as well as an improvement in the maturity and academic preparation of its members.

Historically, Kenyon College with its two departments of the college of arts and sciences and of the theological seminary, has been the fount of spiritual life of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Ohio. The founding of the educational institution was almost contemporary with the organization of the diocese. For approximately a century and a quarter, Kenyon College has prepared men for the ministry, trained lay leaders, and furnished a rallying point for Church loyalty and for training in Christian idealism.

Dean Roach in his comprehensive statement has presented the positive contributions which Bexley Hall has made in the past and is endeavoring to make to the life of the Episcopal Church in the present. I would emphasize two points, which give this seminary a claim upon the interest and support of churchmen. First, Kenyon College at Gambier and the University of the South at Sewanee are the only two educational foundations of the Protestant Episcopal Church which are carrying on the experiment of combining education in the liberal arts and in theology in the same institution. While, of course, the methods are quite different, yet the principle is the same as that which prevails at the English universities, Oxford and Cambridge, where the Honour School of Theology is an integral part of the University curriculum.

Secondly, Bexley Hall has furnished in the Midwest a theological school for training indigenous clergy to minister to the conditions of great industrial communities as well as to the smaller towns of this area. Moreover, while this Midwestern seminary is comprehensive in its churchmanship and fosters loyalty to the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church, it still manifests in its corporate life something of the evangelical spirit stamped upon it by its first two episcopal leaders, Philander Chase and Charles Pettit McIlvaine.

The generosity of The Southern Churchman in providing the opportunity for Bexley Hall to present its claims to its readers naturally suggests the historical associations that have existed between Kenyon College and the Virginia Theological Seminary. It was from the presidency of Kenyon College that the Reverend Doctor William Sparrow went to the Virginia Seminary to become its noted theological teacher in 1841. Also in later periods Kenyon gave to Virginia as members of its faculty the Reverend Doctor John J. McElhinney and the Reverend Doctor C. Sturges Ball. On the other hand, two Bishops of the Diocese of Ohio, Bedell and the present Bishop, have been graduates of the Virginia Seminary and, by an odd coincidence, both were consecrated to this office in St. Paul's Church, Richmond.

Again, during the Civil War, some of the northern students who withdrew from the Virginia Seminary went, I have heard it stated, to Gambier. In reciprocation, when Bexley Hall found it expedient on account of a reduced student body, to suspend its instruction at Gambier during the second world war, Dean Roach and a small group of students from Bexley Hall were given hospitality at the Virginia Seminary. Today both Bexley Hall and the Virginia Seminary stand upon the threshold of a new era of service in training men for the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Each has a strong faculty; each has a student body strengthened in quality and quantity. Both alike, however, need the generous support of the laity of the Church, if these theological seminaries are to be adequately equipped to meet the opportunity which is offered to them to give well trained leaders to the Church.

mer two of our men served in the mission fields of our Church as student field workers. One man worked in the Magdalen Islands of the Diocese of Quebec and the other in the Whitefish Mission Field of Montana. Two of our entering students performed field work in the small-town mission areas of Ohio and Western Michigan. Three men supplied vacant parishes and missions as student-preachers during the summer months. One of our men is serving as college chaplain to the Episcopal students at Denison University, Granville, Ohio, as well as conducting regular services at our Church there. Another, a deacon in Holy Orders, is conducting regular services at St. John's Episcopal Church, Cambridge, Ohio. All of the morning chapel services in the Seminary are conducted by members of the student body. Students preach once each week at the evening services. Accordingly, there is a definite emphasis upon the practical and teaching aspects of the ministry. Also, because of the close association between students, the religious and devotional contribution of each student does a great deal to encourage the men to develop a fellowship of the spirit which will parallel the purely practical aspects of theological education.

Bexley students have been active in stressing the needs of theological education and the claims of the Christian ministry. A series of student deputations have been representing the Seminary in the parishes of alumni and friends, continuing a practice which was begun last year. On these "Bexley Sundays" the students conduct the services, preach sermons on theological education, and explain the program of the Seminary in training men for the ministry. We are planning to carry out this program on a larger scale this year with an increased emphasis on presenting the claims of the ministry to college and university students. Plans are under way to carry out this program both on the parish level and in the numerous colleges in Ohio.

The atmosphere among the student body here at Bexley is best shown by the interest of the men in those activities not directly associated with the classroom. In addition to the interseminary program, summer field work, and student deputations, a weekly discussion group regularly meets at the home of one of the professors to discuss the Christian implications of current problems. Last year this group, under the direction of a student moderator, reviewed "Christianity Takes a Stand," as well as the five volumes of the Interseminary Series. This last fall the group discussed and reviewed a series of articles on "Social Rebirth," by Dr. Vida Scudder, which appeared in one of the Church magazines. These meetings are closed with a period of prayer and meditation and thus are both in-structual and inspirational in character.

The addition of a recording machine which enables the students to record their voices on a wire tape has aided the students to iron out their speaking and sermonic delivery. And frequently, students are observed practicing on this machine in an effort towards self-improvement.

Typical of the attitude of the present Bexley student is the interest in learning the sign language of the deaf in order to carry on conversations with one of our students who is a deaf-mute. Our students have shown a real interest in this man who is preparing for work among the deaf. Almost half of our men are now proficient in the sign language and able to make this student feel at home. Another of our students came to the Seminary with a degree in music. He has taken over the duties of chapel organist, greatly improving the quality of the music at our services. Weekly choir rehearsals are held with a full attendance of students and faculty, thus improving the quality of the chapel singing. The roster of students this year shows men coming from as far west as Iowa and as far east as New York. In addition to the two dioceses in Ohio, there are men from nine other dioceses of our Church. With men from Delaware, New York and Pennsylvania we have among our student body a group of men more representative of the Church at large.

We have excellent facilities for the education and training of men for the ministry. Every student becomes well acquainted with every other student and there is more of a family atmosphere than an institutional one. There are no cliques of students among our student body. Every one feels perfectly welcome in any other student's room and frequently these exchanges of ideas produce some mutually beneficial results. Also, there are excellent dormitory facilities. Each student living in the Hall has a large well-lighted and well-heated room, which gives the privacy necessary for serious study and meditation. The large library which adjoins the Hall enables the student to have frequent access to original sources and to pursue any particular field of endeavor to his heart's content. Close and frequent contact with the faculty furnishes ample opportunity for tutorial guidance. Each week a student spends one hour with a faculty tutor during which the student is privileged to discuss any problem whether of an academic or of a personal nature. The unmarried students eat with the College men at the College Commons. The Bexley table offers us an opportunity for fellowship at meals and frequently visiting bishops and lecturers join us at the table as our guests.

Bexley is well equipped to play an important part in the forward growth of the Church. There is every facility here for a man to gain a splendid education and grounding for the Christian ministry. Whether we shall serve as a "replacement center" for the parishes of our Church is a question which lies squarely on the people who furnish our clergymen. The alumni, friends and students of Bexley are determined that the life and work of the Seminary shall go forward. No one need deny himself the opportunity of following his vocation or be forced to postpone his seminary career because of lack of means, overcrowding, et cetera, if he is seriously interested.

Before us there lies a period of great achievement. The great need for adequately trained and academically prepared clergy is a vital issue which is close at hand. Bexley Hall stands ready to use every resource at its command to answer this challenge.

A New Frontier In Theological Education

In the training of men for the ministry, any seminary has a two-fold task. There is, first of all, the basic instruction in the traditional subjects of Old and New Testament, Church History and Systematic Theology and such related subjects as Hebrew, Greek, Ethics, Moral Theology, Polity, Canon Law and Liturgics. Secondly, there is the practical application of these historic disciplines to the work of the actual ministry. A seminary must awaken its students to contemporary needs and give them the academic and practical knowledge necessary to meet those needs. In the latter category we might mention courses in Pastoral Care, Parish Administration, Homiletics, Religious Education, Missions, Church Music and Speech. There must be a synthesis between the heritage of the past and the demands of the present. Historically Bexley Hall is the product of such a union. It began with the needs of the parish clergyman and missionary minister very much to the fore.

Although always a relatively small seminary, Bexley has sent out over six hundred ministers into every area and phase of the Church's activity. Many of these have arisen to positions of leadership in the Church at home and abroad. Its graduates who have become bishops have administered dioceses which span the country as well as foreign jurisdictions in Mexico, Japan and China. If possible, however, the Seminary is prouder of the graduates who have served in the lonely and difficult missionary outposts, or in the ordinary parishes, both large and small. Bexley has been concerned to prepare its graduates as thoroughly as possible for the pastoral ministry.

During the past century the wilderness has disappeared and the Church's frontier has ceased to be geographical. The middle west from being pioneer country has become the agricultural and industrial heart of the nation. Bexley's function has changed with the shifting scene. The geographical area which the Seminary now serves has developed two types of culture, urban and rural. On the one hand there is the industrial black belt stretching from Pittsburgh to Detroit and on the other the open country, the green belt beginning with the rich farm lands of central Ohio and reaching out to the Rockies. The ministries which go into these areas must be trained in their problems and opportunities.

During the twenties, Bexley was conscious of the need for practical field work to supplement the class room instruction. Under Dean Samuel A. B. Mercer and subsequently Dean Frederick C. Grant the first steps were taken which resulted eventually in the establishment of the Graduate School of Applied Religion. Like the other seminaries of the Church, Bexley was affected by the depression of the thirties and the upheavals caused by the war during the first part of the forties. In this period, however, new leadership came to the Hall. In particular, Dr. Gordon Keith Chalmers became President of Kenyon College in 1937; the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker assumed his duties as Bishop of Ohio in 1938 and Professor Corwin C. Roach was called to the Deanship in 1942. The past decade has been a time of careful appraisal and planning. In May, 1943, a conference was held at Gambier under the joint auspices of Kenyon and Bexley and the Home Department of the National Council. The next year a Board of Fellows was created to advise and counsel the Trustees of Kenyon College in regard to the work of the Hall. Out of these various meetings came two recommendations, that the regular instruction in Practical Theology be strengthened and supplemented, in particular by stressing practical externe work, and that Bexley devote special attention to recruiting and training a town and country ministry. The decision to establish a new chair of Practical Theology and Rural Work at Bexley was the first important result of these conferences. Bexley Hall is now able to give that specialized training in the work of the rural ministry which its historic century-old tradition, its strategic location and its present equipment render it eminently fitted to do.

Beginning as a diocesan seminary, Bexley has remained under the immediate supervision of the two Bishops in Ohio, the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker of the Diocese of Ohio and the Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson of Southern Ohio. Its missionary outlook, however, has never been confined to Ohio or even to the middle west. At the present time, students from eleven dioceses are enrolled, including Delaware, Erie, Indianapolis, Michigan, Newark, Ohio, Rochester, Southern Ohio, Western Michigan, Western New York and Western North Carolina. The creation of the Bexley Board of Fellows made up, among others, of thirteen bishops of the Church was a recognition of the national scope of Bexley activities. The Board has met regularly since it was first convened in 1944 and has been of invaluable assistance in drawing up plans for the new Bexley program. As present constituted, it consists of the following members: the Rt. Rev. Lane W. Barton, the Rt. Rev. Charles Clingman, the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, the Rt. Rev. Richard S. M. Emrich, the Rt. Rev. Goodrich R. Fenner, the Rev. Frederick C. Grant, the Rt. Rev. Elwood L. Haines, the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, the Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, the Rt. Rev. Richard A. Kirchhoffer, the Rt. Rev. Herman R. Page, the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, and the Rt. Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore.

Bexley regards it as very important that the training of the rural ministry should not be isolated from general ministerial preparation. The town and country cannot be divorced from the city. There is a continual migration to the larger centers and a smaller but important compensating return. This latter will bulk larger in the future to the extent that industry becomes decentralized. A student, therefore, must be trained not for the rural ministry but for a ministry in the rural area. That means with his specialization he must also have the same thorough academic and practical training as his fellow students, including a knowledge of urban as well as rural life. It means, also, that the student who desires to devote himself to a city ministry should have a corresponding acquaintance with the problems of his small town colleagues.

In addition to the previous instruction in the field of Social Ethics and Social Work a series of courses have been put into the Seminary curriculum dealing with the sociology of the town and country area, the specific problems and opportunities of the rural ministry, the available helps and techniques. These courses are open to all students. Supplementing the class instruction, Bedell Chapel, one of the rural missions of Harcourt Parish, has been taken over by the students under the supervision of the professor of Practical Theology and Rural Work and the rector of Harcourt Parish. A preliminary survey was conducted and regular services and activities including a flourishing Church School were undertaken. Similar missionary projects will be developed in the future.

Even more important is the summer training of seminarians. Bexley students have taken part in various types of clinical training, including work in hospitals and mental institutions. They have done supervised field work. During the past summer, for example, men were engaged in mission work under Seminary direction in Ohio, Michigan, Montana and Labrador. The town and country work, particularly in the dioceses in Ohio, will serve increasingly as a training ground for the students.

In helping develop supervisors and giving supplemental instruction to clergymen already engaged in rural work, conferences are being held in Gambier under the auspices of the resident Bexley staff. Lecturers who are recognized specialists in the various phases of rural life are being invited to take part. When a student graduates from Bexley he will have been introduced to the needs of the town and country field. He may be interested to make it his life's work or devote the first years of his ministry to such frontier service. In such a case, he will enter upon his ministry not as an untrained novice but as as experienced practitioner who has the requisite technical knowledge and practical skill gained from the class room and from actual service in the field. At the very least, if he takes up his ministry in the city, he will have an intelligent appreciation of this important part of the Church's mission.

A Middle Way In Church-State Separation

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The health of democracy usually requires the cultivation of the "middle way" against extremes.

This is true in the realm of purely political theory; for a too rigorous devotion to liberty destroys equal justice and a too uncritical devotion to equality tends to destroy liberty. In the same way the problem of the relation of religion to public life and education requires the cultivation of the middle way.

The middle way must be preserved against those who would try to establish a religious monopoly on the one hand and against those who would secularize our education and culture on the other hand, because they are afraid that every state support of religion bears the peril of religious monopoly.

Our First Amendment declares that "Congress shall pass no laws respecting the establishment of religion or the suppression thereof. It does not prohibit the state support of religious life insofar as such support can be given with complete impartiality to all groups.

It is of course not easy to achieve such impartiality in a nation as heterogeneous in religion as our own. But we ought not to assume either that it is impossible or that it would be a violation of the Constitution.

It is rather surprising how many Protestants in America, fearful of giving Catholics some special advantage, adopt the position of extreme secularists on the question of religious instruction in public education. They assume that the only "democratic" solution of the problem of Church and State is the rigorous separation of the two which we know in America. They do not seem to realize that the more rigorous the separation the more secular becomes our culture.

It is worth pointing out that there are some fairly healthy democracies in Europe, including Great Britain, Switzerland, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, all of which give a greater degree of State support to religious institutions, educational and otherwise, than we do.

Great Britain recently adopted a new educational bill which reversed the tendency toward secularized public education and introduced religious instruction in public schools, on terms which do full justice to varying traditions.

Some of these countries are more homogeneous than we are. But even the nations which are very pluralistic religiously have found a way of relating religious and public life more intimately than we. The rigor of our separation is, in other words, not an ideal solution.

There is no ideal solution for this perplexing problem. From the democratic standpoint the only wrong solution is

National Theological Education Sunday

One Sunday a year has been set aside by the Church and designated by the Presiding Bishop as a time to consider theological education, the proper training of men for the ministry. It is particularly fitting that the Sunday nearest to the feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, January 25, be set apart for this purpose. St. Paul appears to us from the pages of the New Testament to be the most zealous, the best trained, the most missionary minded, the hardest working and the most effective among the first apostles. There may well be a connection among these various superlatives.

St. Paul's first quality was enthusiasm. He tells us that he was advanced in knowledge of the ancestral religion beyond many of his own age. Theological Education Sunday is first of all a challenge to the young men in our colleges and universities who are alive to the problems of the day that they give serious consideration to the Christian ministry as their life work. We need men of St. Paul's ability and first rate qualifications for our modern ministry.

A graduate of one of our large universities, now in the ministry, looking back upon his college class of twenty years ago, found that less than three per cent went into Church work, either as ministers or in associated fields. Our leadership in the immediate past has been proportionately influential. Yet if society is to survive, Christianity must make more than a three per cent dent upon the sin and evil in the world. How great a dent it will make depends upon the young men in high school and college today, and what they will do with their lives.

The Church can be content with no less than the best. The challenge to the Christian ministry is greater than for centuries, as great as in apostolic times. In the second place, however, the Church must give these men the best preparation possible to meet the rigorous demands of modern life. The world will not be content with a glib dogmatism or a half-thought out, parroted faith. Our ministry must measure up. Like St. Paul, the modern parson must be able to bring to bear historic truth upon contemporary needs and to do it in the spirit of Christ.

The seminaries of the Church, which are our training schools, must be adequately staffed, equipped and financed. We are told that a nation gets the kind of government it deserves. The same thing is true of the Christian ministry. Its effectiveness depends directly upon the laity. To the extent that the man in the pew is aware of the demands upon the ministry and the corresponding necessity for proper training and his own responsibility for furnishing that training, will the man in the pulpit fulfill those demands.

What are the areas where the Church's ministration is needed? We think, first of all, and quite rightly, of the mission overseas. Even before the war we were drawing in our lines. Now we need to advance forward. Whether Japan will become a Christian nation, and what kind of Christianity it will espouse, will be decided in the next few years. The same thing can be said for the East as a whole, indeed the entire foreign field.

Some of the foreign areas where Christ has not penetrated, however, are right here in our midst. There are the slums of our large city, the blighted areas of the sharecropper and migrant worker but there are the equally important religious and spiritual slums which are often found in the midst of great material advantage.

Part of our modern frontier and foreign field is to be found in the secular colleges and university centers, in the rural communities which today are experiencing an unequalled boom prosperity, in "Suburbia," in all the realms, too, of personal, social and industrial relations made more acute by the dislocations caused by the war. We need men who can minister in all these sore spots of our contemporary life and reclaim them for Christ. One Sunday a year is not too much to consider the choice and preparation of our future ministry.

EVANGELISM TODAY

Since the beginning of time, all through history, civilization has suffered these tragic crises periods that threatened to destroy it. But God has had ready always some mighty heroic leader to take over the situation and restore order, peace, and righteousness.

Let us go back to the days of Abraham, Moses, David, and all those grand Old Testament Heroes, Back to the days of our Blessed Lord and His disciples and followers. Note how they took hold of those tragic periods and turned them into great religious movements, to bless and to create a new and better world; and created rules and regulations to govern humanity which became the laws of the land for all eternity—The TEN COMMANDMENTS for instance.

Out of the present World Conflict from which we are just emerging, the Church is beginning a great new Religious Movement. Its aim is to evangelize the world in this generation. It is a powerful undertaking, but all things are possible with God.

Let us all join the Movement and heartily cooperate with our great Leaders and "Fight the good fight with all our might."

SOME SUGGESTIONS ON HOW TO LIVE WELL.

1. Attend faithfully to life's normal responsibilities and duties.

2. Take time for counsel and give place to reason before following through on decisions.

3. Make light of your own problems, difficulties and sacrifices.

4. Maintain a sense of humor.

5. Let there be no hate of persons in anything you think, or say, or do.

6. Do not impute selfish motives to those who differ with you in what they conceive to be right or their compelling duty.

7. Hold fast to regular habits of prayer and worship which renew the soul, strengthen the mind and keep one morally fit.

8. Be a regular attendant upon the worship services of the church.

9. Learn to surmount fears with faith and to conquer rumors with reason.

10. Forget not that you are an ambassador for Christ to live and work for peace and Christian brotherhood.

11. Pray for the peace and unity of the Church.

12. Let your contribution to the Kingdom be a life that follows closely the Christ, Who "went about doing good."

CXIX

The Sermon

Before passing from the subject of the sermon it is worth our while to remind preachers of the consolation that we find in the book of the Acts, and that comes to us from the account of Saint Paul's missionary activities.

Thus in Acts 16 verse 13 we read "And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down and spake unto the women which resorted thither." This was Paul's first service in Europe and it appears that there were no men in the congregation. As one looks over Lenten congregations or Bible study groups, and observes the large predominance of women, and the scarcity of men it is some consolation to remember that such distinguished Christian leaders as Paul and Luke could not get the men to attend their services. Sometimes people say "The church is losing out. Nobody attends but women." It is no new situation and the church has survived for nearly two thousand years in spite of that fact.

Again in Acts 20 verse 9 we read "And there sat in a window a certain young nam· named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep; and as Paul was long preaching he sank down with sleep and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead." This might seem like a solemn warning to persons not to go to sleep during the sermon. But it also has its consoling side for the preacher, because it tells us that Paul was the first preacher on the record to put a member of his congregation to sleep. It is true that Saint Luke very politely tries to put the blame on the lighting system, saying "There were many lights in the upper chamber where they were gathered together." But as a usual thing light does more to keep one awake than to induce slumber.

It reminds us of the occasion when a minister saw a man so sound asleep in the front pew that he was afraid he would fall out on the floor, and leaned forward and said to the man beside him "Wake that man up, I'm afraid he will fall out of his seat." The prompt reply came, "Wake him up yourself. You put him to sleep."

When we see one nodding in the congregation we can say to ourselves "Paul did it too," and not feel so badly.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

That blessing from above;
Ceasing to give we cease to have,
Such is the law of Love.

A WELL WORN PATH TO OUR DOOR

As I was driving through snowy rural New England the other day this idea came to me. I have been around this circuit during all seasons of the year. I know the houses, the farms and the country estates. I have walked by many of them on Sunday afternoons. It was always interesting to see the homes where you could count on a yard full of people, yards with horses and buggies, and now with cars. These were the homes with a well worn path to their doors. As it is many miles from my home I do not know them personally but one can picture the family life that they have. Their door is open and used. In the winter it is more apt to be the back door that is dug out. After many inches of snow paths to the back door, the hens, the barns and corn cribs are the first to be dug.

Just yesterday I heard of another use of a backyard and hospitality. There is a backyard which is next to an apartment house which is filled with mothers with small children. There is no backyard except the lady's next door. Here she has placed chairs, a folding table, a bucket full of ice just inside her door for cool drinks. The mothers bring out their play pens and place their darlings in them. Noisy or quiet it does not matter. This is a yard shared by all. Would you like to look in to see it?

Once I was doing some calling for my mother for the Red Cross. I visited in one house. The maid ushered me into the living room. It was furnished with early Colonial furniture. Frankly I felt that I was sitting in a room of the kind of furniture in a museum. There was no more feeling of personal warmth or sense of being lived in than a show room has.

With all this talk about Evangelism perhaps one way in which you who have homes can do something about it. It seems to me that we must get back to using our homes more. Starting with our own family and friends and other people who need to visit in a home. Around our own hearths we could talk a little about what we read and hear. The nicest kind of evening is just this.

Let us create friendliness so that people will come to our path, to our door. People are lonely. They need friendship. Thty need to feel a part of a family circle.

Let us see if we can open up our "backyard" to welcome those who need one. This is where Evangelism starts. Evangelism is like charity, it starts at home.

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM HELD FOR MANHATTAN CLERGY

New York, N. Y.—A combined conference and retreat on the Presiding Bishop's Plan for Evangelism was held for the clergy of Manhattan Parishes on January 8-9, at All Angels' Farm, near Suffern, New York.

Under the leadership of the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, rector of Calvary Church, New York, an intensive and invigorating two days was spent together by a representative group of the city's clergy, with results that were felt to be most stimulating and encouraging by all who were present. Dr. Shoemaker is chairman of the Manhattan Committee for Evangelism, and author of the Presiding Bishop's Lenten Book Selection: "Revive Thy Church, Beginning With Me."

The Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, D. D.; bishop of New York, and the Rt. Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D. D., suffragan bishop, were present to participate in the conference. The Deans of Convocations had been invited as well, to assist in the formulation of plans and to carry back to their own meetings, which have been planned, steps which might help in giving a unifying approach to the diocesan plan.

The opening service and meditation were conducted by the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, rector of St. Philip's Church. His thought centered upon the place of the beginning of evangelism, in the personal life and witness of the individual priest. This was also the theme of the first period of leadership under Dr. Shoemaker. From this beginning, the group proceeded to deal with the methods of evangelism to other individuals; the opportunity in prayer cells; the methods of evangelism in the parish; and the definite steps through which Manhattan parishes will carry out the plan of the Church as outlined by the Presiding Bishop.

The Rt. Rev. H. W. B. Donegan led the discussion upon a Rule of Life. He emphasized the need of such a rule in which personal devotion, greater self-sacrifice and discipline, and a deeper and frequent participation in the Sacramental Life of the Church were all involved. The group then devoted its effort to the formulation of a Rule of Life, with specific suggestions for its observance, applicable to the lives of both clergy and laity.

The evening meditation in preparation for the Sacrament of Holy Communion was given by the Rev. James Green, Canon Precentor of the Cathedral.

The bare details of such a meeting cannot transmit the value in terms of unity of heart and mind, and hopefulness for the Church, which come out of such meetings. That was felt to be a most encouraging beginning. The next meeting of Manhattan clergy was planned to be held at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, on January 19.

REV. ARNOLD M. LEWIS SPEAKER FOR MISSION STUDY CLASS January 27.

Richmond, Va.—The Executive Director of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Rev. Arnold M. Lewis, will be the speaker at the joint mission study class of the five centrally located Richmond Episcopal Churches on Tuesday, Jan. 27, from 10:30 A. M.-3 P. M., in Grace and Holy Trinity Church.

In the position of director since March, 1946, Mr. Lewis combines a background of lay activities and over five years of active duty as a Chaplain in the Army of the United States.

A graduate of Williston Academy, Springfield College, and the Virginia Theological Seminary, with work also at the General Theological Seminary and Union Theological Seminary, Mr. Lewis had a wide and varied experience in the military service. Serving in this country as Chaplain of the Reception Center, Camp Upton, New York and for two years as Regimental Chaplain of the 176th (1st Virginia) Infantry, he was sent overseas to the Persian Gulf Command. This tour of duty included extensive travel in the Middle East, including the Holy Land. Later he served in the Army Transport Service at the New York Port of Embarkation and as Transport Chaplain on the USAT "Boschfontein." He is a member of the Chaplains' Association and the Reserve Officers Association of the United States.

The Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, of which Mr. Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., is Chairman, is a movement in the Episcopal Church to encourage men in the work and worship of the Church. In existence since 1942, the Committee has had much to do with the renewed interest and activity on the part of laymen.

Mr. Lewis was formerly rector of St. Mark's Church, Westhampton Beach, Long Island. Before entering the ministry he had been Director of Young People's Work at the Community Church, Miami Beach, Florida, and later Director of Communities Activities, Sag Harbor, New York.

The five churches participating in the joint study class are St. Paul's, All Saints', Grace and Holy Trinity, Holy Comforter and St. James' churches.

The class will be held on Tuesday, Jan. 27, from 10:30 A. M. to 3 P. M. at Grace and Holy Trinity Church.

Box lunches are to be taken by those attending. Coffee will be served. Mrs. Mason White is the general chairman.

DEANS OF SEMINARIES MEET

Washington, D. C.—Gathering under the auspices of the General Convention's Joint Commission on Theological Education, the deans of the Church's Seminaries met at the College of Preachers in Washington, December 29-31. All of the eleven seminaries were represented by their deans, excepting the Bishop Payne Divinity School, which sent Professor Edgar C. Young in place of Dean Goodwin. This was the first formal gathering of the leaders of the theological schools since the recent changes in their leadership, which included the Very Rev. Lawrence Rose as Dean of the General Seminary, and the Very Rev. Percy L. Urban, who succeeded him as Dean of Berkeley; the Very Rev. William H. Nes as Dean of Nashotah House; the Very Rev. Robert F. Gibson as Dean of the School of Theology at Sewanee. Dean Henry H. Shires, of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, presided.

Among the various matters on the agenda, that receiving first attention was the proposed revision of The Syllabus for Theological Studies, which is soon to be issued by the Joint Commission on Theological Education. This Syllabus, which is commonly used by seminary faculties, theological students and examining chaplains in the various dioceses as a guide to training and examinations, has been under revision for the past several years. The final draft was studied in detail by the deans, along with written criticisms which had been submitted by members of various boards of examining chaplains and seminary faculties. Recommendations were made to the Joint Commission and the Syllabus will now go to an editing committee before it is presented to the Commission for adoption at its next meeting this spring.

The deans gave particular attention to the problem of the Church's need for additional clergy and discussed in detail the very serious questions presented by statistics which were brought to their attention from the Joint Commission's reports. Of particular interest was the fact that less than 65% of the candidates for the Episcopal Ministry in recent years have come from members of the Episcopal Church; that the capacity of our present seminaries in presenting men for ordination is less than 200 candidates per year; that, in the five year period of 1940—45, only 625 new candidates were ordained, while in the same period, 825 clergymen were withdrawn from the ministry either by retirement or death; and that this year, under abnormal conditions and with most of the seminaries operating beyond their normal capacity, there are but 534 regular students in the Church's eleven seminaries. Specific action arising from considerations of this problem was the unanimous request that the Joint Commission on Theologicasl Education secure from reliable and competent sources statistical information as to the future needs of ordained personnel in the years ahead.

Alarming Lack of Clergy

Particular attention was paid to information revealing an alarming lack of clergy, especially in the domestic missionary dioceses where clergy turnover appears at an increasing rate. All the seminaries appeared ready and anxious to prepare men particularly for the domestic missionary field, but felt that they are seriously handicapped in fulfilling this vital function by the disparity existing between remuneration in the established dioceses, or even foreign missionary dioceses, and that in the domestic field. A strong desire was expressed that consideration be given to an equalization on this score, perhaps through the development of a policy which would place domestic missionaries on the same basis of salary and other remuneration as has been the policy with overseas missionaries for some years. Such a plan would provide for regular salary increases in terms of years of service, additional allowances for married men and special allowances for each child, increasing as they advance in school age, as well as a proper provision for medical care and adequate and regular vacations.

Another item considered was the matter of psychiatric examinations as a prerequisite for candidates for the ministry. The deans expressed unanimous opinion that it is imperative that psychiatric examinations be given all men before entering a seminary of our Church and expressed the hope that the Canon on Medical Examinations for Postulants be so interpreted by all dioceses.

Among other matters considered was the question of pre-theological studies for college men who are considering the ministry as a vocation and the deans strongly recommended the bulletin on this subject prepared by the American Association of Theological Schools, a revision of which is now in preparation.

A strong desire for inter-seminary co-operation was expressed by all. To this end a series of conferences for faculty members of the various seminaries was recommended with specific plans being made for a meeting to be held in the near future of the several professors of New Testament. The deans also expressed the wish "to go on record as heartily approving the meetings of the students of the various seminaries of our Church and in their participation in the wider inter-seminary movement.

In their consideration of theological curriculum, the subject of Clinical Training received particular attention. While the deans enthusiastically supported Clinical Training as an important part of the modern seminary education, they pointed out that "in any program of field training, the most important factor is the closeness and quality of supervision in active cooperation with seminary authorities." In connection with specific projects, they expressed the desire to commend the training centers for rural work under the direction of the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, associate secretary of the Division of Domestic Missions of the National Council, as well as that of the Council for Clinical Training and of the Institute for Pastoral Care. The conviction was also expressed that clinical training should be accomplished in the summer period in order to avoid any encroachment on academic disciplines.

The deans plan to come together again at the next meeting of the Joint Commission on Theological Education, to be called some time in the spring.

NEW PRESIDENT HOBART AND WILLIAM SMITH COLLEGES

Geneva, N. Y.—Alan Willard Brown, assistant to the dean and chairman of the Committee on Admissions of Columbia College of Columbia University, has been named president of The College of the Seneca (Hobart and William Smith Colleges), according to an announcement on Jan. 12, by the Rt. Rev. Bartel H. Reinheimer, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the colleges. Dr. Brown will take office at the end of the current college year.

He succeeds the late John Milton Potter, who died January 9, 1947. Dr. Brown becomes the 17th president of Hobart in its 125-year history.

DEVELOPMENTS AFFECTING BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL

Boston, Mass.—Asking that the National Council postpone for an indefinite period the expenditure of funds allocated for the rehabilitation of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, the Trustees of the American Church Institute ask the National Council to appoint a new "impartial committee of the Church to consider and recommend to the Council how and where the Episcopal Church in the United States should train Negro candidates for its ministry."

The Trustees called the attention of National Council to the fact that there have been "important recent developments affecting the Bishop Payne Divinity School; no candidates for the ministry have entered the school for the current session; feeling against segregation of students for the ministry, and the Presiding Bishop's expressed belief that a change in plans is indicated."

Complete Text of Resolution Follows

Whereas, there have been a number of important recent developments affecting the Bishop Payne Divinity School including:

1. No candidates for the ministry have entered the school in the current season;
2. There has been an intensification of the feeling against segregation of students intending to enter the ministry, with increasing adverse publicity;
3. The Presiding Bishop, who is also President of the American Church Institute for Negroes, during a recent visit to the Bishop Payne School reached the conclusion that it would be most unwise to make a substantial capital expenditure at the present location of the school, and advised the school officials accordingly;

Now, therefore, be it resolved, That the Trustees of the American Church Institute for Negroes recommend to the National Council that the Council take appropriate action to the end of

A. Postponing for an indefinite period the expenditure of the funds heretofore allocated for construction and equipment incident to the rehabilitation of the Bishop Payne Divinity School; and

B. Appointment by the Presiding Bishop of a new impartial committee of the Church to consider and recommend to the Council how and where the Episcopal Church in the United States should train Negro candidates for its ministry.

And be it further resolved, that, in the event the National Council decides to postpone for an indefinite period the expenditures of the funds allocated to the Bishop Payne Divinity School, the Institute recommends to the Council that the Institute be authorized to invest said funds and to use the revenue therefrom for scholarship and other grants in aid of Negro candidates for the Episcopal Ministry incident to their attendance at any approved divinity school.

The Institute Trustees passed another resolution directing its treasurer not to disburse any funds in hand or in any funds allocated from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund to the Bishop Payne School, until authorized specifically to do so at some later date.

COMMITTEE ON LAYMEN'S WORK ANNUAL MEETING

Greenwich, Conn.—Meeting for the first time at Seabury House, the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work held its annual meeting on the 8th and 9th of January. Considered by those present to be the most significant meeting ever held by the Committee, only one member of the Committee was unable to attend. Bishop Sherrill spent the entire time with the group. Those present were: Mr. Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., chairman; the Rev. Messrs. Arnold M. Lewis, executive director; Frederick A. McDonald, associate director; Messrs. William H. Bulkeley, chairman, First Province; W. Dexter Wilson, chairman, Second Province; Guy Little, representing the Third Province; W. Ted Gannaway, chairman, Fourth Province; Harold W. Whinfield, chairman, Fifth Province; George D. Wilson, chairman, Seventh Province; John C. F. Merrifield, representing the Eight Province; Samuel S. Schmidt, President, Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Thomas P. Rabbage, President, Laymen's League; Edward T. Gushee, President, National Guild of Churchmen; Oscar W. Ehrhorn, Member-at-Large; Robert S. Bloomer, Member-at-Large; and Captain Earl Estabrook, Church Army.

Addressing the group, the Presiding Bishop stated that "We are committed to a more personal, enthusiastic, and vital ministry and I think that we can only accomplish that by giving our laity a sense of spiritual mission. We have failed to give our laity a sense of spiritual responsibility. As I understand it, in the discipleship of Christ every baptized person is a missionary of Christ. This means sharing the best we have with others. If we can only stir our lay people to this sense of personal mission then we can make a dent on the half of the people in this country that are not connected with any Church. I am encouraged. We are not moving rapidly, but I honestly think we are moving."

One of the outstanding reports was given in a panel discussion by Mr. Frank G. Atkinson, chairman, diocese of Newark. Laymen's Work was started in Newark under the stimulation of the Presiding Bishop's Committee. The diocese has been so well-organized and has made such a contribution to the life of the diocese that it has become a model for dioceses that are in the process of organizing.

The Executive Director reported that 69 dioceses and missionary districts have some form of laymen's program at the present time. He stated that one objective of the committee must be to create a sense of team play between the clergy and the laity. He paid a compliment to the part that laymen have been playing and are playing in the Churchwide Program of Evangelism. In reporting the Men's Advent Corporate Communion, 1947, the Executive Director stated that, on the basis of reports thus far received, this Corporate Communion Service exceeded all others in interest and attendance. It was decided that in the future this service would be not only for men, but for men and boys.

A report of the Lay Readers' Sermon Service brought forth the fact that over 1,500 sets of sermons are being mailed each month. Due to the increased cost of producing these sermons, plus the fact that it is the desire of the committee to furnish our overseas missionary districts with this service, it was voted that, beginning the first of March, the price of this service will be $2.00 per year. Many compliments have been received regarding the value of this service to Lay Readers and the congregations they serve.

Those attending the meeting had high praise for the facilities afforded by Seabury House. In speaking of this, the chairman, Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., stated, "At our meeting last year Bishop Sherrill told us of his dream of a national home for the Episcopal Church. He acted with dispatch and here we are at Seabury House for our annual meeting. This is a splendid step forward in the Church. I am sure we all agree, as we can sense it with ourselves, that other groups meeting here will get to know each other and will, in many ways, help to bring many fine things to the Church."

CONVENTION—DIOCESE OF LOUISIANA

New Orleans, La.—The 110th Convention of the Diocese of Louisiana was held January 22 and 23 at Trinity Church in the City of New Orleans. The guest speaker at the evening service on the 22nd was the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill.

The various departments of the diocese and the Bishop and Council met earlier in the week. On the night of the 21st the Church Club served as host to all of the delegates of the Convention at a supper in the Jung Hotel. The speaker for the occasion was Judge John J. Parker, Senior Circuit Judge of the 4th Circuit of the Federal Court, a most devoted layman and a speaker of very great ability.

WORLD RELIEF CONFERENCES HELD

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Almon R. Pepper, executive of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, with Mr. Robert D. Jordan, Director of Promotion of the National Council and Mr. Herbert Rice, Mutual Broadcasting Company official, will hold a series of regional conferences to discuss the 1948 World Relief Campaign, especially with relation to the Presiding Bishop's Churchwide radio broadcast on February 29.

The first conference was held in New York City January 6, in Calvary Parish House. When general discussions ended, the group went into Calvary Church where amplifiers had been set up, and the broadcast was handled from a transcription, exactly as it will be done on February 29, with the single difference that Bishop Sherrill in person will speak into a Mutual microphone on that date. Transcriptions and phonograph records have been made of Bishop Sherrill's short address, so that even the smallest and most remote parish or mission, finding it impossible to arrange a radio hookup, can hear by means of the transcriptions and records. The Department of Promotion at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, is urging that any parish or mission encountering difficulties in arranging to receive the broadcast shall write at once, so that details to fit the situation may be worked out.

The second regional conference was held in Boston on January 7. Then followed similar conferences and demonstrations at Washington, January 8; Chicago, January 9; Atlanta, January 13; Dallas, January 16. Dr. Pepper led a conference in Minneapolis the 22, and Mr. Jordan led conferences at San Francisco on the 20 and Portland the 22.

Attending the conferences were bishops and diocesan chairmen of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. Dr. Pepper and Mr. Jordan explained the plans and offered suggestions for local participation. Mr. Rice was able to answer questions and make suggestions as to the technical and mechanical problems to be encountered.

"PRINCIPLES ON CHRISTIAN BURIAL" AGREED UPON

Providence, R. I.—The Ministerial Association, which includes clergy in the towns of South Kingstown and Narragansett, met recently in the rectory of St. Peter's-by-the-Sea, the Episcopal Church in Narragansett, where the Rev. Thom Williamson is rector, and this year is vice-president of the Ministerial Association. In conference with the ministers were representatives of the two funeral directing firms in the vicinity. After a full discussion, which was initiated by similar action taken in Newport, the ministers agreed among themselves, with the acquiescence of the undertakers, to a set of "Principles on Christian Burial."

Briefly these principles state that the time and place of all burial services, along with other details involved, should not be determined until the ministers themselves have been consulted by both family and funeral directors. These details are to include the use of flowers in the church, and their arrangement and quantity—for it is suggested that profuse and expensive floral offerings be omitted, the friends instead giving the money involved as memorials to the church, the family, or to some worthy charity.

Then the ministers state that in their opinion the proper place for a Christian burial service is the church building itself. And they urge that the casket should not be opened in church during or after the church service.

The Statement of Principles also says that burials should not ordinarily be held on the Lord's Day. When veteran or lodge services are also to be held, consultation should first be had with the rectors involved, the Statment goes on to say, with Church services only, being held in church buildings—that is, without two kinds of services being held in the church on the same occasion.

And the Statement adds that the ministers do not require fees for burials.

Children's Chapel Consecrated

Providence, R. I.—Christ Church, the Rev. Gene Scaringi, rector, has recently redecorated its chancel, and opened a new Children's Chapel. The consecration of the Children's Chapel was by Bishop Bennett just before Christmas. The altar had all its proper appointments, given as memorials, along with a dossal, chandelier and lights.

"New St. Paul's," in Wickford, had is 100th anniversary on St. Paul's Day. The parish itself started in 1706. The "Old Church" is still standing, and is used during August of each year. It was built in 1707.

CHURCH ARMY COMMISSIONING SERVICE

Cincinnati, O.—The first postwar Commissioning Service for three Church Army students was held in Christ Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, on January 18, with the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, officiating for the Presiding Bishop as authorized by General Convention.

Having successfully completed two years' training, including scholastic and practical field work, Fred Nussbaum, Oklahoma; William Johnson, Los Angeles, and Ernest St. Andrew, Munising, Mich., were presented by the warden of the Church Army Training Center, the Rev. F. J. Moore, D. D., for their commissions in the Episcopal Church as "Captains" in the Church Army. Upon receiving their commissions as "Evangelists" in the Episcopal Church, the Training Center Captain placed the red yoke upon their shoulders, a fellow officer from the field welcomed them into active missionary and evangelistic service and the National Director, Capt. Earl Estabrook, announced their first assignments.

Captain Fred Nussbaum will continue at the Galilee Mission, Philadelphia; Captain William Johnson will be with the Town and Country staff at Parkville, Mo., and Captain Ernest St. Andrew goes to rural work in the Diocese of Western Michigan.

All clergy in the Cincinnati area as well as delegations from all of the diocesan and parish organizations attended the service, which was open to the general public. Following the service a reception was held in the parish house under the direction of the Rev. Nelson M. Burroughs, D. D., rector.

NEW PAMPHLETS ON LAYMEN'S WORK READY

New York, N. Y.—All four of the new pamphlets on Laymen's Work are now ready for distribution, according to announcement by the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work. Two were previously announced, and they have already had a large circulation. The last two are on Evangelism Through Service and Active Evangelism.

The booklets suggest practical methods by which men, becoming more and more conscious of their personal relationship to Christ and the Church, are enabled to extend their influence into the community and the life of the parish.

BISHOP BENTLEY'S DAY

New York, N. Y.—December 7 last was celebrated throughout the Missionary District of Alaska as "Bishop Bentley Day," Mrs. Lois Cox, treasurer of the district, has advised the National Council. Mrs. Cox wrote, "You will be interested in knowing that $332.68 of Expectation (the whole payment being $448.72) is from the offering on December 7.

"On that date special services were held all through the Territory in Bishop Bentley's honor, with prayers of thanksgiving for his past leadership and for his continued guidance and preservation in his new work."

The remittance accompanying Mrs. Cox's letter was designated as "a special gift to Expectation by the churches and missions in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Bentley and is their farewell gift from the Territory."

ALEXANDER WILBOURNE AND VIRGINIA CHASE WEDDELL

The tragic death of Alexander Wilbourne Weddell, and his wife Virginia Chase Weddell in a railroad accident in Missouri on New Year's Day was a most unhappy shock to the people of Richmond and Virginia.

The son of a greatly beloved rector of St. John's Church, Richmond, of the period immediately after the War between the States, young Alex. Weddell Junior was born and reared in Richmond in that desperate period when sheer poverty prevented him and many other youths from securing a college education. Yet in his lifetime he has received honorary degrees from many colleges in this country and marks of distinction from foreign governments and rulers.

After a distinguished career, first in the consular service of the United States in many parts of the world, and later in the diplomatic service as Ambassador of the United States to Argentina, and to Spain. Mr. and Mrs. Weddell returned to Richmond where they both took notable part in the cultural, philanthropic and religious life of the city.

One of their outstanding contributions to the architectural beauty of the city was the acquisition of a famous old building in England, Warwick Priory, which had been condemned and was being torn down, and rebuilding it almost stone for stone as their residence in Richmond. This building, now called Virginia House, has been given with all its paintings and furniture and equipment to the Virginia Historical Society.

Mr. and Mrs. Weddell were both among the founders of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, and served on many philanthropic and historical boards. Rarely has the personality of two individuals, a man and his wife, been impressed so strongly, because of genuine and unselfish interest, upon as many boards and in as many ways as these two. They were greatly beloved because they loved much. They were both deeply interested in the work of the Virginia Historical Society, and Mr. Weddell had been serving as its president for several years at the time of his death. Under his leadership the whole work of the Society was reorganized and enlarged, and greatly extended.

They were both members of St. Paul's Church, Richmond, and Mr. Weddell was a delegate to the annual diocesan council from that congregation. He was also president of the diocesan Library Board which was organized to take charge of the diocesan library.

Possessed of great wealth, and with no children, the bulk of the property of both Mr. Weddell and Mrs. Weddell was devoted to historical, philanthropic and educational purposes, after bequests had been made to relatives and friends and household servants. The Virginia Historical Society will be the chief benefactor, the total amount to come finally to that Society amounting to more than a million dollars. Five colleges, William and Mary and Hampden-Sydney Colleges and the University of Virginia, Richmond University and George Washington University in the city of Washington, were given $10,000 each; The Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, $20,000; The Trustees of Weddell Memorial Episcopal Church in Richmond, $20,000; Bequests of $10,000 each were made to St. John's Church, Richmond, Endowment Fund, St. Paul's Church, Richmond, Endowment Fund, Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia, the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, the Confederate Memorial Literary Society, the Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexandria, the Children's Home Society of Virginia and the Sheltering Arms Hospital, of Richmond.

the creation of a religious monopoly. And from the religious standpoint the only wrong solution is a completely secularized culture.

We must find a middle way between these two wrong solutions. In America at the present moment proponents of monopoly and establishment tend to scare the opponents of religious monopoly into the opposite error. We would do better to seek after the middle way on this, as on other issues.

More Laborers For The Harvest

When the Lord of the Harvest surveyed the field,
And the field was the world to Him,
The harvest was plenteous but the laborers few
And the need then as now was men.

When the Lord of the Harvest surveys our field
With its millions of souls to win,
The harvest is plenteous but the laborers few
And the need now as then is men.

Did it ever occur to you, my son,
When the Lord of the Harvest said,
The harvest is plenteous but the laborers few,
He means our own Church and you!

For Laborers In The Harvest

O Heavenly Father, Lord of the Harvest, have respect we beseech Thee, to our prayers, and send forth laborers into Thy harvest. Fit and prepare them by Thy grace for the work of their ministry, and grant that both by their lives and labors they may show forth Thy glory and set forward the salvation of all men, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Post Haste . . .

THANK YOU VERY MUCH

Sir: Today I received the January 3, 1948, issue of the Southern Churchman, and to my complete surprise I found that you had mentioned me favorably under the Diocese of New York in the year of 1947.

I send you my warm appreciation, speaking as I do for those others on the Committee of St. Barnabas' House who really did the work.

On behalf of all of us, thank you very much.

MEDITATIONS IN HIS PRESENCE

At the Holy Communion

One year ago we began a series of brief glimpse-thoughts from the Collects which ended last week. In this issue we begin another series of short meditations by the creator of Haven, based upon words and phrases from the service of Holy Communion. Quite literally, seed thoughts as focal points for the worshipper's intent. This is the first of a three-year cycle of meditations in His presence. The second year's cycle will be based on a key thought from the Epistles, and the third year's cycle on some portion selected from the Gospel for the day.

The meditation today is a prelude.

MEDITATIONS IN HIS PRESENCE

Prelude

"Shall" and "May," and "The People Kneeling."

With these words of direction the Priest kneels in front of the Holy Table and prepares to begin the oldest service in Christendom—the administration of the Lord's Supper. All are kneeling as the Priest quietly speaks to God and establishes the contact which will help create for the gathered worshippers the atmosphere of God. The sum of his intent is expressed in the Lord's Prayer, and the very substance of that prayer should flow through the sound of his voice, the humility and reverence of his movements, and the reality of God's presence in the service of remembrance. And through the breaking of bread and the pouring of wine, as the cross looms with majesty and power, and the figure upon it comes down to bless, the priest mediates God.

But two little words—"shall" and "may"—begin to plague both the lay worshipper and the clerical, from this beginning moment on. Only the less important parts of the service are permissive by "may," where choices are made according to the plan of the service. The essentials are preceded by "shall" and form the continuous building up of prayer and praise until the climax of glory in communion with Him.

Beyond this, "may" reminds us that we are not forced to worship even though we kneel in God's House—and many do not; yet "shall" never lets us forget that if we do not kneel in humbleness before Him, confessing our sins and offering ourselves for His service, we will surely leave unfed, uninspired, unchanged with the name of "Ichabod"—where is the glory?—dangling around our necks.

J. W. KENNEDY.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

A Layman Looks At The Clergy

An Address Delivered At a Meeting of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship in San Francisco, California

By PHILIP M. STONE

When my topic, "A Layman Looks at the Clergy", was announced at a previous meeting, one startled gentleman of the cloth suggested that an appropriate title for a succeeding paper might be "The Clergy Strike Back!" I hope that I have not given the impression that this is to be a hyper-critical condemnation of the clergy, in general or in particular. I am not a debater. I would admit errors of fact and slips of the tongue (to the joy of a skillful rebutallist). I do not seek argument. I look for common ground, not a battle ground. I propose only to acquaint the clergy with the reaction of one layman to the attitudes and doings of Episcopal priests.

There should be a disclaimer, I suppose: "Any resemblance to actual persons and events are purely coincidental!" However, if it adds to your pleasure (or anguish) to identify a fellow clergyman (or yourself) it is your privilege to do so. My purpose is to try to reveal to the clergy what one layman thinks of their aims, aspirations, and antics; of their methods, their attitudes toward their people; what he thinks of their Churchmanship, their parochial and diocesan politics; their reverences and irreverences. If these remarks are received, as they are intended, as constructive evaluations, some good may be achieved.

Usually it is the layman who listens. No matter what he may think of the content or the presentation of a sermon, the decorum of the Church restrains him—he sits and "Takes it"; although I have known occasions when a disgruntled parishoner has stalked out of the Church in the midst of a sermon. Now I have this opportunity to address a sermon to you, that you may behold yourselves as one of your laymen sees you.

First, it is appropriate that, at this gathering of those who call themselves "Evangelicals", I say a word or two on the matter of "Unity within the Episcopal Church." I believe that the public attitudes of the clergy of this Church, as occasionally expressed in their comments from the pulpit in reference to Catholicism, Anglo-Catholicism, Pan-Protestantism and Evangelicalism and so on, are often harmful to the laymen and to their Church. The danger lies in the name-calling, the placing of trite tags and labels on certain men and viewpoints; the arousing of uninformed and shallow prejudices. Every Episcopalian knows that in a broad and non-sectarian sense he is a member of the "Holy Catholic Church": he boasts of it in his creed; the words appear on the cornerstones of some of his edifices. That does not make him a "Roman" Catholic or an "Anglo"-Catholic, any more than "Protestant Episcopal" makes him a Methodist, a Presbyterian, or a Baptist. On the other hand, the unique historical continuity of the Anglican Communion through the centuries has an appeal which few other Churches can offer. The continued strength of the Episcopal Church lies in the preservation and observance of its traditional Liturgy and Ritual. The brilliance of gifted preachers may attract throngs to churches but only as long as the brilliance lasts. Unless, an understanding of the significance of our form of service and our tradition is inculcated, that "grasshopper" group of hearers of entertaining dissertations will jump over into the congregation of any preacher (in any church) who provides diverting phrases for the delectation of the crowd. The strength of the Episcopal Church lies not alone in words of wisdom from its ministers, but also in a well-rounded service of worship, which requires a certain reverence for tradition.

I question the wisdom and the propriety of blasts from the pulpit at any other part of the Christian Church. The Episcopal Church has much to offer; it need not antagonize those of the Roman Church who come to us. Public arguments and discussion of the relative merits of "Anglo-Catholicism" and "Protestant Evangelicalism" are not conducive to harmony or unity within the Episcopal Church or outside the Episcopal Church. Unwise continuance of these comparisons leads a bewildered public to the conclusion that the Episcopal Church is "at loggerheads" with itself and does not know its own mind.

People are attracted to a church for a variety of reasons: they may like the preaching, the beauty of the music, the friendliness of the parishioners. All these are important and no one of them can be neglected if the Church is to grow. How often have we heard it said that a certain Parish church has "about reached its maximum growth, all things considered". Frequently, all things have not been considered. For example, no Church can reach its full effectiveness only through the brilliance of the preaching; If the growth of the Church is based solely on the attraction provided by the personality of its minister, it is inevitably headed for difficulties. When that personality is removed, and if no other values have been attained meanwhile, the "audience" of that man transfers its attention to some other personality. The rector who is gifted in this respect should do his utmost to get his people into the activities of the Church, to weld them into a solid body which will stand firm within the Church when personalities change. He should permit and encourage the establishment of as many organizations within the Church as the needs and nature of the people would seem to indicate; a Woman's Auxiliary, a Men's Club, a Y. P. F., a Choir Association, an Acolytes Guild, an Altar Guild. Nothing draws people so permanently into the Church as a sense of activity, fellowship, and participation. Human nature being what it is, occasionally conflicting relationships, of these organizations present problems of parish politics, but the dangers are worth it.

The music is important, but it must not become a "show" or a performance. It should not be a distraction but an integral part of the worship in the Church. The value of the Episcopal Liturgy is that it demands to a great degree the participation of the people in the music of the service. The alert minister will imbue his people with this sense of participation.

Across the Bay, in Berkeley, you have the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. I understand that it is an excellent school, providing quantities of theological and ecclesiastical knowledge for incipient divines. I suppose that the graduates are well qualified to argue learnedly on the number of angels which may be drawn through the eye of a needle (or was it camels?) and that to argue with one of these young prodeacons on matters exegetical is folly. This is, of course, as it should be—it keeps their minds supple. It is good to be positive as long as you can, until life hits you and qualifies things. Learning is easier to acquire than Wisdom.

But I sometimes wonder if a Baccalaureate Address by some hardheaded business man, well acquainted with the vagaries of human personality and character, might not be helpful for these clerical fledglings about to be cast upon this naughty world. His address could be titled, inocuously, "Personality and Character" or "A Religion for Today" or "The Clergyman and Tomorrow". He could begin conservatively and not at all uncomfortably for those who had assumed that he would dwell upon the old theme of shedding missionary light into the dark and evil places of the earth, casting out wickedness and vice, reclaiming the fallen, rescuing the perishing, doing a nice job of cleaning up generally. Then there could be a passing reference to Saint Anthony, the "Temptations of a Clergyman", and he could launch into his real topic; "The Seven Deadly Sins and How They Grow!"

Thus:

The Sin of the Arrogance of Knowledge
(Ancient or Modern)

I suppose that some clergymen never recover from the effects of their schooling, or perhaps I should say that they have never learned that all knowledge is relative and tentative—that there may be a great deal of learning with very little spiritual perception. There is no more danger, however, in an unyielding dogmatic scholasticism than in the uncertain shifting sands of modern "liberalism"; if the faith of the old-school conservatives be blind, the iconoclasm of the liberals, on the other hand, leaves little room for any faith among the fragments. The clergyman should beware of that so-called knowledge which would dismiss the ancient doctrines as archaic merely because he, the clergyman, may lack the spiritual insight to perceive that which is quite clear to many of his less "educated" parishioners. He may have much to learn from the simple faith of those whose theological awareness is not of doctrinal disputations but a humble gratitude that "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us".

And there is an allied failing of the clergyman:

The Sin of Egotism

This is a species of comfortable self-deception and placid self-satisfaction which feeds on effusive compliments—the Devil's own devices for the destruction of the soul, particularly that of the Clergyman. There is something about the pulpit, its physical height and eminence, which invests with wisdom and authority statements which made under other circumstances would fall of their own dead, dull weight. The dear old ladies (and the younger ones too) transfer their worship of God to worship of the minister. Their expressions and those of others who stand in awe of the cloth invest the priest with a pseudo-divinity which may be beautifully comforting and comfortable for the parishioners, but devastating to the health of the soul of the priest. This is the test of true greatness, for humility and selflessness are qualities hard to maintain in such an atmosphere. Constant, critical self-examination and appraisal are the only preventatives. The danger lies in the fact that few parishioners criticise their rector directly to his face. Their respect for the cloth restrains them. Yet the clergyman should realize that his best friends are those who occasionally give him a frank opinion of his words and actions. That takes courage on the part of the parishioner; the measure of the clergyman's character lies in his ability to receive such comments in the helpful light in which they are intended.

And there is

The Sin of Indifference or Casualness

In the matter of liturgy and ritual, good manners, as in all walks of life, are important in the Church—more so than some clergymen are apparently aware. If the Episcopal Service is to be of value, the readings from the prayerbook and the scriptures should not be a jumbled torrent of words or an indifferent mumbling of meaningless syllables. The reading should be reverent, thoughtful, sincere, so that it may be understood. A reasonable regard for the sentiments and feelings of the people, and the traditions of the Church, would dictate that the priest conduct the service with dignity and decorum. It is no sin that a Church lack altar candles or much of the paraphernalia of the sanctuary. It is bad manners—and an irreverent distraction—if the Church with such furnishings fails to use them properly. Let us imagine a horrible example;

A stranger comes into an Episcopal Church shortly before the service of Morning Prayer. A few minutes before eleven, a breathless, red-faced little boy rushes in with a flaming torch and lights whatever candles may be near at hand, tears out through some side door (which noisily slams behind him). The organist warms up with a prelude astonishingly suggestive of "Roses of Picardy", culminating in a tremendous chimes effect, which is apparently the signal for another red-faced little boy, with his hair all awry, to catapult in through another door, grapple with a processional cross insecurely fastened at a precarious angle to a choir stall, tear it loose from its moorings, take careful aim at a nearby door, and plunge through it, with no visible damage (miraculously) to cross or youngster.

This puts the stranger in a highly receptive mood. Anything can happen now! It does—from a distant recess of the Church are heard voices which herald the approach of the Choir, the "Thundering Herd". Some sort of intoned proclamation is heard which is apparently the occasion for the people to sink to their knees—to pray for the state of the Choir, perhaps—and the Parade begins. Down the center aisle comes the procession consisting of choristers and assorted clergy at a good fast clip to keep up with the Crucifer who apparently believes that Christian Soldiers should move "Onward"—fast! Some of the choristers nod to friends in the congregation as they pass by; this results in casualties at the Litany Desk, but they finally arrive safely at their stalls.

The stranger may find this diverting: it certainly is not conducive to a spirit of worship. And here I must point to the indifference or casualness of the clergy themselves as being most responsible for conditions of this kind.

Fine furnishings do not make a fine church. One of the most helpful services I have attended was in a plain little wooden edifice. It was "poor" in material means. No chimes on the organ, no beautiful windows, no golden candelabra. There was a simple wood cross on the altar. The choir of eight people came in silently through the side door. They came in quietly and reverently because they and the organist and the priest had had their own service of dedication a few minutes before. The altar candles had been lighted by the priest himself—first the one on the Epistle side, the other one on the Gospel side—decently, unhurriedly, and in order. (The priest later told me that an Acolytes's Guild was bing organized but that he would permit no one to serve until he had been properly prepared for this privilege of assisting at the Lord's Table.) The people were not watching a "show"—they joined reverently in worship because it was their church and their service.

Please do not say that I am a "ritualist" if I desire a certain decency in the observances of church manners. A service need not be elaborate to be inspiring, but it must be sincere, respectful, reverent. That only can be attained by the constant attention and instruction and direction, personally, of the priest of the parish. It may astonish him to know how many of his people crave this instruction. I was told by the acolytes in a certain church that they were so offended by the irreverent, "hit-or-miss", way in which, through ignorance, they had to perform their duties as servers, that they would refuse to help until they received proper instruction. Can you blame them? An assistant stepped in and trained them, organized an accolytes guild to which they were so proud to belong that a waiting list was created. Need I say that the acolytes of that Church stood second to none in the fine way in which they assisted in the service?

And there is another sin to which some gentlemen of the cloth are prone.

The Sin of Indiscreet Loquaciousness

The alarming aspect of this failing is that it is occasionally a characteristic of a very fine type of clergyman, one who has a keen interest in and love for his fellow men. He is likeable, sympahtetic, drawing people to him irresistibly because of the charm of his personality. Those in trouble and distress come to him for advise, revealing their inmost secrets and confidences, for his ears alone—sad stories of marital difficulties, hesitant confessions of struggles with personal habits—and they receive courage from his counseling. He is so interested in their problems, however, that he cannot resist discussing them later, "in confidence", of course, with his fellow clergy, and even, in moments of carelessness, alluding to them when talking with other friends. The clergyman thus betrays a confidence which he should keep inviolate. On those occasions, fortunately rare, when the person whom he has counseled learns of the talkativeness of his counselor, his faith, not only in the clergyman but in the Church as well, may be utterly destroyed. It were well if every clergyman, when entering upon the duties of his ministry, were to subscribe to a code similar to that adopted by the physicians, promising faithfully to guard zealously all information intrusted to him by those whom he serves.

And there is

The Sin of Jealousy and Backbiting

Even clergymen are not immune. Every clergyman should pray daily (very early in the morning) that he be delivered from the sin of gossip and malicious comment; that in thought, word, and deed he may be free from harmful and disrespectful thoughts concerning his peers and his superiors. He should pray for discretion when talking to parishioners about other gentlemen of the cloth. Jocular, slighting, or any adverse reference to them does not increase respect for the Church—nor does it usually increase the stature of the speaker in the estimation of the hearer.

And, further, in the field of human relations, there is

The Sin of Over-Hasty Appraisals

One of the hardest tasks of the rector is the finding and development of laymen for responsible positions in parish activities. This topic could easily be developed into a whole paper in itself, but a word of caution may be at least offered here: First impressions and appearances can be deceiving. No leadership should be given to any person until the rector has become sufficiently acquainted with him to determine with reasonable certainty his fitness therefor. This means knowledge of the parishioner's capabilities, proficiencies, limitations, temperament, churchmanship. Although many people of wealth are devout and unselfish supporters of the Church, others, of wealth and social prominence, may become dangerously domineering, possessive, and obstreperous. Nor should a person of humble station or moderate means be overlooked in the survey of possibilities for leadership; frequently it is the inconspicuous man or woman who in the time of trial for the Church will be found to be the true "pillar", standing strongly and dependably when others are but broken reeds. I would suggest to the minister that in no instance should a person be permitted to take a responsible office until his measure has been taken in the performance of lesser duties. This may require a year or so, but there is no substitute for time in appraising human personality. I am sure that you know of many devastating examples of what has happened in certain parishes when so-called "promising" newcomers have been allowed to enter too quickly into the organizational life of the church. A little inquiry into their personal history and background (in other parishes, particularly) would have saved a great deal of trouble.

And, lastly,

The Sin of being a "Good Fellow"

—or the dubious value of fraternizing with evil. The life of the clergyman is not enviable. He will be criticised alike for his sins of commission or omission. It is impossible that he please everyone. The clergyman who smokes incessantly, d r i n k s indiscrimately, swears "like any other human being", or makes occasional detours from the straight and moral path, may be called a "good fellow" by non-Churchmen (and by some Churchmen). It is also conceivable that quite a number of his flock may feel that these personal manifestations are not altogether desirable for a priest of the Church, and that their respect for the cloth is under some stress because of their concern for the man. The priest should keep constantly in mind that at his ordination he was set apart (from other men), as a minister, to be in the world, but not of the World, and from that moment on, to be, insofar as in him lies, an exemplar of Christian living. This was not thrust upon him. He chose it of his own free will when he entered the ministry. Nothing the priest does is to himself alone. He must ever realize that the faith of his flock in himself and in the Church hangs precariously, not so much on inner truths, but so-called "trivial" things of outward appearances; a slip of the tongue, the tiniest indiscretion, the smallest appearance of evil. His self-discipline must be ever vigilant, his morality unimpeachable, for if he fails, it is not he alone who falls, but with him he drags down those who have believed in him and have looked to him as an example. He must be mindful always of the solemn vows which he took when he was ordained to the ministry of the priesthood.

It would be salutary if before every service, the minister would call to mind the words of the Ordinal, the admonition and exhortation of the Bishop.

"Ye have heard, Brethren . . . of what dignity, and of how great importance this Office is, whereunto ye are called . . . ye are called to be Messengers, Watchmen . . . Stewards of the Lord.

"Have always therefore printed in your remembrance, how great a treasure is committed to your charge. . . . the sheep of Christ, which he bought with his death, and for whom he shed his blood. The Church and Congregation whom you must serve, is his Spouse, and his Body . . . if it shall happen that the same Church, or any Member thereof, do take any hurt or hindrance by reason of your negligence, ye know the greatness of the fault. . . .

"Forasmuch then as your Office is both of so great excellency, and of so great difficulty, ye see with how great care and study ye ought to apply yourselves, as well to show yourselves dutiful and thankful unto that Lord, who had placed you in so high a dignity; as also to beware that neither you yourselves, offend nor be occasion that others offend."

These words are clear, and I, one of your people, pray that our Heavenly Father may "Give grace to all Ministers that they may, both by their life and doctrine, set forth his true and lively Word."

Santiago de Cuba

A Place of Vast Possibilities For Our Church

By REV. LORETO SERAPION, LL.D., D. C. L.

Santiago de Cuba is the capital of the Province of Oriente. And Oriente is one of the six provinces in which the Republic of Cuba is divided. It is the largest of all the provinces. It extends 36,000 square kilometers, with a land rich in mines of every kind. High mountains like La Sierra Maestra stand everywhere in the province. The Turquino peak is one of the highest in the whole world. The biggest river in Cuba, El Cauto, runs through beautiful hills and valleys.

Santiago de Cuba is an old city founded by Diego Velazquez in the early days of the Spanish colonization, about four hundred years ago. It is in the southern part of the province. For centuries this city was really a small town, but at the time of the first American Intervention—in the memorable years of 1898 to 1902—it began to grow rapidly. Now the city has about two hundred thousands of inhabitants.

The city, I should say, is famous for several things. In its neighbourhood stands the famous St. John's Hill where the great battle of the combined American-Cuban forces of Theodore Roosevelt and Calixto Garcia against the Spaniards took place, in which the Spanish army was finally defeated. In its neighbourhood, about four kilometers away, is the small town El Caney which was taken by the American army and where the Spanish general Vara del Rey died fighting as a hero defending the old regime of his country. Here is also the famous Santiago Bay, which is historically immortal for the great naval battle which was fought during the Spanish-American War, making of the young American officer Hobson, a hero. But, above all this, Santiago de Cuba is a city where many of the Cubans who fought in the Wars of Independence were born.

At the same time this city has been for centuries a stronghold of the Roman Catholic Church. At present it is the see of an Archbishopric. In spite of this, we can not say that Santiago de Cuba is entirely a Roman Catholic city. At least, there are thousands of people, who having been born and baptized in the Roman Catholic Church are not interested to go to the Church of their parents. If they are asked about the religion they are supposed to belong to, they will immediately say that they are Catholics, but Catholics who do not agree with the papal policy and who do not like to worship saints invented by the Roman Catholic Church. Of course, they remark that they are not Protestants either!

I am seriously inclined to think that this type of Catholics resemble most Anglicans or Episcopalians. No doubt these people may easily become members of our Church if we only knew how to interest them in it. There are many thousands of such people in this city, as in all the cities of Cuba, who could easily be members of our Church if we could present to them Churches with fine buildings and first class schools where they could send their children; if we could preach to them as fine sermons as they hear in the pulpits of the Roman Catholic Church, where prominent native priests show their culture and wisdom every time they preach; if we could actively work along the line of making a strong evangelistic movement among our people.

I strongly believe that Santiago de Cuba is offering to the Episcopal Church, vast possibilities to develop its work in order to increase its large membership among Cubans.

Our Church has been working in this city for more than forty years. In spite of this, the work has not grown very much, due I think, to the fact that our material equipment has always been extremely poor. Our main Church, St. Andrew's, is a small Chapel which can not hold more than sixty or seventy people. St. Mary's Church, used mainly for the British West Indians, is a small Church built in a very poor suburb of the city. St. Peter's Church is a small one, which can hold about thirty people, built in another poor suburb.

We have three little schools. And they are very poor ones. Then we have one bigger one: "Colegio San Lucas," of which I have the honor to be the Chaplain. We would say as our Bishop Blankinship did about it, "It is a first class school with very poor equipment".

This school was founded about thirty years ago by the Rev. Juan B. Mancebo, a priest who is now ninety-one years old, and who is actively working for the Church. The suburb where the school is located has been growing ever since and consequently the school has also grown. It has more pupils than the poorly equipped building can hold.

There we have a nice Sunday School with a large registration. When recently Bishop Blankinship of this Missionary District paid a visit to the same he heard the pupils shouting: "Bishop, we want to have a Church built!" There is not even a Chapel in the school. We need a fine Church to be built right near the School, and furthermore, a school building where hundreds of Cuban boys and girls may go through their studies under the auspices of the Episcopal Church.

Santiago de Cuba by its importance needs to have a school worthy of the history and traditions of the Episcopal Church to be a centre of culture and inspiration for the sons and daughters of those "non-conformists" among the Roman Catholics who are potentially Episcopalians.

In many ways our Church has been handicaped. Time has already come when it must stand high up among other institutions, for the plain reasons of its magnificent history and brilliant Catholic traditions. Everybody in Santiago de Cuba, everybody in the Province of Oriente and everybody in the rest of the country ought to know about the Episcopal Church. And yet to do that we need a first class equipment for a first class Institution. It is a pity we did not have it in the past; it is a pity we do not have it at present, but we hope to have it in the near future with the help of God.

Let us have hope and have enough courage to work hard for our dear Episcopal Church in Cuba, as to make out of Santiago de Cuba its stronghold.

STUDENTS ATTEND CONFERENCE IN CHRISMAS VACAION

Texas.—The Christmas vacation in the Diocese of West Texas was marked for college students, communicants of the Episcopal Church, by a Conference on Christian Vocations, held at Camp Capera, under the leadership of Bishop Jones. There were present forty-eight students all from parishes or missions within the diocese. Three seminarians were also present, Gordon Charlton, Jr., and Robert E. Megee, Jr., both from the Virginia Theological Seminary, and Wilson Rowland from the Philadelphia Divinity School. The first session included the presentation of "Vocations within the Church," by Bishop Jones, "Church Vocations for Women," presented by Miss Mary Louise Villaret, diocesan director of Christian Education and "The Ministry," presented by Gordon Charlton, who told why he had chosen it and gave a picture of life at the Virginia Seminary. In the evening session Bishop Jones spoke on "Fundamentals of the Christian Faith" and then led a discussion on the subject. Included in the program was a Celebration of Holy Communion and various forms of recreation. The Rev. H. Paul Osborne, chairman for College Work in the diocese, assisted Bishop Jones.

Nunc Dimittis

Under the above title thought is being directed to a few of the things suggested by the Song of one for whom the shadows of evening were stretched out—Simeon, of the second chapter of St. Luke's Gospel.

We write chiefly for readers whose days have lengthened into eventide, such as ask for the old paths, and the way of deepening rest to the soul. Nothing new can be offered. "You are reminding us of truths enjoyed long since, but now almost forgotten," is the word from one elderly man. So we continue (though in fragmentary manner), to reiterate old truths, after the manner of Psalmists and others, who tell again and again of Israel's deliverance from Egypt, or of their own personal experience of the grace of God. "I will declare what God hath done for my soul," cries one in the sixty-sixth Psalm.

Some thirty years after Simeon had given his glad testimony, an event of great significance took place in that Temple; it was the rending of the Veil. In several of the Gospels appointed for Holy Week, and in the Epistle for Good Friday, mention is made of that wonderful happening. Those accounts should be carefully read in private as well as in church and along with them such passages as Exodus 25, or Exodus 30:10, or Leviticus 16:34, and further read (in Moffatt if possible) that excellent digest provided in Hebrews 9.

It would be well to put aside this paper, and give some time to quiet thought and prayer, before proceeding further in this present writing.

* * * *

The Tabernacle (and later the Temple) was divided into two parts by a piece of tapestry known as the Veil. The outer part was the Holy Place, and there the ordinary priests ministered.

The inner part was called the Holy of Holies, or the Most Holy Place, and into it, only the high priest could go, and that but once a year on the great Day of Atonement, and he carried blood with him.

Within that place was the ark of the covenant, and the mercy-seat, and upon the mercy-seat the strange Shekinah-light in which Jehovah dwelt—of which things we cannot now speak particularly.

In passing within the Veil, the Jewish high priest entered into the immediate Presence of God, from which all others were excluded. But when the body of Jesus was so torn on the Cross that its life-blood became available for its supreme purpose, the salvation of men —at that moment (so says Mark 15:38), at that moment the dividing curtain, the Veil that hung between man and God, that separating thing was rent in twain. By one act, needing neither to be repeated nor supplemented, God was propitiated, and sinners were justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus whom God set forth to be a propitiation. Carefully note the references to "His own blood" in Hebrews 9, verses 12, 14 and 22, and in Hebrews, verses 19 and 29.

When the Veil was dissevered, a way into the Holiest was open to all men, for by the one oblation of Himself, once offered, Jesus not only opened a way, but He Himself became the Way. Henceforth, the meeting of God face to face, becomes the privilege of all believers. We have access by faith, we have access with confidence. (See Romans 5:2; Ephesians 3:12.)

The validity of that eternal covenant, of that eternal redemption, of that eternal inheritance, the validity of these things abide. Having ourselves been made a kingdom of priests unto God, ours it is to offer a life of love, and adoration, and worship, and in union with our great High Priest, we are emboldened to take our place with Him as intercessors.

In God's presence the soul grows into more complete oneness with Christ, and into more entire conformity to His likeness. Having, therefore, boldness to enter into the Holiest by a new and living way which Jesus has consecrated for us, through the Veil, let us draw near with a true heart and in full assurance.

And what has all this to do with Nunc dimittis? Think it over.

Europe's Dependence Upon America

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Attendance recently at an international Christian conference gave me the opportunity to speak with nationals of many of the European countries. I should like to list my impressions of the present situation in the following brief propositions:

1. Europe's attitude toward America is much less critical than it has been at any time since the war. This new tendency of appreciation is primarily due to the fact that thoughtful Europeans are now quite convinced that the Marshall Plan is not an effort to extend the imperial power of our nation, as Communist propaganda avers.

There is a growing conviction that we really want to help the nations of western Europe and that the plan, as now projected, does not violate the sovereignty of the dependent nations. This favorable impression could, of course, be destroyed if Congress added many restrictive reservations to the European recovery plan, which would offend the self-respect of the nations involved.

A curious irony exists in the fact that the people who support the recovery plan primarily from motives of wanting to defeat Communism are most likely to destroy the effectiveness of the plan in that direction by making it an expression of American power and thereby proving the Communist propaganda to be right.

2. The tendency to be appreciative of America has grown with the increasing disillusionment over Communist tactics upon the continent. It is generally recognized that the strike and sabotage strategy in France and Italy serves no good economic purpose and is meant to wreck the economy of those nations before the Marshall Plan can take effect.

Even the left section of the British Labor Party which was extremely critical of America and friendly to Russia has changed its line. Some of the members of this group have become convinced that Greece must be defended and kept from falling into the Communist orbit, lest the strategic picture in the whole Mediterranean be changed. Thus the "Truman Doctrine" is no longer under attack.

3. The hope is expressed that America may not pull down the iron curtain beyond the point where the Russians pull it down. More specifically this means that we should not cut off economic relations with Czechoslovakia and Poland, even though they are in the Russian orbit.

It is felt that it would be good for the peace of the world if we preserved every possible contact with nations in eastern Europe so far as Russian influence permits.

4. Europe in general is just as certain as it has been in the past that its poverty makes our kind of economy a luxury which it cannot afford. It must have stronger controls upon its economic life than we have. But it is beginning to think that perhaps we are not actuated purely by economic motives and is beginning to accept us as an ally in the fight against Communism, even though many of our ways seem strange.

5. The economic dependence of Europe upon America is very great and one has a frightening sense of our responsibility. For if we should fail in our responsibility and if Congress should seriously mangle the European recovery program the economic life of Europe would fall into chaos.

The Military In Civil Government

A committee of eminent Americans, including Dr. Albert Einstein, Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur of Stanford University, J. Arthur Morgan, former T V A chairman, Dorothy Canfield Fisher and other prominent public figures, has pointed out the increasing infiltration of professional military men into civil posts. Naming General Marshall, Secretary of State; Admiral William J. Leahy, the President's personal aide, and an imposing list of others, the statement remarks that military influence extends to our colleges, research foundations, the Boy Scouts of America, and into publicity media, for "the Army was the third largest advertiser in the nation in 1946." In the light of the immense Federal budget proposed for the new fiscal year, that fact is worth considering. The timeliness of this statement is highlighted by the President's attempt to appoint another military man to a high post in our top civil aviation bureau.

Yet America is not a militaristic nation. At heart, there is a healthy disrespect of the "big brass" by the man in the streets. The failure of campaigns for voluntary re-enlistments in the army and navy shows the small liking of Americans for the military life and its philosophy.

The trend of these appointments of military men to posts normally filled by civilians is due in part to the evident fascination of President Truman with military personnel, plus the unwillingness of men in executive positions in the business world to go into government service. The period since the war has seen a flood of men pouring out of Washington back into their own businesses. Some of this was the rightful release of manpower due to the end of the war, but there has been little desire by men of leadership to take government positions at the price of lessened income plus the sure criticism leveled at men in such fields plus the stifling red tape and inefficiency of government organization.

The Church must accept some of the blame for this. We have failed to inculcate a spirit of Christian vocation in men's hearts. How often on the local level, poor candidates run for public office and poorer men are appointed to responsible positions because men of conscience and ability refuse to enter into politics. Churchmen will not run for office! This report might well be used by Men's Clubs as the basis for study, not simply of the trend it indicates, but as an indication of the failure of the Christian Churches to provide leadership. That there might be a Christian ministry in the hall of government in Washington never enters the thinking of most men.

Hence the President turns to military men, who unfortunately have been conditioned to think in military terms. It is to the point that the signers of this report note that the historian Arnold J. Toynbee in his widely acclaimed "Study of History" came to the conclusion that militarism "has been by far the commonest cause of the breakdown of civilizations."

February 29th

We haven't had a Sunday like it since 1920, and there will not be another until 197! We refer to Sunday, February 29th, 1948! Such a leap year Sunday is the most unusual Sunday date in the calendar.

With appreciation of the possibilities of this, the National Church has resolved to exploit this Sunday for the benefit of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, to which our Church has pledged one million dollars in 1948. The National Department of Promotion has worked out a dramatic plan whereby the Presiding Bishop will speak in every Episcopal Church in the nation that morning at 11:30 A. M., via the radio. Six hundred radio stations will cover the great majority of our Churches easily. For those Churches out of reach of this vast radio coverage, or who have their only service at another hour, transcriptions and phonograph records have been provided.

But this is not all. Equally important is the careful plan of preparation for this Sunday outlined by the department. Literature, posters, offering envelopes and pledge cards (for those who have no ready money with them!) are already available. There will be advertisements and newspaper and magazine publicity directed from "281."

Yet all this can be blocked if the rector of a Church refuses to cooperate. For the essential task must be engineered at the local level. Here the suggestions of "281" must be put into effect. Here the literature must be mailed into every home. Here is the touchstone of success or failure for the plan.

We trust the clergy will give wholehearted support to this plan. It is a good plan, well conceived. Persons may quibble about details in typical clerical manner. But the plan may be varied or supplemented to suit local conditions. It is flexible enough to meet all our local needs.

But this is far more than a "plan," or a trick promotional scheme. This is to raise funds to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to rebuild the Christian life of a war-scarred world. This is to obey our Lord's command. One million dollars from two million Episcopalians for a year's gift is little enough. The goal is so small that its mention ought to shame us! It means about a penny a week a member! The least we can do on February 29th is to oversubscribe it generously and quickly. Then February 29th will indeed be an unusual Sunday, not simply in its strange date, but in its demonstration to the world that the Church of Christ still cherishes His compassion for the multitudes.

Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson

The Southern Churchman family will be interested to know that the Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson, of the Cathedral of Toronto, will write for us starting shortly, a column to appear on this page.

This series will represent a resume of his talks on Evangelism recently made at the Mayo Memorial Church House, Richmond, Va., daily the week of January 12-16, followed by Bible Study classes the following week. Canon Paterson has made a deep impression on all who were priviledged to hear him and he was warmly received at these meetings as well as in the various Churches where he preached on Sundays and addressed the Men's Bible Classes, Woman's Auxiliary groups, and Young People's Service Leagues during his stay in Richmond.

The Southern Churchman is very happy to be able to introduce his column on this page.

Canon Paterson was born in Scotland. He was educated at Edinburgh University, Toronto University, Wycliffe College, Toronto. He has been an Army Chaplain—now in the Reserve Army with rank of Major. He is a member of the Committee of Evangelism of the Diocese of Toronto; General Synod of the Church of England in Canada and Canadian Council of Churches.

The Offering

Besides the notices and the sermon the rubrics here provide for the taking of the offering, after the sermon. There is no other mention in any of the church services of the collection, although it is taken at Morning and Evening Prayer, and sometimes at the Litany. The fact that it here comes after the sermon establishes the usual custom in all Episcopal churches, thereby differing from the other Protestant groups, who invariably pass the alms basins before the sermon.

We are apt to forget how ancient is this practice in the church, and also how important it is. We Episcopalians are inclined to be altogether too modest in our attitude toward the need of money for the church with the result that although our church people are always the leaders, both in giving and in work in every kind of philanthropic and civic movements, oftentimes our own church institutions are very meagerly supported, and often overlooked, both in contributions and bequests of our wealthy members.

Somebody has classified three great churches as follows, the Presbyterians as the e-lect, the Baptists as the col-lect, and the Episcopalians as the se-lect. Certainly our Baptist friends do a grand work at collecting and some of their large churches have a budget that is equal to a whole Episcopal diocese.

In two places in the New Testament special importance is given to this phase of the church's work. In St. Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians immediately after the fifteenth chapter, in which he rises to such heights on the subject of immortality that his words have been used at burial services from time immemorial, he continues, "Now concerning the collection . . . ." He thus lifts the weekly offering to a place beside the salvation of the soul.

Also in St. Luke's gospel chapter 2, verse 49, we have the first words recorded from the lips of our Saviour in response to Mary's grief over having lost him for three days he says, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's BUSINESS." Surely this is an admonition from our Saviour Himself that we should use more business methods in the church, and not be ashamed to urge our people to support our church work adequately and liberally.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S BOOK FOR LENT

Each year the Presiding Bishop of the Church has printed a book during Lent for the lay people and clergy. Its purpose is to stimulate some concrete thinking which should result into action. This year as we are studying about Evangelism, the book is written by the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker called "Revive Thy Church Beginning With Me."

It would be a wonderful thing if groups would read this book, sit down and discuss it, and plan action. One of the most helpful Lents I can remember is when this was done. Each one of us got the book, chapters were assigned to leaders and we met for discussion. We first had a Service of Worship, at which time the rector spoke briefly on the subject for the evening. After this we went to the Parish House, where we had our discussion. It was an interesting group of people, professors, their wives, teachers of the high school, business people of all kinds and sorts and their families. We ranged from the teen age through the "old folks." We had a wonderful time and grand discussion. We each had a hearing. That Lent has meant much to me through the years. It might be that you could get some of your neighbors to read this book with you. You might review the book to stimulate interest in it. The book begins with Mr. Shoemaker's inquiry into the causes of our difficulties by facing the fact that the crisis in our world is, at bottom, a crisis in the soul of man. He says, "Unless something happens to us and in us, it will not happen through us." "This is a book on the how and not the why and what." To have this happen, he says, it is obvious to him that it should be where men go for religious help: in our parishes. The book has a freshness and sincerity which is rewarding to those who read it; you are aware that this man has a knowledge of wherein he speaks.

I do hope that you will not only read it yourself, but that you will talk it over with others. We are too prone to read, hear lectures and "exude" about them, criticize how our church is not doing anything, and let it go at that. Many times we are unaware of what does happen in our own Church.

Let us take time during Lent to think, pray and act.

"Revive Thy Church Beginning With Me."

MARTHA C. PRAY,
Consultant of Christian Education,

MRS. CUMMINS SELECTED FOR COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC SAFETY

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Mrs. Evelyn Atwater Cummins, wife of the late Dr. Alexander Griswold Cummins, who was rector of Christ Episcopal Church, has been appointed public safety commissioner by Mayor-Elect Graham.

Mrs. Cummins succeeds Howard T. Wiggers, and will serve on a new three-member board of police commissioners as soon as the city administration is able to carry out its pledge of restoration of the police board, the mayor-elect said.

Mrs. Cummins, believed to be the first woman ever to have been appointed to a Poughkeepsie police department supervisory post, is a native of this city and member of a well-known Poughkeepsie family.

With the late Dr. Cummins, who served for many years as chaplain of the police department, Mrs. Cummins has maintained a close personal interest in the department and its members. Her father, the late Edward Storrs Atwater, was a member of the police board.

Mrs. Cummins is a contributing editor of the Southern Churchman. Upon the death of her husband, Dr. Cummins, editor of The Chronicle, that magazine combined with the Southern Churchman in June of last year.

Mrs. Evelyn Cummins, who became public safety commissioner of Poughkeepsie on January 1, was born in this city, the daughter of the late Edward Storrs Atwater and Caroline Swift Atwater. Her father was for many years president of the Farmers and Manufacturers National Bank, and for 15 years was a trustee of Vassar College and chairman of its finance commiteee. He was a first cousin of the late President William Howard Taft. Her mother was the donor of the Swift Memorial Infirmary at Vassar College.

Mrs. Cummins' grandfather, Charles Well Swift, was mayor of Poughkeepsie.

Mrs. Cummins was educated at the former Quincy and Putnam Hall schools of this city, the National Cathedral school, Washington, D. C., and the Masters' School, Dobbs Ferry.

Mrs. Cummins has been active in the literary field over a long period of years. She served on the staffs of The Living Church, The Chronicle and The Churchman. Mrs. Cummins' articles have appeared in the American Mercury, the Forum and the Century among a number of publications.

In 1922 Mrs. Cummins wrote "The King's Highway," a prize poem, which has been broadcast many times on the radio, and has been set to music by 24 composers, as a hymn and an anthem.

During the period of World War II Mrs. Cummins also served as chairman of the women's division for three War Loan campaigns in the Sixth New York War Loan district. She also was chairman of the woman's district for one of the Dutchess County War Loan drives.

SCHOOL BOARDS REQUEST RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

Narragansett, R. I.—The School Committee of the town of South Kingstown, in Southern Rhode Island, has requested the clergy of the various churches nearby to give religious instruction to pupils in the high school in the school building itself.

The School Committee stated that the law of Rhode Island requires them to "implant and cultivate in the minds of the children the principles of morality and virtue. If each church will furnish instruction to its own members, the schools will be indebted to you for giving us this aid." The School Committee further states: "To the best of our judgment this plan in no way transgresses the necessary principle of the freedom of control of church over state or state over church." The period of instruction is to be three-quarters of an hour once each week.

The proposed plan was accepted immediately by the pastors of the two Roman Catholic parishes involved, and also accepted by the rectors of the two Episcopal Churches in the vicinity. Some of the strictly "Protestant" pastors, however, objected strongly on the basis of arguments that a mixture of state and church is involved; that "sectarian" teaching should not be encouraged by school boards in their schools; that taxpayers' money (used in building and keeping up schools) should not be used for the teaching of religion, either Christian, Jewish or pagan; that the school boards thereby make themselves responsible for the teaching which should be given under the plan; that most ministers and instructors brought in under the sponsorship of the ministers might not be qualified teachers under school law; and though the object (instruction in morals and religion) is good, the method is bad.

After weighing all objections, written and oral, the School Committee of South Kingstown has decided to put the plan into effect on February 16, with those pastors who agree doing their part with their own church children, and those who will not come in remaining outside. This plan will start in the high school only. The upper three years of high school training are taken in the South Kingstown High School by the pupils from the town of Narragansett.

It is thought that the Narragansett school board may follow the example of South Kingstown for the Narragansett Junior High School pupils.

The rector of the Church of the Ascension in Wakefield, in the town of South Kingstown, the Rev. John R. Wyatt is the president of the School Committee in that town, but did not initiate the plan. The other Episcopal Church involved is St. Peter's-by-the-Sea, in Narragansett, whose rector is the Rev. Thom Williamson.

LAY READERS' SERMON SERVICE

New York, N. Y.—Reluctantly the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work has increased the price of its popular Lay Readers' Sermon Service from $1.00 to $2.00 per year.

At the annual meeting of the committee at Seabury House it was reported that 1,500 sets of the sermons are mailed each month. The service is given free to bishops in overseas missionary districts, and to lay readers who take services in missions financially unable to pay for the service.

With rising costs of paper, envelopes, etc., it has become impossible to continue the service at the old price. The February mailing consisted of 21 mimeographed pages, and a four-page printed leaflet. Similar mailings throughout the year mount up to a volume of material that is worth far more than the new price, in the opinion of many of the clergy who supply the sermons to their lay readers.

VOCATIONAL CONFERENCE FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

New York, N. Y.—Miss Katharine Duffield, College Work Secretary of the Second Province, announced plans for an Inter-Diocesan Vocational Conference for College Students, to be held at Windham House, New York, March 6 and 7.

Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill will speak to the group of the need for Christians in all vocations, and the exercise of Christian influences in all fields of human enterprise.

Dr. John Heuss, director of the National Council's Department of Christian Education; Miss Ellen Gammack, personnel secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary; Miss Barbara Arnold, college worker at Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Miss Helen Turnbull, director of Windham House, and Miss Duffield, are the other speakers and discussion leaders.

The conference is sponsored by the Provincial Committee for College Work, the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary of New York, New Jersey, Newark and Long Island.

Various vocations for women in the Church will be presented and explained, among them college work, parish work (Christian education), overseas missionary work, social service and building a Christian home.

Students attending the conference will be carefully chosen by college pastors, Woman's Auxiliary officers and other Church people able to select the most promising and capable girls.

CONVENTION, DIOCESE OF MICHIGAN, TO ELECT COADJUTOR

Detroit, Mich.—Representatives from the 120 parishes and missions in the Diocese of Michigan, including clergy, lay delegates and women delegates, will meet in Detroit on January 28 and 29, 1948, for the 115th Annual Convention of the diocese and the fifteenth Annual Convention of women of the diocese.

The Wednesday afternoon's session will begin by the election of a Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese. Bishop Creighton's retirement has been announced for March 31 of this year, and the man elected as Coadjutor at this Convention will immediately succeed Bishop Creighton at that time. The Standing Committee which has been acting as a committee to receive nominations for a Bishop Coadjutor, is scheduled to report at 2 P. M.; the election will follow the report.

Officers of the Convention and of the Diocese will also be elected as well as delegates and alternates to the Synod of the Province of the Midwest, which will be held next autumn. There will also be presented the reports of various standing and special committees.

One of the most interesting reports to come before the Convention will be that of the Committee on Evangelism, which for the past several weeks has been conducting a study on the needs of the diocese with regard to the development of a deeper consciousness of spiritual responsibility. Each department of the Executive Council surveyed its own field and made a report to the Executive Council as to what it could contribute, and these reports were correlated into a report which will be presented to the Convention on the first afternoon.

One congregation will seek admission as a parish, this is St. Andrew's, Flint, which has recently incorporated. St. Andrew's was organized in 1915 as a diocesan mission and has shown steady development for the past few years. The Rev. Cecil C. Watkins is in charge of this congregation.

On Thursday the Convention will consider the report of the Committee on Canons. One proposal for consideration is being presented by the Convention of Women, and would provide for the eligibility of women to serve on Vestries, limiting the number to two on any one vestry.

The Annual Convention Dinner is on Wednesday evening at 7:00 at Rackham Building.

One of the features of the evening program will be a presentation to Bishop Creighton on the occasion of his impending retirement and the speaker will be the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, D. D., bishop of Washington, D. C.

Another feature will be the presentation of honorary awards to a group of churchpeople, laymen and women, who in the opinion of the bishops have rendered noteworthy service to the Diocese during the past year.

A visitor to the Women's Convention will be Mrs. Harold Whinfield, of Sheboygan, Wis., who will make an address. Mrs. Waldo C. Granse of Grosse Pointe, diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary, will act as chairman of the Convention of Women.

CONTINUING NEEDS IN EUROPE

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Raymond E. Maxwell, formerly at St. Mark's Church, St. Louis, and now on the staff of Church World Service in the French Zone in Germany, has written of continuing needs in Europe.

He refers to "economic stagnation," of difficulties arising from the zoning system, of vital materials which are virtually unobtainable. His comments on the work of relief would indicate a high degree of effectiveness in the Church World Service program. "Children are being fed by the thousands with food from foreign churches," Mr. Maxwell said. Theological students are able to carry on their studies, pastors are receiving salary supplements, hospitals are able to minister to their patients, refugees are receiving encouragement in spite of their homelessness and destitution. What we do through the Churches cannot possibly have a deep-reaching economic effect; the causes of the world disaster are too profound and too extensive for that. But our material gifts do help millions to exist and to carry on; they do bring encouragement and new hope; they do represent hands stretched across the ocean and across the high national boundaries which make it hard for each of the peoples of Europe to see beyond themselves and their own desperate need.

Mr. Maxwell concludes by saying: "Do all you can to keep supplies coming through CWS from the Service Centers as well as through private parcels and by every legitimate means, and support the World Council reconstruction program.

"Keep on working, as I know you are, for a broad policy of intergovernmental reconstruction abroad. If America could give a demonstration of real self-sacrifice at this time, in terms of supporting a governmental program of assistance abroad, we could do much toward building the ONE WORLD that we pray for and toward realizing our professed war aims."

CAMBRIDGE INVITES BISHOP WRIGHT

Wilmington, N. C.—While in England next summer to attend the Lambeth Conference, the Rt. Rev. Thomas H. Wright, bishop of the Diocese of East Carolina, will speak at Cambridge University. He has accepted the University's invitation to discuss American Universities and Colleges.

Bishop Wright has a wide experience in college work. He was chaplain at Chapel Hill, N. C., for a time, then associate National Council secretary for College Work, stationed in the Fourth Province, and still later he filled an interim appointment as acting secretary for college work at National Council headquarters in New York. For two years he was chairman of the Fourth Province College Commission. He has served as member of the National Council's College Commission, and as a director of the Church Society for College Work.

CHURCH OF "VOCATIONAL GIVING" IS DEDICATED

Albany, Cal.—The church made possible by "vocational giving," whereby the members used their daily occupations to raise funds for the church, was dedicated by Bishop Karl Morgan Block on January 11. The building fund was started when Frank Sibilia, a barber, conceived the idea of cutting hair and putting the contributions of members in the treasury. Other members figured ways of using their jobs and skills to support the fund, and a $50,000 parish house is the result.

Dr. Randolph C. Miller, a professor at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, is vicar at St. Alban's Church here; and the new building is designed so that there is a high ceilinged nave on the upper floor which can be used for church services and for meetings and recreational affairs. The lower floor has rooms for the church school and for various organizations. The construction is of wood and stucco, and the building was completed in less than six months.

"Vocational giving" is now to be used to pay off the debt and to raise funds for a new church which will complete the plant. Among those in the procession at the opening service were Dean Henry H. Shires and Professors Charles F. Whiston and Pierson Parker of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Dr. Calvin Barkow of St. Paul's Church, Oakland, Dean Bernard Lovgren of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, Rev. A. OVER 1,000,000 VOLUMNS OF HOLY SCRIPTURE DISTRIBUTED

Washington, D. C.—The Chief of Chaplains, Major General Luther D. Miller, has announced that a total of 1,012,243 copies of Army Testaments, declared surplus by the War Assets Administration, have been distributed free of charge to religious, educational, civic and eleemosynary institutions. 746,817 copies of the Protestant King James Version, 197,721 copies of the Roman Catholic Douay Version, and 67,705 copies of a version prepared by Jewish authorities were shipped from the various Adjutant General's depots.

Actual distribution of these copies of Holy Scripture started December 15, 1946. Inasmuch as the Office of the Chief of Chaplains received requests for eight times as many volumes as were on hand, distribution was made on the basis of date of request and urgency of need. No more copies of surplus Scriptures are available.

500 Surplus Army Chapels Sold; 100 Still Available

The Chief of Chaplains, Major General Luther D. Miller, announced today that as of January 8, 1948, 500 Surplus Army and Air Force Chapels have been awarded to qualified applicants. The distribution of these 500 Chapels for continued use as house of worship is as follows:

Protestant	379
Roman Catholic	86
Jewish	5
To Colleges and Schools	16
To Cities, Counties and States	10
To Organizations for use as Memorial Shrines	4

Approximately 100 Surplus Army and Air Force Chapels are still available Interested persons or groups are requested to file application for the purchase of surplus chapels, not with the Office of the Chief of Chaplains, but with the local disposal agency having charge of the specificially advertised chapel.

SPIRITUAL CONFERENCES FOR LAYMEN DURING LENT

Philadelphia, Pa.—In furtherance of the program of Evangelism in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, Bishop Hart and Bishop Remington will conduct a series of six "Spiritual Conferences for Laymen" on the Saturdays in Lent. Each rector and missionary will bring six or eight of his laymen to one of the series of conferences to be held in the six Convocations of the diocese. Conferences will be held from 4 to 8 P. M., with a simple buffet supper. Early last fall there was a similar series of laymen's meetings, in which over 1,000 men were brought in contact with the Bishops. In selecting the men to represent the parishes and missions at the Lenten conferences, an entirely different group of men will be chosen, so that the Bishops may confer with some who were not included in the previous meetings.

On January 23 and 26 the Field Department of the Diocese of Pennsylvania held two conferences with rectors and accounting wardens to discuss the diocesan missionary budget for 1949. These meetings were held at the Church of the Holy Trinity, and were arranged in two sections so that the groups would not be too big for thorough and frank discussion. Bishop Hart presided, and the discussion was led by Dr. Charles W. Shriner, chairman of the Field Department.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH ACTIVITIES

Wytheville, Va.—The visit of Mrs. C. Stanley Rogers, diocesan director of Christian Education, on December 6-7, was a great success. On Saturday night she spoke to the church school teachers and substitutes at a supper and on Sunday to the school assembly in the morning and to the Young People's Service League. She also met a few parents and teachers individually. All together her presence was an inspiration.

The Young People's Service League for the second time sponsored a Christmas entertainment for the Church School. This was given this year the Sunday evening before Christmas.

The music at the festival service on Christmas Day was high lighted by the singing of the Junior Choir in the gallery in conjunction with the senior choir.

The Sunday after Christmas the Church School was given a holiday in special recognition of the faithful all year round service to its teachers. The membership of the school, 130, were asked to attend Divine worship on that day especially.

The annual Candlelight Service, sponsored by one of the Woman's Auxiliary groups and participated in by members of the Y. P. S. L. and junior choir was held the second Sunday afternoon after Christmas.

During the rector's absence on vacation the Rev. Wilfred E. Roach, of Radford, has been asked by the vestry to conduct service the second and fourth Sundays in January in the afternoon.

The annual every member canvass was so successful that the vestry was able to pledge the sum suggested by the diocese, and also that the sum asked for the Vriginia Seminary has been surpassed.

ONE-DAY ONE MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN

Atlanta, Ga.—Representatives of the several dioceses in the Fourth Province met January 13 in St. Luke's Parish House, to consder the one-day campaign for one million dollars for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

Mr. Robert D. Jordan, National Council promotion executive, reported the result of the 1947 campaign to be $1,106,000 given in cash, plus gifts of clothing and food. He reminded those present that the General Convention set a goal of one million dollars for 1948 and 1949, but added that the needs to be met exceed the amounts raised in 1947.

Dr. Almon N. Pepper, Christian Social Relations executive, reported how the 1947 Fund has been spent and described the relationship of the Presiding Bishop's Fund to Church World Service. He then outlined the work of C. W. S.

Mr. Jordon declared that only 65 per cent of the parishes of the Episcopal Church participated in the 1947 Fund, and said that it appears that many more will cooperate in 1948. He then described in detail the plans for the one day campaign—the radio broadcast of a talk by the Presiding Bishop over a network of 600 stations, including most of the Mutual network.

Mr. Herbert C. Rice, of the Mutual Broadcasting System, told the group that plans for the broadcast will provide more coverage than any other religious broadcast, and is comparable to the network used for presidential broadcasts.

The C. W. S. motion picture, "This Road We Walk," was shown, and a transcription of the Presiding Bishop's address was played for the group. The use of the movie in preparation for the February 29 campaign was recommended by Mr. Jordan.

CHRIST CHURCH RAISES $61,500

Williamsport, Penn.—Christ Church has recently completed a campaign to raise $60,000 for a complete modernization of its church, Parish House and Rectory.

The last meeting of the active campaign week was Monday, November 3. On this occasion it was evident, as reports came in, that the Parish was close to its goal. When the final figure of $61,587 was written on the report board, everybody stood and cheered. This intensive effort not only was a gratifying success, but also a real spiritual experience for the Parish.

The success of this effort, in large measure was due to the committee chairmanship of Dr. Ronald L. Jardine, ably assisted by over one hundred workers, chosen from the parish membership. The Rev. G. Francis Burrill is rector.

BIRACIAL SUB-COMMITTEE MEETS

New York, N. Y.—The biracial subcommittee on Negro work was held recently at Church Missions House. The first session of the two-day meeting was devoted to a discussion of (1) "What's Different About Episcopalianism," an article in The Negro World Statesman, and (2) The report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, and its probable effect upon our work.

A resolution was passed that ". . . the Secretary for Negro Work be assured by the National Council that the policy of the Episcopal Church offers opportunities to all, irrespective of race, wherever the missionary enterprise is carried on . . ."; however, it was pointed out that the policy of the National Council is to accept any qualified person who applies for an opening in any part of the mission field, but the responsibility rests with the bishop in charge of the mission field to accept or reject persons proposed for the field.

A report on the recent conference held in Washington concerning the recruiting and training of men and women for the ministry and religious work, was made and discussed and the Secretary for Negro Work was urged to see that the findings were implemented. These findings had to do with setting up vocational conferences, emphasis of summer conferences upon religious vocations, the relocation of postulants from dioceses where there is no Negro work to places where bishops need Negro clergymen, arranging for study and proper preparation of clergy of other communions in order that they might fulfill proper canonical requirements for entrance to our ministry, and more careful selection of students for our Life and Work Conference.

In making his report, the secretary for Negro Work, the Rev. Tollie L. Caution, D. D., gave a description of the work carried on in the diocese of Western North Carolina where he conducted model Vacation Bible Schools, Leaders Conferences, and preaching missions over a period of five weeks. He reported also on the conferences held annually at St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, N. C. and St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute, Lawrenceville, Va., also the conferences of Church workers in the First, Second and Third Provinces. Plans for summer conferences next year were discussed. Much attention was given to the advisability of changing the place of meeting of these conferences.

LATIN AMERICAN BISHOPS REQUEST INSPECTION

New York, N. Y.—At the request of several of the Bishops in Latin America, the Rev. Frank L. Titus, assistant secretary of the Overseas Department of the National Council, will make an inspection of several of the Missionary Districts in that area. He will be in Mexico February 7 to 12, will meet Bishop Reginald H. Gooden of the Panama Canal Zone at Managua on the 12th, visit Bluefields, San Jose, Costa Rica, Limon, Balboa and other points in the Zone, attending also the annual Convocation of the District, and visiting a number of the churches on both Atlantic and Pacific sides. On February 29 he will go to Cuba, leaving Camaguey for New York on March 1.

70TH ANNIVERSARY WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Boston, Mass.—Bishop Nash as preacher and celebrant at the morning service of Corporate Communion in St. Paul's Cathedral, and Mrs. Harper Sibley as guest speaker at the afternoon and evening sessions, made the 70th anniversary of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary a memorable event on Nov. 19. At the luncheon in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Nash in the Cathedral undercroft, active and retired missionary workers present included: Mrs. John Coe, Miss Caroline Couch, Miss Elise Dexter, Miss Annie Lowe, Deaconess Gertrude Stewart, and Miss Marian DeC. Ward of China; Mrs. Henry Mattocks, Philippine Islands; Miss Laura Brown of Honolulu; Miss Mabel Mansfield, Southwestern Virginia; and Miss Grace Lindley, the former executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary National Board.

Mrs. Sibley, when speaking in the afternoon and again in the evening, called for full-time volunteer workers in church and relief work, saying, "Our young people were expendable during the war; now we must spend ourselves, we women free to do so." Describing conditions in England and on the Continent, seen during her recent two months' tour of Church World Service Centres abroad, she called upon the women to aid the Church in being "an island of self-discipline", to war upon self-indulgence in the face of needs abroad that beggar belief, and to realize that today's issue facing us is moral rather than economic. Support of the United Nations, of the Stratton Bill for reception of displaced persons, of lower tariffs, especially on woolens, was urged in her address that kept 700 women in taut attention.

EVENING PRAYER SERVICE TELEVISIONED

Detroit, Mich.—The first church service televised by Radio Station WWJ-TV was that of Evening Prayer, including an Advent pageant entitled "Preparing the Way," presented on the afternoon of the last Sunday in Advent by the youth of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. The Very Rev. John J. Weaver, dean of the Cathedral, and the Rev. Robert D. Bohaker, Canon, participated in the service, which marked another milestone in the long association between WWJ, the Detroit News, and the Cathedral, whose morning service on Sundays is the oldest religious broadcast in the United States. It was first heard over WWJ on April 20, 1922.

A layman who sat in the WWJ studio and witnessed the televising of the service made the following comments:

"When I received an invitation to attend the televising of a service from St. Paul's Cathedral, I approached the whole thing with a feeling of fear. I fully expected that this would be a rather cold and formal sort of thing, from which one would not get very much. I suppose I felt it would be like the moving picture version of a book which I had read and heard reviewed from time to time. Thus the entire affair would be very matter-of-fact.

"Nearly all churchmen know and love Evening Prayer; we know where it starts, and we know where it stops. But I must confess that the first thirty seconds of that service, as it appeared on the television screen, changed my whole opinion of the possibilities of the Church over the air.

"In the room with me were two other Church people, who had been raised in the Church and who know the service from start to finish. It was interesting to note their reactions to the events appearing on the screen. The woman replaced her hat; the man forgot to light his cigar; and as the service progressed through the Processional hymn, the Opening Sentences, the prayers, the General Confession, I could hear my companions entering into the service along with the congregation seated in St. Paul's Cathedral, two miles away. This was also true of the Creed and the other responses during the service.

"The moving pageant took the place of a sermon, and as we sat there in the darkness, one could feel the spirit of the service coming across the screen. ;houghts of the possibilities now open to the Church,—carrying the services, visually, to the sick, the shut-in, hospital patients, men in prison, and many more, ran through my mind. All the warmth of the great service could be felt, somehow, in that little room, as the camera-men swung their instruments from priest to altar to congregation, and to the altar again. And we three felt, as we sat together in that small place, that it was good to have been there.

"Several days before the service was to take place, I jokingly charged Dean Weaver with driving Epiiscopalians 'to drink' because so many of our television sets are installed in taverns and bar-rooms. I understand that the radio station conducted a survey shortly after this televised broadcast, among some of the taverns. The general reaction seemed to be that as the service unfolded itself on the screen, first of all people stopped smoking to look and to listen, and then many who usually spent the evening in that place disappeared at the close of the service. Could this mean that we have found a means of converting people at a distance? It is the prayer of many who witnessed the telecast that our Church may continue to pioneer in this new and fascinating field, and so bring the Good News of Christ into the lives of many now untouched."

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS of the Sacred Ministry. By Archibald Campbell Knowles. Holy Cross Press. $2.50.

The author has written in order "to attract to the Sacred Ministry those religiously inclined." The doctrine of the Church and the vocation of the Priest as understood by this extreme Anglo-Catholic are presented in a very clear manner. One learns one cannot trust the Canons of the Church (p. 116) or the authority of the Bishop (p. 134), but must look to "the true Faith" and "the true Religion" of "the true Church" (p. 160). Many will welcome this lucid statement of a certain religious point of view, and respect the deep sincerity of the author. But at the same time, many will be perplexed because the author seems to feel that there is a relationship between the point of view presented, and the doctrine and discipline of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

LIVINGSTONE'S LAST JOURNEY. By Reginald Coupland. Macmillan, 1947. $3.50.

The author of this book has been the Beit Professor of Colonial History at Oxford since 1920, and was a member of the Sir Stafford Cripp's Mission to India, and has written several books on Africa. Our present generation knows of Livingstone only as a legend of the past. This book is therefore timely, and it is to be hoped that many will through it become familiar with one of the greatest of European "ambassadors of Christ" to Africa. The book is also of note in the light which it throws upon the African slave trade.

CREATION CONTINUES. By Fritz Kunkel. Charles Scribner's Sons, 1947, New York; pp. 308. $3.00.

There are various methods of approach to the life, work and influence of Jesus such as the historical, philosophical and theological. The author of this book, an eminent psychologist, believes there is much new light to be had on the subject through the psychological approach by probing the impact of Jesus on life, not only on his disciples but on the modern man. There must be a psychology, he says, which explains and possibly helps to bring about the change Jesus effects in men. The gospel which best serves the purpose for these insights is Matthew's, which he finds a magnificent record of the inner experiences of the early Christians, setting forth step by step the reactions of these disciples to the gospel. The material of Matthew can be viewed as a symmetrical arangement of seven blocks of material with the keystone of the arch the confession of Peter; an arrangement which helps to create in the careful reader a definite religious experience. The bulk of the book is an examination of each of these blocks of material from this point of view. It makes interesting and profitable reading.

THE LUMINOUS TRAIL. By Rufus M. Jones. Macmillan, 1947. $2.00.

Rufus Jones, the noted Quaker leader and educator, has given us in this little book of some 165 pages short biographical sketches of some of the great Christian saints upon whose lives he himself has leaned through the years of his life. Included amongst them are Paul, John, Clement of Alexandria, Hugh of St. Victor, Francis of Assisi, Catherine of Sienna, Erasmus, William Law. Rufus Jones has gained deep, spiritual insights into the unique gifts which each of the saints has received from God, and the reader can through Rufus Jones begin to enter into the wondrous fellowship of these men and women of God.

THE LORD REIGNETH. By Adam W. Burnet. Scribners. $2.00.

The Book of Revelation continues to attract and repel Christian readers. Dr. Burnet, of Edinburgh, here reveals what this book can mean to the preacher. It is a tract for bad times, and yet the heavenly legions are on the march, and they are pictured in the symbolism so familiar to those with a Babylonian heritage. Apocalyptic lierture is generally anonymous and presents God as high and lifted up, God who promises men immortality. With this introduction, the author takes the reader on a guided tour through these chapters, pointing out the great treasures of religious resources which are to be found there.

THE SOUL OF FREDERICK W. ROBERTSON. By James R. Blackwood. Harpers. $2.00.

This is a popular biography of an English preacher who died before he became famous, and whose published sermons and letters made him one of the best known and popular preachers of his time. A ministry of only six years made Robertson beloved of his people, and the power of his sermons changed the whole theory of modern preaching. This book is a simple and appealing story which all lay people will enjoy and which every preacher should place on his "must" list. Robertson of Brighton, who lived in a time of social unrest and post-war confusion, is relevant to our society today.

ORDINATIONS

On Thursday morning, January 8, the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., suffragan bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, performed two Ordinations in St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Mr. George Alexander Miller, a recent graduate from the Berkeley Divinity School, was ordained to the diaconate, and the Rev. Richard T. Brown, Missionary-in-Charge of St. Augustine's Church, Detroit, to the priesthood.

Mr. Miller is a member of St. Luke's Parish, Ypsilanti. Following his ordination he immediately assumed charge of St. John's Church, Plymouth, which has been for some time without the ministrations of a resident clergyman.

Mr. Brown was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese, last June. He will continue in charge of the work at St. Augustine's, which he has served since before his ordination as a deacon.

The preacher at the service was the Rev. Robert C. Dentan, Ph. D., associate professor of Literature and Interpretation of the Old Testament at the Berkeley Divinity School. The Rev. James G. Widdifield, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church, Detroit, read the Litany; the Rev. Hugh C. White, assistant minister in St. Luke's Church, Ypsilanti, read the Epistle, and the Rev. Mr. Brown the Gospel.

Mr. Miller was presented for ordination by the Rev. Henry Lewis, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, and Mr. Brown was presented by the Rev. F. Ricksford Meyers, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Detroit.

Following the service, a luncheon was held in the parish house of St. Andrew's Church, at which Bishop Emrich introduced the candidates and the visitors, and made a brief address, and the newly ordained men responded.

Mr. Keith R. Dean of Grace Church, Port Huron, Mich., was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., suffragan bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, in that church on the morning of Thursday, January 15. Mr. Dean is a graduate of the Central State Teachers' College at Mt. Pleasant, Michigan, and studied for Holy Orders under the direction of the diocesan board of Examining Chaplains.

Mr. Dean was presented for ordination by the Rev. Austin E. DuPlan, rector of Grace Church, Port Huron. The sermon was given by the Rev. Wm. D. Davis, rector of Christ Church, Owosso, in whose parish Mr. Dean formerly lived. The Litany was read by the Rev. George Backhurst, retired, of St. Clair, Michigan, and the Epistle by the Rev. Henry H. Firth, rector of St. Paul's Church, Port Huron.

Following the service, a luncheon was held in the parish house. Judge Clair R. Black of Grace Church, Port Huron, presented a Bible to Mr. Dean in the name of the vestry. The Rev. Mr. DuPlan presided at the luncheon, and brief addresses were made by Bishop Emrich and Mr. Dean.

Mr. Dean will become assistant to the Rev. Mr. DuPlan in Grace Church Parish.

Howard Bruce Shepherd was ordained deacon by Rt. Rev. William R. Moody, bishop of Lexington on December 24, at Christ Church, Richmond, Ky. He was presented by the Ven. Benedict H. Hanson. The sermon was preached by Bishop Moody. The Rev. Mr. Shepherd is curate at Trinity Church, Miami, Fla., and may be addressed at 464 N. E. 16th St., Miami 36, Fla.

The Rev. Edwin Percival Ferguson was ordained priest in the Bishop's Chapel, Church House, Philadelphia on January 24, 1948, by the Rt. Rev. Oliver J. Hart, bishop of Pennsylvania. Presented by the Rev. E. Elliott Durant. Sermon by Bishop Hart. To work in Oklahoma.

The Rev. John Marshall Frye was ordained priest at the same service. Presented by the Rev. Chauncey E. Snowden, to be vicar of St. John's Church, Concord, Pa. Address: Ward, Pa.

DEVOTE TOO MUCH SPACE

Sir: I have been very much grieved and I must say shocked to see so much space given over to boosting the Movies when so many religious and social workers declare them to be almost, if not quite, equal to the saloons for scandalous living.

Mary Pickford came to New York some time ago and was asked what were the conditions in that den of iniquity. She replied in one word and that was enough: "TRAGIC!" The Chicago Tribune, or one of the large daily papers in that city, declared that about 300 girls were smashed after coming to that whirlpool of sin and degradation—this in a very short time.

The suicides are frightful in Hollywood and the divorces are worse. One declared that she had been divorced nine times and was still running strong before the screen, patronized by Christians, and had become immensely wealthy.

I want to ask any Christian, not to mention minister or bishop, how can you patronize a man or woman on the stage who has been divorced over and over again? You surely have a convenient moral code to guide you. Edgar Hoover of the FBI has declared many times that the Movies are the seat of much juvenile delinquency and crime. The Police Courts furnish ample proof of the desperate conditions on the Movie stage.

I regret to see the Southern Churchman devote so much space to the supposed good points of the Movies. One of our well known missionary magazines had an advertisement of a notorious film going the rounds. I was mortified to see such a thing. I am happy to say the Editor wrote to me that it was wrong and should not have been permitted to appear.

Someone said the line today between the world and the Church was like the Equator—IMAGINARY. I often wonder what our old fathers in the Church would say if they could return and see our Church papers boosting these things. The Church no longer sings that well known hymn that our forefathers sang and believed:

"That day of wrath, that dreadful day,
When man awakes from clay,
What power shall be the sinner's stay;
How shall he meet that dreadful day?"

Now we sing instead: "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," etc.

Yours faithfully,

J. J. D. HALL.

IN ACCORD WITH REV. H. H. CHAPMAN'S LETTER

Sir: I appreciate the letter in your paper of January 24, from the Rev. Henry H. Chapman and agree with all its contents.

From time to time I have attended a Methodist church and notice how they of that faith, are using more and more ritual; they are becoming liturgically inclined. Their creed being the same as ours, should cause less trouble in arrangement of a union than it would with some of the other denominations.

The Moravian Church, as Mr. Chapman stated, has much in common with ours, this should be of great aid in becoming one.

May our Heavenly Father, the God of peace and unity, and Christ Jesus, who established one church, guide and direct us in every step "That we may be one;" as He, Christ, and His Father are one.

A LAYMAN AIRS HIS GRIEVANCE

The following is a genuine document not written for publication. It is from a middle aged man of business.

What I want to say is that all ministers are salesmen, selling God, the Church, Brotherly Love, etc. To be a successful salesman, one has to sell. To sell you have to use tactics that are catching and appealing. If you don't, there is no sale. You have to sell to the public, not to God's children that should consider it a privilege to be sold, but to the cold fickle public. To sell them you have to have salesmanship. You can sell them anything if you are a salesman; yes even lightning rods on a burned down building. Ministers are first college graduates, then three more years of study. They must have brains. Let them use them. Be a salesman and if they can't, better give up than be a wet blanket that most of the people of the town look upon as one of those things they have to put up with but wish they didn't. My main point is that to sell any thing you have to first make the prospect feel that you are with him and understand him and to do this you have to look him in the eye and make him feel you are talking straight to HIM. If you do that he starts to think "Perhaps he's right, I am a so and so, I'd better take heed etc.

Good concerns as well as gyps spend thousands of dollars to sell their products. Know what a page ad. in the Saturday Evening Post costs, radio programs etc.? Some products are good, others not so good, still they pay to advertise and sell. When you have something real, should be easy, if there is salesmanship. To reiterate, first look your customer in the eye and talk to

The Canon Law Of The Church Of England

By The REV. R. S. LEE

A very interesting book has recently been published here in England, called "The Canon Law of the Church of England". Canon Law is the law governing purely religious matters in the Church as distinct from Civil Law which governs all people as citizens. The book is actually the Report of the Archbishops' Commission on Canon Law. This Commission was appointed in 1939, and on it have sat some of the most distinguished students of Church History and Ecclesiastical Law. The present Archbishop of York, who was Bishop of Winchester in 1939, was Chairman, and he writes the foreword to the report and draws attention to its main points. The Commission has drawn up 134 revised Canons which it puts forward for adoption. The report has been presented to the Houses of Convocation of Canterbury and York and they have taken steps to arrange for full consideration of it, with a view to adopting the revised Canons, either in their present form or else amended after discussion. Some of the Canons will require Parliamentary legislation to support them. It will therefore be some time before they can come into force—or rather, before the novel elements in them are made binding.

The effect of the report is not likely to be confined to this country alone. I believe that Anglicans in Australia, for instance, will find it intensely interesting, because it clarifies many points which for over 40 years have been disputed in the Church of England there, points which have been some of the chief stumbling blocks in the way of carrying through successfully the negotiations to cut the nexus with the Church of England and establish an autonomous Church of England in Australia.

In saying that I do not mean that the new Canons if adopted will be necessarily binding upon the Church in Australia. The legal position is rather obscure, and I am not a legal expert. At first sight it might seem that they would have no legal validity in Australia. This would be the position if all of them really were new or novel Canons, as some of them undoubtedly are. But the report claims that most of them are restatements or interpretations of old Canons which needed clarification to show how they apply today. The Church in Australia is equally bound by the ancient Canons as is the Church in England, so if the revised Canons are adopted as interpretations of the old ones, Churchmen in Australia will have to consider their attitude towards them. I think I am right in saying that the same also applies to New Zealand.

The situation arises from the fact that the Church of England has no codified system of law governing it, as has the Roman Catholic Church, and no up-to-date body of Canon Law as have the Anglican Churches in Canada and South Africa. The laws which govern the Church of England are derived from many sources, and they date back to the earliest days of the Church. To attempt to codify them would be an enormous labor, far beyond the scope of the Commission. But, as the Report points out, it would be against the ethos of the Church of England to have a codified system of law. What they have aimed to do is to provide guidance on the chief matters which are most likely to be in dispute, or require detailed guidance for day to day concerns.

The first few chapters of the book explain the sources of the laws which govern the Church. In the early period these were mainly the decrees passed by General and Local Councils on the one hand, and decrees from the Popes (Papal Decretals, as they were called), giving judgments on various matters. Various codifications of these decrees of Councils and Papal Decretals have been attempted from time to time. The earliest known one dates from the 6th century. It is clear that the Church of England was an integral part of the Western Church, and remained so. It had some local modifications of Canon Law, and in certain respects, was bound by the Civil Law of England. When the full papal authority was repudiated by the Church of England, this did not mean that the Canon Law was also repudiated. In fact, it has always been regarded as binding upon the Church except in so far as it embodied the claim of the Papacy to be the sole authority of law over the Church of England.

During the time of the Reformation, when papal supremacy was finally repudiated in matters ecclesiastical, no codification or reform of Canon Law was carried through by the Houses of Convocation and the Sovereign, although several attempts were made to get a careful statement of what was binding in Canon Law. At last, in 1603, a code of Canons was sanctioned by the Houses of Convocation of Canterbury and York, and by the King. These Canons of 1603 marked a new starting point. They were not a complete code, but were rather like the present revised code, which indeed is largely based on them. That is to say, they were intended to supply obvious deficiencies and to clear up various contradictions in Canon Law. Since 1603 some minor changes have been made, and various Acts of Parliament have been passed, which have modified the application of these Canons. Some of them also are now quite obsolete, and the need for a new formulation has long been recognized as an urgent matter for the Church.

Before discussing some special points about the new Canons, let me just sum up what the position is. The sources of law which govern the Church in England are four-fold. First, ancient Canon Law, most of which is still valid, but it requires interpretation. Secondly, the Canons of 1603, which were based on ancient Canon Law. Thirdly, certain parts of the body of Civil Law apply to Church matters. And finally, there is an increasing number of special Parliamentary Statutes which deal with ecclesiastical matters. You can see, then, that the position is extremely confused, so that judgment on any particular issue may well be a most intricate and uncertain matter. And the confusion has been added to by the fact that for a long time there has been no adequate system of ecclesiastical courts to administer ecclesiastical law. The final source of authority for interpreting Canon Law has for a long time been the Privy Council, a lay body with no necessary expert knowledge of church law.

The solution taken by the report in the proposed new Canons is therefore, first, to set up a new corpus of Canons, more detailed than those of 1603, particularly on certain matters which have been grounds for dispute in the intervening period; and, secondly, to give the Archbishops of Canterbury and York the power to interpret and apply any pre-Reformation Canons or principles which are not otherwise covered by the new Canons. This is not an arbitrary power given to the Archbishops, because on any dispute or question referred to them, they are expected to take, I quote, "Such expert advice thereon as they deem proper". Thus, in one way or another, all contingencies are provided for, but on the basis of still leaving in force the general body of Canon Law, which is not covered by the new Canons and by any Acts of Parliament which may be passed to give them full effect.

Now, I have not got time to go into details on their contents. They are, as one would expect, pretty comprehensive, and cover a wide variety of things, from the place of the 39 articles to the kind of clothes the clergy should wear.

Some of the minor points which have been bones of contention within the Church for some time are given a definite ruling, and you may be interested to hear what the Canons say on them. For instance, on the question of vestments which the rubrics of the Prayer Book have not clearly settled, this is now dealt with by the plain statement that a surplice with scarf or stole, or an alb with the customary vestments may be worn, and that, at appropriate times, a cope may be worn, at the discretion of the minister. Similarly, stone alters are allowed. The practice of hearing confessions is authorized to priests who are given authority to do so from the bishop of the diocese.

More important than these details, controversial as they may be, are two novel elements. The first is concerned with the question of the re-marriage of divorced people. Divorced persons are ordinarily forbidden re-marriage in the Church, while both partners are alive, but one of the Canons proposes an exception to the rule. If a marriage has been dissolved by secular law "the bishop of the diocese sitting with his chancellor" may decide that instead of a divorce by law, the marriage might have been declared null and void, in which case he has it within his discretion to allow either of the parties to such marriage, although the other is still living, to marry another person, according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England. A minority of the Commission dissents from this proposal.

The second important step is covered in the section relating to the setting-up of Ecclesiastical Courts for the administration of Canon Law. These courts are in four levels. First, the Court of the Archdeacon; secondly, the Court of the Bishop; thirdly, the Court of the Archbishop, and fourthly, the final court for appeals and the Convocation Court for the trial of Bishops. To these we may add the King's High Court of Justice, to which at any stage of proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts appeal may be made, if the plaintiff believes there is lack of justice or bias in its proceedings. The Archbishops are required to provide judges for their provincial courts, but this does not mean that they are to give the office to one who is already a judge in the Civil Courts, nor is there any requirement that the judge must necessarily be a layman. Similarly, the Bishop has to appoint a judge to his court, and in each case the archbishop or bishop may preside in his court jointly with the judge, though he is not required to do so on every or any particular occasion. The judge in any Ecclesiastical Court is also empowered to have with him not less than three nor more than five assessors.

This new system of courts will therefore dispense with the current arrangements under which the Privy Council is the final arbiter in any ecclesiastical proceedings. The High Court will hear matters of appeal arising from questions of procedure in the lower courts, but the final decisions in the interpretation of matters in dispute will belong to the Provincial Court of the Archbishops of Canterbury or York. What therefore we can hope to expect, if the new body of Canons is passed, is that they and the courts set up under them will provide a nucleus of legislation, together with a series of case decisions, which will provide for the complete interpretation of the Canon Law of the Church of England. As I said earlier on in my talk, this is something that has long been felt necessary. It is therefore to be hoped that action will be taken upon the report in the near future, as we may well expect it to be.

The Army And The Problem Of Race

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

An official army publication has just made a remarkable pronouncement upon the race problem, advising our soldiers that race riots, lynching and other manifestations of racial animosity weaken the cause of democracy in the whole world.

The advice is remarkable only because it comes from the army with which one does not usually associate this kind of ethical sensitivity.

After attending several international conferences in recent months I have a shrewd suspicion that I understand the motives of the army's interest in this problem. One of the most surprising aspects of the international situation is the degree of sympathy which students from Asia and Africa express for the Communist cause.

This attitude is as true at Christian conferences as at more secular meetings. The Communism, or the sympathy for Communism, of the Africans and Asiatics has nothing to do with economic theory and it is usually quite unaware of the significance of the tensions between Communism and the West in Europe.

It is motivated solely by interest in the race issue. The young intellectuals of the "colored" continents need some way of expressing their resentment against the pretensions of superiority by the white races. They use Russia or Communism as a vehicle for the expression of that resentment.

One is at first surprised at this turn of events, failing to understand the plausibility of it. But if one talks with these representatives from Asia and Africa it soon becomes apparent that two facts give the idea plausibility. First, the Communist parties and student clubs are rigorously interracial. Second, Russia makes a point of championing the cause of colonial peoples.

At a conference in Lonlon, from which I recently returned, I listened to an interesting debate between a young Dutchman and an Indian on this issue. The teresting debate between a young dian that the Russian interest in colonial peoples was purely opportunistic, being meant to embarrass the western powers. But the man from India would not be convinced. He declared that even if the criticism were justified he would still support Russia against the white world.

I doubt whether any heart, filled with racial hatred, is ever changed by the knowledge of the embarrassing effect of such hatred upon the destiny of democracy in its struggle with Communism. Hatred is not displaced by love through such prudential motives.

We can therefore not expect any great change in racial tensions at home by pointing to the deleterious effects of such tensions upon our moral prestige in the world. It is nevertheless important to know that this is the effect.

The army is therefore quite right in calling attention to it. I noted at the conferences to which I have referred that youngsters were deeply impressed

A Report To St. Alban's Church Periodical Club

By MRS. D. W. THOMAS

Magnetic Springs, Ohio

If you were asked to take the chairmanship of St. Alban's Periodical Club and refused, I must tell you that you lost an opportunity to learn a lot about human interest. Also I should like to say we are in no way connected with the New Deal. C. P. C. stands for Church Periodical Club, and not for Committee on Perpetual Commotion!

The work of C. P. C. is so varied. First, there is the distribution of magazines to local organizations. It's fun to see that the right books and magazines go to the right places, and gives one an insight to what others like to read. I have learned, for example, that it wouldn't do to take the Junior League magazine to the penitentiary, or I was going to say "The Bachelor" to the Old Ladies Home, but I know now if the old ladies heard me say that they would say, "That's what you think". I know that because a copy of "The Bachelor" got in by mistake with some other magazines I took to the Home, and the matron told me afterwards that it was in great demand, and by the time the ladies had all read it, it was worn to a frazzle! I thought about that for a while, and had a talk with the librarian at the Home, who told me that the two books most popular in the Home were "She Got Her Man" and "Permanent Waving". After that talk, I decided that the standard of literature of those old folk should be raised, and that I must discipline them by taking them copies of "Christianity", and "Church and The Family", and our own "Churchman", and then late one afternoon I stopped at the Home to make a call, and found a large group of old ladies assembled in the hall downstairs waiting for supper to be announced. When they saw me they came flocking around me, and some one said: "Oh, you are the lady who brings us those beautiful magazines from St. Alban's—"Fashion", "Youth", "Living" and "Beau Brumell". Most people bring us "Advice on Christian Living" but you are so understanding.

I was almost speechless, but I did manage to say in a faint voice: "I am glad you are enjoying St. Alban's magazines," and then I sat down and listened to their conversation and watched them. All were limping, most of them had canes, several were on crutches, and two in wheel chairs. A little later on my way home I decided if anyone could put some fun into the lives of those old people it should not be withheld, so I did no more disciplining, but I still manage to squeeze a few copies of "Christianity" in between "The Bachelor" and "Beau Brummell".

As I said before, its interesting to know what people like to read and I know now that the best liked magazine at the Penitentiary is "Literature Digest". The warden says he can't supply the demand for it. I think it's because it is small and the men can carry it in their pockets. It's my favorite magazine too. I'd almost rather have to go to the penitentiary than to do without it! My, that sounds like a radio spiel, or you will think I have a monetary interest in this publication. I know that the young women at The Crittenton Home like "Tales for Frails" and "Ladies Guide", while the hospitals use all sorts of good literature. In one hospital I came upon an educated Englishman who was keeping up on current events with "Review of the World" and "Quest of Knowledge" taken to him by C. P. C. while a child in a cast was comforted with "Child's Companion".

Another part of the work of C. P. C. is the mailing of magazines to people in out of the way places. For a long time I sent "Literature Digest" to Miss Carol Birdsong in Albemarle Co., Virginia. We got very well acquainted by correspondence and several times Miss Birdsong expressed the wish that we might meet and once I almost told her I would be in Charlottesville to visit my son at the University of Virginia, and then I decided not to meet her personally. I thought a person named Carol Birdsong must have curly, golden hair, laughing blue eyes, be chubby and rosy, and I was afraid she'd be lank and dark, and I didn't want my bright bubble of illusion to burst. Later, Miss Birdsong went to Salt Lake City to do welfare work, but before she left Virginia she sent me a box of persimmons after a heavy frost down there. Oh, they were beautiful persimmons and so artistically packed I used them as a centerpiece on my dining room table for days. I must confess I liked to look at them better than I liked to eat them.

And then I sent "Good Homes" to Miss Eliza Eason in Alabama and one Christmas she sent me a box of "goober" (not gopher) peas. I wonder if all southern people call peanuts "goober" peas, or whether that is peculiar to the people of Alabama.

But all my correspondents have not been so considerate. There was the Rev. George G— who walked out on me, that is he removed himself to another parish without telling me he was going, and the following letter is the result:

"My Dear Mrs. Thomas:

Have you ever read a book called "Pigs is pigs"? If you have you will understand the position in which you are placing me here. If you have not read it, do so, then you will understand. Rev. G— left here sometime ago, and the magazines you are sending are filling my small P. O. so that soon the New Deal will have to put on an addition if you don't lay off.

Yours truly,

JEAN ANSON

P. M. at D—, Pa."

Needless to say, I used another perfectly good postage stamp to report the Rev. G. to headquarters, and had his name removed from our mailing list.

The Rev. Stanley Standish was much nicer. He wrote that he first read "Pacific Monthly" himself, then gave it to the teachers in the Mission to read, then it was put on the table for all to read, and when a new copy came the old one was sent out into the country and passed from farm to farm until it was completely worn out. I call that a worthwhile subscription as six adults read Pacific Monthly before I sent it to Dakota.

Still another feature of my work is the making of scrap books for children. My children exclaim: "How stuffy, making scrap books"! Secretly, I felt the same way about it, until I read somewhere that Miriam Hopkins, the glamorous movie actress, always has a scrap book under way for children, and then I did not feel so stuffy!

A fourth feature of the work is the re-conditioning of Christmas cards. Our club did over 1,000 cards this year and very cleverly too, with stickers, bits of poetry, small appropriate pictures covering the names, good wishes, etc. Holding one of my own personal cards and looking at it intently on Christmas morning one of my sons-in-law said, "You are sure this has not been re-conditioned?"

And so I have come to the end of the human side of the news of C. P. C. without giving you any statistics. I haven't counted the books, magazines, and Christmas cards, but we have handled a large number.

A friend of mine who collected early American china said to me one day, "Why don't you have a hobby? It adds so much to your interest in life." I immediately replied: "I have a hobby. I collect things." And she said, "Oh, do you, what do you collect?" And I said,

"Books, magazines and Christmas cards, but not to put into a cabinet, but to send to lonesome and to sick people."

So, if you are asked to take my place don't refuse, as I might not be here if I eat largely of "goober peas" and "persimmons" and you will miss a lot of fun, and also assurance that you are not merely amusing yourself, but that you are really giving pleasure to others.

I have just read this over and think it is rather frivolous for a church report. However, I could make it even more so by telling you about a proposal of marriage I had through C. P. C. from a clergyman who had also passed his three score years and ten, but I'll keep that for another time!

By The REV. W. FRANCIS ALLISON

Rector of St. Paul's Church, Montrose, Pa.

Since the subject for study in the Church Schools this Lent is the Holy Scriptures, it might be well to give a listing of some of the Audio-Visual materials that are available. Some of them are old, and some of them are new materials, but we believe that all of them are good.

RECORDINGS

ADVENTURES WITH THE BOOK: Series 5 of the All Aboard for Adventure recordings produced by the Joint Radio Committee of the Congregational Christian, Methodist and Presbyterian USA Churches. This series is available in two forms.

(a) Twelve 16 inch radio transcriptions which sell for $35.00, though the price may have been raised to $50.00 because of rising production costs. These transcriptions were made for use over broadcasting stations, but any church possessing a dual-speed turntable that will take the 16 inch recordings and will turn at the slow speed of 33 rpm. will be able to use them. All twelve programs are now available and can be purchased from the Joint Religious Radio Committee, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City 10, N. Y. An attractive picture booklet written by Charles V. Rodrigues is also available at 2c a copy. Designed primarily to be given away to boys and girls of the radio audience by sponsored programs, it also can be used as a work and source book in the local parish. It will help hold the interest of the children.

(b) Because of the difficulty of getting good materials to make the records, not all of the programs in this series have been recorded at the regular phonograph speeds of 78 rpm. However, there are at present seven of the programs available on 12 inch records. They are grouped as follows:

GROUP IV. 1. Puddin' Head's Discovery. (3 sides—13 minutes) Puddin' Head Brown, a normal American boy, receives a new Bible as a gift. In a most interesting way he is told the story of how some of the Old Testament came to be written. It closes with the story of how the 23rd Psalm might have been written.

2. Puddin' Head and the Apostle Paul (3 sides—13 minutes) is the imagined association of Puddin' Head with the imprisioned Apostle who tells him how much of the New Testament was written and how its authors suffered to see that its message was communicated to others.

3. What the Bible really cost. (3 sides—13 minutes) Puddin' Head learns the thrilling story of Wycliffe and how the Holy Scriptures were first translated into the English language.

There are five 12 inch records in this group which may be purchased separately for $10.00. They should be ordered from The Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

GROUP V. 1. The Book Leaves England (4 Sides—15 minutes.) This programs depicts the struggle of the Separatists in England to attain religious freedom.

2. The Book Crosses the Ocean. (4 sides—15 minutes) Birth and death are all a part of the great story of how the Bible was brought to America and how it established a Christian English speaking colony here.

There are four 12 inch records in this group and the cost is $8.00 for the four records. They should be ordered from The Pilgrim Press.

GROUP VI. 1. Star over the Pacific. (3 sides—13 minutes) It tells the exciting story of how Hiram Bingham sailing on the ship "Morning Star" brought the Bible to the Gilbert Islands.

2. How the Bible came to Mei Hwa. (3 sides—12 minutes) is the story of how a small Chinese boy learned about the good news of the Bible.

This group of three 12 inch records costs $5.75 and should be ordered from the Pilgrim Press. Any single record in these three groups can be purchased for $2.25.

We believe that all of the programs in this series are excellent, and, while they were written especially for junior boys and girls, we know that young people and adults will find them interesting, instructive, and enjoyable.

FILMSTRIPS

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE. 35mm black and white; 58 single frames of drawings and pictures. Cost $2.00. Produced by the Pilgrim Press under the direction of the Division of Christian Education of the Congregational Christian Church. May be purchased from the Pilgrim Press. The filmstrip is the best one that we have seen so far. It depicts the story of how the Bible developed from Old Testament days to our own times. The story is divided into 5 units. (1) Introduction: 6 frames showing how the Bible is used today. (2) Old Testament Period: 7 frames survey the Bible Story from Genesis to Jesus. (3) New Testament and Early Christian Period: 8 frames that take the story through the Roman persecutions. (4) 18 pictures giving the story from the early Canon to the Modern Bible. (5) 12 frames showing the Bible to be the most important book in the world. Each unit is a lessons in itself, or the filmstrip may be shown in its entirety. There are two mimeographed guides furnished with the filmstrip suggesting ways and means of using the filmstrip with Church School boys and girls, and with Young People and Adults.

Because of conditions beyond their control, the Department of Christian Education of the National Council was not able to produce the filmstrip on the Bible entitled "We All Read the Bible" which was to be used with the Lenten material for 1948. They are suggesting that Church Schools use the filmstrip "The Story of the Bible" which we have reviewed above.

Our latest information is that the Department of Christian Education is producing a filmstrip which they hope to have ready for this Lent entitled "The Mighty Mite". We understand that it will show the boys and girls in the Church Schools how and where the money which they put in their Mite Boxes is spent. If you are interested in securing this filmstrip, we suggest that you write at once to the Department of Christian Education, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City 10, and address your request to the attention of Miss Charlotte Tompkins.

Race Relations and Lent

This week is often called "Race Relations Week." The Federal Council of Churches has long promoted with great success the use of the second Sunday in February as a day when the Church should concern itself with this great problem, which exists in every section of our nation. It is well that we thus have the tensions of race brought to us. For in honesty we must admit that neither our Christian nor our American ideals have been attained in this field of human relations. Both ideals are clear-cut and plain for all to understand. In our faith, there is no racial distinction. The color of a man's skin means nothing to Almighty God. In Christ, all men are brothers and God is the Father of us all.

Likewise our American ideal is unequivocable. Our forefathers testified that "all men were created free and equal" and endowed by their Creator with "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The Bill of Rights and the later Fourteenth Amendment, born of a sad and tragic fratricidal war, implement this. Yet any man must admit that neither as American citizens nor as Christians have we attained these ideals in state or Church.

Faced by this failure of practice to meet ideal, many are understandably impatient. Forced to live under the daily humiliations of a second-class citizenship, one can understand the restlessness of a Negro American. Such call increasingly today for radical legal action. But the sad truth is that the passage of law does not change the hearts of men. Indeed, we already have had enough law in this field for many years! But because of the hardness of men's hearts, ways are constantly found to contravene each law even as it is passed. Notice that each Supreme Court decision reaffirming the law is immediately followed by new steps in many states to checkmate the intent of the decision. No law can ever succeed in any community if the force of that community is not behind that law. The statute books are filled with laws that are never enforced because they cannot be enforced. The community does not want them, and will not have them enforced. The Christian and the American ideal in race relations will never be attained by law. The very need for laws shows our sin, which law cannot attack or change.

The radical way seems enticing, but it is a delusion. A possible solution is a much harder and a much slower way. It consists in three things. It demands that first of all we never lose sight of our ideal. We must hold it high and know it as our goal. Then, secondly, we must be ready to face the actual reality of the situation in the community, state, or nation where we live and work. We must recognize men as they are, sinful, hard-hearted and stubborn. Finally, having grasped these two principles of strategy, we must work by education and by action for the attainment of our ideal, knowing that action is only possible as education changes men. As Christians, we think of the power of God's spirit as the dynamic of education, enlightening, guiding and leading men. In all of this, we realize that the process is tragicly slow, and that the steps we can successfully take are often pitifully few. Yet, sensitive to the ideal and concerned about the reality, we are willing, under God, to go forward slowly.

We who are white brothers of our Negro friends wish they might see this situation. It frankly is not always possible to do all that we would like to do. This is not defeatism, but realism. It is not unlike many another situation in which we as Christians are involved. Surely the disunity of Christendom is a sin. The ideal of one Church of God is admitted by all. But we face the reality of a divided Church. What shall we do? Some say, we must immediately attain the ideal. Alexander Campbell over a century ago took this position. He called Christians out of their divided Churches into a new Church that was to be the united Church of all Christendom. But because of man's stubborness and sin, if you will, he only succeeded in establishing one more denomination. In his search for the ideal, he compounded the evil! Yet, knowing that the ideal of Christian unity is not to be attained today, what can we do? We work and labor within our circumscribed Churches, segregated from our brethren in other Churches, and we take whatever steps we can towards the ideal, faltering and slow though the way be.

In all of this, progress might be faster if the Negro community would accept greater responsibility in the total situation. Granted that the white race is the majority race, and that most of the sins of the past and of the present have been committed by that race because it held the power of the majority, yet the ideal for which we both strive might be attained more quickly if Negroes would also admit the sins of their race and take a greater share of responsiblity for our common plight. Almost every plan of action of interracial committees engaged in this field seem to be in actuality proposals for white activity. We believe the racial picture would be improved if such plans of action included certain matters to which the Negro community committed itself. The white majority would do more if it could be sure that the Negro minority was doing all it could. For sometimes there can be a tyranny of a minority which is as wrong as the domination of a majority.

It is appropriate that this comes to us at the beginning of Lent. Lent is a time of penitence, of study, of discipline and of sacrifice. Each of these are needed notes in the racial situation in America today. Each of these are clarion calls to the Christian who would examine his own attitudes in this tense area. We all need penitence, for we have not lived as children of God and as brethren. We all need to study the situation with objectivity and with a sense of realism. We all need discipline, that emotional red herrings and sentimentalism do not keep us from doing that which is right. We all need to sacrifice our sinful pride and our own stubborness of mind that God's will may be done on earth. Lent ought not to be a trivial season of petty so-called sacrifices. Lent ought not to be a time of hot-house pampering of our soul by attending services that are often complacently comfortable justifications of the status quo. Lent ought not to be a time of escape by the study of a missionary theme related to some far-off land, or of a distant conference of the ecclesiastically elite. Let this Lent be a time when we wrestle with the racial issue in our own hearts, in our own community, in our own nation. Then it might indeed be a time of blessing, and Easter would indeed be a time of re-born life.

BOOK NOTES

THE PRESIDING BISHOP'S BOOK FOR LENT

REVIVE THY CHURCH, BEGINNING WITH ME. By Samuel M. Shoemaker. Harper and Brothers. $1.50. ($1.25 in lots of ten or more.)

For several reasons one would expect the Presiding Bishop's book for Lent, 1948, to be different from previous selections, and to make a wider appeal than some of those chosen in former years. This year's choice is the first to be issued under the direction of Bishop Sherrill, who appointed a small committee to help him in his decision. It comes at a time when the Presiding Bishop has written a letter, intended for every member of the Church, including those who are not communicants, asking of each "serious consideration of the claims of Christ and of the Church."

Author of the book is the rector of one of the liveliest parishes in "down-town" New York. It is a parish in which clergy, lay officials and members share actively "in the vital task of witnessing to Christ in these critical days." Mr. Shoemaker acknowledges that the book comes out of his deepest convictions and out of the experience that lies closest to his own heart. The result is a vividly written volume of eight chapters, bearing titles: "The Need and Our Resources," "How People Find God," "Making Faith Real to People," "Making Faith Work in Situations," "By All Means,' 'The Working 'Cell'," "Some Spiritual Principles," "Beginning With Me."

For his readers the author aims "to make our faith, which is the greatest possession we have, more potent in our lives, and to enable us to commend it more effectually to others." He calls it a "how" book. It shows how Jesus Christ can become real to ourselves, how to start conversations that will set others thinking about the deeper things of life and religion, how to change "the unconverted Church" into "the truly converted Church," how to tackle the Christianization of relationships and institutions.

Among many practical suggestions and illustrations are the twelve steps in the program of "Alcoholics Anonymous," the procedure of a Roman Catholic group called "Convert Makers of America," and ten suggestions for the conduct of "the working cell," which the author believes is "perhaps the characteristic instrument which God's Holy Spirit is using today."

Mr. Shoemaker's book is admirably suited to aid and inspire clergymen, lay Church workers and every one else to respond to the Presiding Bishop's clarion call to mobilize all our spiritual forces and resources in these decisive days. Every parish priest should have a copy and as many laymen and women as can be persuaded to read it. Small groups of Church people could meet together in one another's homes to discuss its contents weekly during Lent, with great profit to themselves, their friends and their parish.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY: A SURVEY OF THE STATE OF THE CHURCHES. Edited by Henry Smith Leiper. Morehouse-Gorham. $5.00.

This volume provides an authentic world's eye view of ecumenical Christianity throughout the world, and it is as important as the health of the churches can make it. Here is to be found the evaluation of the churches of the various nations in terms of what the war did to them and of what the future has in store for them. Written by responsible witnesses, giving a selection of the facts, and reflecting the enthusiasm (or lack of it) of the post-war churches, this volume cannot be overlooked by any churchman who wants to know what is the state of health among our fellow Christians. The total picture is neither pretty nor reassuring. In continental Europe and in the British Commonwealth, there is a tiredness which bespeaks a lack of energy if not a lack of faith. In the Catholic-dominated countries, there is a feeling of terrific odds against the persecuted minority of non-Roman Christians (Portugal is a good example, less obvious than in Spain). Strangely enough, Protestantism seems to be in a better condition in Germany than in France. Our service men may have been enthused about the Christian natives in the South Pacific, but it is interesting to see what the impact of the war did to these simple Christians. On the other hand, in every land there is a resurgence of Christian faith, and the realistic statements of this volume point to an "ecumenical reformation" made more clearly evident in Henry P. VanDusen's World Christianity (Abingdon-Cokesbury) and Robert Bilheimer's What Must the Church Do? (Harpers).

JOHN, THE UNIVERSAL GOSPEL. By Chester Warren Quimby. MacMillan. $2.75.

Modern developments in the study of the Bible make commentaries of increasing importance in any serious reading, and yet the average commentary is a book which the average reader tackles with reluctance. Technical and foreign words and obscure references are not easily understood and are repelling.

Dr. Quimby has done a real service in providing a short, fascinating, and thoroughly readable commentary on the Gospel of John, which presents clearly and accurately the problems concerned within the study of the Fourth Gospel. He faces the questions of authorship, date, and other perplexities frankly and honestly and point out that these questions do not detract from the basic religious values.

The book begins with a discussion of the problems of authorship, where it was written, why, how, and by whom. The reconstruction of life in Ephesus in the latter years of the first century will make more real to everyone the age in which Christianity began.

The second half of the book deals with the analysis of the text of the Gospel. The explanation of the meaning of the author, while scholarly and accurate, is lucid and interesting, and serves as an excellent companion to the Gospel when read either in study or devotion.

The message of the conclusion is most timely: that the problems facing the author face us today, that the answer of John is applicable today, that Jesus is the hope of the world, and that materialism is doomed. Man's salvation is inward and present through faith in Jesus Christ.

This is a book which all serious Christians would profit by reading. It proves that Biblical scholarship is not the exclusive possession of the professional student. It is to be hoped that this book is the beginning of a series of practical commentaries on the Bible.

PHYSICIANS OF THE SOUL. By Charles F. Kemp. MacMillan Co., N. Y., N. Y. 306 pages. $2.75.

This book is built around the theme that there is nothing that a minister does of greater significance than to help the individual meet all life's problems. The author recognizes that while the pastor has other functions of importance, yet underlying them all is the imperative to marshall the full resources of religion to relieve human needs.

This is not just another volume, however, of personal counselling, for it supplies what is found nowhere else, the history of pastoral care from the apostolic age to the present.

It takes comparatively few pages to tell the story of any expert guidance in the art of helping people to be had from the religious leaders of the first nineteen centuries, other than their utter consecration and willingness to be spent in sacrificial service. The bulk of the book has to do with the discoveries of the 20th century as to the way in which religion has been furnished with insights and techniques through developments of psychology, sociology, psychiatry and psychosomatic medicine. The manner in which pastoral work (the cure of souls) has thus been both enlarged in emphasis and revolutionzed in character is satisfactorily outlined. That the renewed interest in individual pastoral work has reached the proportions of a movement is illustrated in one of the best chapters which deals chronologically with the number of books and pamphlets produced since World War I, when the impact of psychological and case-work methods in pastoral work was first felt. The flood of volumes in this period has created a new field of religious literature. The bibliography of this and other chapters, with the appraisal of the author as to the value of the books quoted, is indispensable to the pastor who would keep abreast of the best in this field.

Kemp feels that, now that it has been demonstrated that religion has resources for the solution of personal problems not available elsewhere, what is most needed is an exhaustive study of the techniques and methods by which this therapeutic power can be employed by the average pastor.

The book is a workman-like job, well written, indispensable for every clergyman's working library.

WITHOUT HALOS. By Bess White Cochran. Westminster Press. $2.50.

This is a delightful book of life in a parsonage. The author was one of five daughters, and this reviewer at least can imagine what happens with five girls' helping to run a church! Against a background of a happy family life and great activity in the church, this book gives a picture of what Christian amounts to in many churches. The insight of the author appears in the following: "Joining a church guarantees no social distinction. But it may bring advantages of a social nature. While some people join to worship a stern God and others a forgiving Jesus, all who become active in the ranks find a social stimulation in their task. For, in spite of their quarrels, Church people have a strong bond of loyalty. It was probably born of the persecutions of the early Christians, and it has been developed throughout the years by our common dangers and delights. Today it flourishes in a contagious sense of camaraderie and a stimulating feeling of cohesiveness, but it has a by-product of pride which can occasionally help and sometimes hinder the Church." Every Christian will gain much from the fun and insight of this book.

WHO AM I? By John B. Walthour. MacMillan. $2.

The chaplain of the United States Military Academy used to play a game in which he would provide clues to the identity of various Biblical characters. In this book, the reader may pit his wits against the cadets and also test his own knowledge of Scripture. It is a fascinating and humbling exercise. The author is now Dean of St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta, and this volume shows him a worthy successor to the brilliant Raimundo le Ovies.

THE CHRISTIAN SIGNIFICANCE OF KARL MARX. By Alexander Miller. MacMillan. $1.75.

Christians are becoming more and more aware of the fact that they must live in a world which includes not only Moslems and Hindus and the various other religions but also Marxism, and for this they need more careful guidance than that provided by the Hearst and MacCormick Press. This little volume by a New Zealand Presbyterian has three chapters which are a good summary of classical Marxism, including its critique of capitalism. The criticicisms of Marxism are those of Max Eastman, Arthur Koestler, and John Macmurray. From this, he proceeds to summarize classical Protestant Christianity in terms of faith and political action, and to show what the Christian can do about living in a world which includes Communists. In so far as the Christian is a political and economic realist, he must take seriously the Marxist diagnosis of the ills of capitalism even though he would not subscribe to the Marxist cure (which is no cure at all in Christian terms). There is no specially "Christian" political action, but as Christians we must act politically along with humanists, secularists, and Communists. There is no other way of behaving in this passing world. What Christianity provides is a life grounded in heaven, and thus he sees the whole world in its kinship to Christ. He thus owes loyalty both to Church and State, and this is a constant source of irritation to those who see this world as the total story of human destiny. In the midst of muddy, sentimental, and sloppy thinking, the clear stream of this Christian minister's thought should deepen our own insights into the recurrent dilemmas of a just society.

CREATIVE ACTIVITIES. By Rebecca Rice. Pilgrim Press. $2.75.

While most church school teachers know that children learn through doing, they are not always armed with the techniques which make possible the guiding of activities to desired Christian ends. Activity for the sake of activity may keep children occupied, but it does not necessarily teach them what is the proper goal of Christian education. This volume provides interesting, colorful, and worthwhile teaching procedures which may be used by any teacher, regardless of the equipment and resources available; for part of the procedure is the using of normal, everyday materials in a creative way. By all odds, this is the best book of its kind.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF GRACE. By Oscar Hardman. MacMillan, 1947. $2.00.

The author of this book was before his retirement in 1944 Professor of Pastoral and Liturgical Theology at King's College, London, and is well known for his "A History of Christian Worship."

In Prayer Book worship we are constantly taking upon our lips the word "GRACE"—"the means of grace," "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ." This book undertakes to take this religious term and give exact meaning to it—and in this task the author has been eminently successful. Both clergy and laity will, from reading this book (and the book is most readable in style), gain a deep insight into the relationship of God with man, and of the particular role which man himself must play in the religious relationship. Because of the author's concern for pastoral theology the book is able to escape the purely academic and theoretical nature of many theological books. This book is distinctly practical in its treatment of Grace.

FAITH AND FREEDOM. By Russell J. Clinchy. Macmillan. $1.75.

This little volume is a defense of a positive and daring liberal Christianity. Dr. Clinchy shows how liberalism has been attacked by both reactionaries and radicals, and how it has developed its own internal weaknesses; and then he turns to a statement of the nature of liberalism in terms of New Testament foundations. Finally, he asserts the liberal belief in the incarnation and the power of the Christian faith. Dr. Clinchy writes clearly and simply, and what he has to say is important for this generation.

THEIR FAITH AND OURS. By Muriel Streibert Curtis. Cloister Press. Leader's Book, $1. Pupil's Book, $1.50.

This is the last course to complete the famous Cloister Series of church school lessons. Written by the renowned professor of Biblical literature at Wellesley, it is for young people and adults and may be used for high school seniors. It deals with the Old Testament, and has 12 units. Both books are rich and full in their suggestions. The method is primarily that of reading and discussion, and the insights of the Old Testament are related to the lives of the pupils through fine resources for worship; full use being made of the hymnal and prayers from inside and outside the Prayer Book. This is sure to be a popular course.

OBSERVING THE SABBATH

In our modern world the right observance of the Sabbath is no easy matter. The tensions of life, and its distractions, cause even Christians, who in their hearts believe they ought to observe the day, to have no definite program for it, and too often to fall into the habits of the world about them. On this subject the 1946 General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (Southern) said:

"Notwithstanding the command of God and the blessings involved in and flowing from a scriptural observance of the law (regarding the keeping of the Sabbath), its violation and desecration have increased and are increasing at an alarming and destructive rate. If the pace of this apostasy continues for another generation, little will be left of the high values and sacredness of this divine institution."

Some wise suggestions as to how Christians may observe the day to their spiritual betterment and blessing were made many years ago by one of the distinguished personalities of England in the eighteenth century, Dr. Samuel Johnson. His suggestions are embodied in a set of six rules concerning the Lord's Day which he drew up for his own guidance. They are:

(1) Make use of some unusual devotion upon arising.

(2) Examine my life, and particularly my last week (before God).

(3) Attend worship twice.

(4) Read in the Scriptures with such helps as I have.

(5) Read books on religion and deeper themes.

(6) Try by meditation and worship to wear off from my soul accumulated soil of the week before.

—Christian Observer.

"Old fashioned?" Perhaps. But have we anything better in our so called "modern" methods of observing the day as "holy unto the Lord?"

ALL FOR THEE

Martha Lee Doughty

Should my lot be in foreign lands
Amidst the alien, lashing bands
Of wielded cruelty, from hands
Sadistically strong,
My cry is to Thee, Lord of Love—
Reach down from Thy vast Throne above
And claim my heart and soul in love
Away—from out the wrong.
Give me the strength to bear for Thee
All wounds, as Thou on Calvary
Didst give Thyself for all—for me
Let my life be Thy song.

MY DEPARTMENT

In talking with one of the young women who does a lot of work in the Church, she spoke of the "departmental idea" in life. She said that in these days in business life and church life that this was too general for the good of the whole. We need to realize that we are working for the good of the whloe and serve them accordingly. She recognizes the need for people to be expert in their field, as she is in her own professional work, but they should be willing to listen and help those that ask questions.

In a meeting the other day and in several others I have attended this remark of hers kept coming back again and again. It seems to me that people get so bound up in their own special group in the Church that they do not know what the Church is doing. They are completely oblivous of what other groups in the parish are trying to do! I have heard people criticize the rector for things that they did not think that he did. In his quiet way he had been doing them. As she had not been to this particular service or participated in many of the things in the Church she did not really know wherein she spoke. This person is too typical!

Questions were asked in a meeting the other day which showed that people are unaware of the good things being done. It seems to me that if we had had more Parish Councils, it might be an opportunity to plan all our groups together. This general plan could be presented to the group. I am sure that it would mean a greater unity of purpose and understanding of what each group was doing in the Church. As a member of each organization present there, they could return to their own group full of information and inspiration. It is as we work together we will forget to emphasize our own interests and our own ends.

We must widen our horizons and understandings in our Church work. Have programs telling of the work of other parish groups at our meetings. Do you know what the young people are doing, the church school mission study for this Lent and other groups' aims?

It seems to me that if we could do more to understand what the whole Church's program is, and our local group plans, we would be well informed Church people. We could help with the work and feel a part of the Great Program of the Church.

THE OFFERING

It seems like a far cry from the morning collection in a little country church to the millions of dollars that are now invested in hospitals and other institutions for the care of the invalids and aged persons of the world, and to the even greater millions that are collected for community chests, and yet these great institutions began with the ministration of the Christian churches through the voluntary offerings of the congregations that were taken every Sunday, and used for the poor, for prisoners and other unfortunate persons.

Besides the reference made by St. Paul to the collection, that we have already quoted, Justin Martyr writes, "Those who are well-to-do and are willing, give as they choose, each as he himself prefers. The collection is then handed to the President (presiding officer), who from it succors orphans and widows, those who are in want owing to sickness and other causes, those who are in prison, strangers and the young."

The late Dr. Elwood Worcester in a most interesting sermon on "The Social Service of the Early Church" refers to the extraordinary efforts made by the early Christians for these purposes and says, "In the year 250 A. M., the Church in Rome was spending fifty thousand dollars a year on relief, a vast sum if we remember the purchasing power of money and the poverty of the Christians."

All of these enormous contributions for the relief of the afflicted and of the poor were no doubt made because of our Saviour's statement in the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew's gospel when he pictures the final judgment with the Judge saying to those upon His right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: For I was a hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me." (Matthew 25:35, 36.)

Thus in giving to these causes we are not only relieving the suffering of the bodies of others, but are contributing to the salvation of our own souls.

GROUND BROKEN FOR VIRGINIA SEMINARY'S NEW BUILDING

Alexandria, Va.—Bishop Frederick D. Goodwin, of the Diocese of Virginia, presided on January 15, at the ground-breaking ceremony for the first of four new dormitories to be erected at the 125-year-old Virginia Theological Seminary.

At 1 P. M., while a large group of alumni, faculty, students, and friends watched, Bishop Goodwin took the first shovelful of earth from the ground. The actual digging was preceded by the singing of the hymn, "The Church's One Foundation" and the reading of the 84th Psalm, and followed by prayers for the benefactors of the Seminary, for the work begun today, and for the Seminary itself. The Lord's Prayer and the Benediction, pronounced by Bishop Goodwin, and the singing of the hymn "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun" concluded the short service.

The new buildings, which will double the capacity of the already overcrowded Seminary, will provide living space for fifty men as well as a new refectory, more than replacing the loss of St. George's Hall which had to be razed during the war. The plans were made by the firm of Faulkner, Kingsbury, and Stenhouse in a modified Georgian style to harmonize with the architecture of the present plant. The contracting firm is Davis, Wick and Rosengarten, of Washington, D. C.

In celebration of the 125th anniversary of the Virginia Seminary this year, Dean Alexander C. Zabriskie has launched a national campaign for $660,000 to finance the new structure and to improve the existing buildings and grounds. Already $313,000 has been contributed. Groups of alumni in every section of the country are now engaged in raising the remaining amount, in order that the capacity of the Seminary which for 125 years has trained men for the ministry of the Episcopal Church may be increased.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO SON OF BISHOP OF ARIZONA

Phoenix, Ariz.—Sudden death interrupted the earthly career of Arthur Barksdale Kinsolving, III., eighteen-year-old son and namesake of the Bishop of Arizona, who died Friday night, January 22, without having regained consciousness following an accidental fall an hour earlier. He was frolicking at a gay young people's party in South Mountain Recreational Park near Phoenix when the accident occurred.

Born in Washington, D. C., he later spent several years in Pittsburgh, Pa., where his father was rector of Calvary Church prior to his elevation to the Episcopate. Attending Shady Side Academy in Pittsburgh, he was graduated from that school in 1947 and matriculated at Phoenix College in the autumn of the same year.

Immediate survivors are his father and mother; two brothers, Lester E., a student at the University of Pennsylvania, and William Lee, at home; his maternal grandfather, Wharton E. Lester, of Washington, D. C.

"Putch," as Arthur was known, was active in his life and work at Trinity Cathedral, especially with the Young People's Fellowship. He served as a layreader and an acolyte, as well as assisting qualifiedly in numerous other capacities. Affable and possessed of an understanding nature, his presence was always welcomed and his death in the flush of happy youth is a great loss to all who knew him.

Funeral services were held at Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, at five o'clock, January 24. Officiants were the Very Rev. J. W. F. Carman, Dean; the Rev. M. T. Kelsey, of the Cathedral Staff, and Bishop Kinsolving, who read the Prayers, the Commendo, and the Benediction.

In lieu of flowers the family requested that the equivalent be sent to St. Luke's Sanatorium for the Tuberculous, Phoenix, for the purpose of endowing a free bed in that institution.

DOCUMENT WORTHY OF STUDY

Virginia Council of Churches Endorses Report of President's Committee On Civil Rights

Richmond, Va.—The Executive Committee of the Virginia Council of Churches went on record in its regular quarterly meeting as endorsing, in general, the recent report of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights and as commending it to Virginia Church people as a "document worthy of study." The statement was presented as a part of the report of the Department of Interracial cooperation, which was made by the Director, Thomas C. Allen. The meeting was held in the Mayo Memorial Church House and was presided over by Dr. Riley B. Montgomery, Lynchburg, who is president of the Virginia Council of Churches.

The statement as adopted: On December 5, 1946, the President of the United States of America created, by Executive Order, a committee to be known as "The President's Committee on Civil Rights." After nearly a year's study and several public hearings this committee made its report to the President on October 29, 1947.

The Executive Committee of the Virginia Council of Churches views the report on civil rights, made by the President's Committee, as a notable contribution to our progress toward a working democracy. It commends the statement to all church people, as a document worthy of study. The Christian concern of the churches for every individual in society is central in the committee's report. We note with approval that the committee was sensitive not only to the rights of our largest minority, the Negro, but also to other minority groups within our society.

Recognizing the legitimate concern of our government with the loyalty of those who serve it in the interest of national security, we share the anxiety of the committee for proper safeguards for the rights of the individual. It should be possible to accomplish all that is needed in the way of security without jeopardizing rights that in our Constitution are held to be inviolable.

We recognize that several of the recommendations concern specific procedure about which there may be honest differences of opinion. Among the objectives in the report of the President's Committee which call for special attention from the churches in view of the Christian principles involved are the protection of human life against mob violence; equal opportunity for employment and education, and the right of every adult citizen to a vote.

The concern for civil rights in our country is particularly important from the standpoint of our leadership in the world. Our national struggle toward true democracy cannot be isolated from the world scene. We cannot hope to influence other peoples to accept the Christian way of life, or other nations to accept the democratic principles we proclaim unless we can demonstrate in our community living that we take them seriously and are trying to translate them into effective practice. To that end we earnestly hope that the membership of our churches will take seriously the challenge issued by the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

The Virginia Council of Churches further commends the Southern Regional Council for making the study of civil rights in the South its main project for 1948 and pledges its continued cooperation in an effort to further implement state laws intended to safeguard civil rights.

BISHOP TUCKER HONORED BY ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Richmond, Va.—The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, former Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church of the United States, has been made honorary rector of St. Paul's Church, where his brother, Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, of Ohio, served for many years.

The Bishop also announced that he would make St. Paul's his "Church home" in the future.

The retired Bishop was elected to the honorary office at the annual congregational meeting on January 26.

FEDERAL COUNCIL—ATLANTA CONVOCATION

Atlanta, Ga. — Some 400 church leaders, Negro and white, representatives of eight denominations in eleven Southern states, as well as local church ccuncils and church-related agencies, met here January 13-15 for the Southeastern Church Convocation, to plan a common strategy for inter-church cooperation in the southeastern region.

The three-day meeting, the first of its kind to be held in this area, was called by the Southeastern Inter-Council Office advisory committee, which includes 45 denominational leaders throughout the southeast. That committee, following the last session of the convocation, described the meeting as "truly inter-denominational in the sense that it was inter-racial" and called it "the most significant effort to encourage cooperative Christian unity among churches in the southeast that has ever been experienced." The committee is under the chairmanship of Dr. John M. Alexander, chairman also of the Assembly Committee on Radio of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.

At the opening session of the convocation in the First Methodist Church, welcomes were extended to the 400 visitors by the Hon. M. E. Thompson, acting governor of Georgia, and by the Rev. Munroe F. Swilley, Jr., President of the Atlanta Christian Council. In discussing the scope of the meeting Dr. Forrest C. Weir, Executive Secretary of the Southeastern Inter-Council Office, and Convocation Director, emphasized the unique nature of the gathering. "One like it has never happened before, so far as I know, in any region of this country. Separate denominational groups representing the same territory have convened, but this broad coverage of all denominations on a regional basis is the first."

Among the nationally-known church leaders speaking during the course of the three-day convocation was the Hon. Francis B. Sayre, President of the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations, who said, "Christianity is not merely a beautiful dream of the past. It is not a way of escape. It is an intensely practical way of life for here and now, for men and nations. If our international structure is to be built upon sheer might rather than upon the constructive forces of brotherhood, I can see no escape from a third World War. Western civilization is fast reaching a point where it must learn the way of brotherhood or else, like every other civilization which has preceded it, go under."

Mr. Sayre continued: "If what Christ said was true, His teachings are as applicable to nations as to men. We cannot fence Christianity in as applicable to our private lives but having nothing to do with our public and national issues. If this be in very truth God's world, the inexorable moral laws of the universe must bear with exactly the same force upon nations as upon men."

Emphasizing the need for Protestant unity and brotherhod in the South, the Rev. George D. Heaton of Myers Park Baptist Church in Charlotte, N. C., said, "I believe that our very first obligation here in the South is to create a genuine fellowship among ourselves and with all who are of the Church of Christ. It is an odd anomaly that in our section, where the church has a more proportionate share of the populace, we should be weaker than other sections in our cooperative strength. The fear of impairing our denominational effectiveness has caused us to strike fatal blows at cooperative activities. . . .

"It is obvious that we have within our midst an even greater barrier to fellowship than denominational loyalties. These are the loyalties which are based upon the paganism of racial superiority. One might strive to justify a break in fellowship because of a doctrinal difference, but to do so because of a pigmentary difference is abhorrent to the Christian conscience."

Terming the present day as more revoluntary in the true sense of rapid change than any before, Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, said that the kind in which we live "emphasizes the problems which should challenge us Christians especially, the human problem of adapting ourselves to change, and of teaching others how to adjust to new experience, while retaining a solid basis of conviction about God's purposes which can give us stability and serenity. The greatest service we can render, and which we believe only our faith is capable of rendering, is in providing central intelligent purpose in a fluid and changing world."

Delegates to the convocation, meeting in eleven seminar groups to plan for increased Protestant cooperation, made recommendations which were received at the last plenary session. Out of these groups came suggestions for the information of churches represented at the Convocation. The seminar on evangelism called for "a more comprehensive program for enlisting and training laymen in the evangelistic effort." A recommendation that "the larger parish plan be adopted wherever possible, to link town and country churches in a country-wide approach to the total task" came from the group meeting on missions and church extension. The world order seminar stressed the need for specific information for churches, workshops or seminars for training leaders, and inter-faith community forums.

At the last evening session of the Convocation, the Rev. Professor Bela Vasady of the University of Debrecen, Hungary said, "I have been travelling a good deal in your country for the last two years. On your trains I often see the inscription, 'Dining car in opposite direction'. I believe that it is the duty of the Ecumenical Church of today, through the fulfillment of her prophetic, redemptive, and communal missions, to teach the whole world this truth: 'Jesus Christ in opposite direction.' Jesus Christ is not to be found in individual, national or denominational self-centeredness, but in sacrificial giving and self-effacing compassion."

PREACHING MISSION, FEB. 1-8

Richmond, Va.—Following a very successful week January 11-18, directing a second annual city-wide Preaching Mission at Norfolk, the Rev. Dr. W. E. Hudson of the Massenetta Springs Conferences is repeating the same success in Richmond, for the week Feb. 1-8. Dr. Hudson reports that fifty-seven thousand persons attended the combined services at Norfolk—an increase of 12,000 over last year.

The mission in Richmond comes to a final climax Friday through Sunday February 6-8. A Church Town-Hall, modeled after the Town Hall of the Air will be conducted Friday afternoon on the subject "Is the Church Living Up To Her Opportunities?" The affirmative will be taken by Dr. Hazen G. Werner and Dr. Norman Vincent Peale: the negative by Dr. Frederick H. Olert and Dr. Bernard C. Clausen. The summary will be made by Dr. Roy L. Smith.

Congressman Walter H. Judd of Minneapolis and Dr. Peale will speak Friday night on patriotism and Christianity.

Saturday will be Youth Night with the speakers Miss Muriel Lester on the "Joys of Life—Sixty-four Years of It" and Dr. Smith on "Young Man, I say unto Thee, Arise".

On Sunday afternon two simultaneous services will be held, a mass meeting for laymen in the Mosque, and a meeting for women in Grace and Holy Trinity Church next door. The men will be addressed by Dr. Hazen G. Werner and Dr. Smith. The women will be addressed by Miss Lester.

Sunday night will be "Life Dedication Night". Dr. Sankey L. Blanton and Dr. Smith will be the speakers.

MISSIONS OF SPIRITUAL THERAPY TO BE HELD

MISSIONS of Spiritual Therapy will be conducted during Lent by Dr. John Gayner Banks, Director of The Fellowship of St. Luke. These missions will be held in the following parishes: New York, Church of The Heavenly Rest, Feb. 8-12 inclus.; Philadelphia, St. Stephen's Church, Feb. 15-20; Richmond, Va., St. James, Feb. 22-26; Washington, D. C., St. Agnes' Parish, Feb. 29 to March 4; Freeport, Ill., Grace Church Parish, March 14-18; Wilmette, Ill., St. Augustine's, during Holy Week, March 21-26. The last two are in the Diocese of Chicago. The General Theme for these Missions is "The Miracle of Renewal." In May Dr. Banks expects to sail for Britain where he will spend two months studying the work of Healing in British churches, as carried on by the Churches' Council of Healing, promoted by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM

Thirty-Three Clergy of Diocese of S. C. Meet With Bishop

Charleston, S. C. — Thirty-three clergy of the Diocese of South Carolina met in the library of St. Philip's Home, here, on January 20 for a conference on Evangelism led by Bishop Carruthers. Reports were heard from two committees previously appointed—one on teaching-preaching missions headed by the Rev. W. S. Poynor, and another on Evangelism headed by the Rev. L. A. Haskell.

The diocese will follow the Presiding Bishop's plans regarding the visitation and the Corporate Communion on the First Sunday in Lent. The clergy voted unanimously on a five-point program. 1. Each congregation is to work out a plan of Evangelism in its own area, this plan to be adopted at a conference including representative laymen, women, and young people in the parish. A description of the plan is to be in the Bishop's hands the middle of April. 2. A group to carry out a personal Evangelism program is to be developed in every congregation. 3. A teaching-preaching mission is to be conducted in every congregation. 4. A number of teams of clergy will visit communities in which there is no Episcopal Church to conduct a brief preaching mission. 5. A laymen's meeting on Evangelism is to be held in each Convocation.

The Rev. E. B. Guerry, chairman of Christian Social Relations for the diocese, explained the plans to be followed throughout the diocese for hearing the Presiding Bishop's address on February 29 and taking an offering for World Relief.

"Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit." (From the Collect for Purity, Page 67.)

As the first audible prayer comes from the lips of the Priest, and the worshipper joins with him in the supplication, the thoughts of the heart are brought out of hidden places for us to behold. We see them for what they are, often wrong, vividly before us in their uncleanness, as real to us as the old Negro preacher's illustration of sin when he likened it to a dirty shirt. The stale and shameful thought-past, neglected and accumulated, is there to be dealt with. Confession and full cleansing will come later. At this first moment of yielding self to God, humbly kneeling, about all we can do is to pray earnestly that God's Spirit-Presence may fill our minds and hearts so that those thoughts which have been so constantly with us will not be suppressed but driven out—obliterated. In the light of His presence, such thoughts as we can lift out of the larkness will shrivel, and other thoughts will arise to take their place. Be not depressed because such thoughts arise, for they lie about within us all. Even the greatest of the saints were plentifully supplied and could not escape into perpetual sweetness and light. They found the answer as they too knelt in prayer and asked God to take over their thought-life and to control it.

When the mind is centered on thoughts of God, this concentration makes difficult the ascendency of evil, which darts in to draw us away from God's good or to blank us out when we would see Jesus. So we pray, and the words sounding in our ears pound inward "cleanse our thoughts, O God"; "Lord, Jesus, make room in our hearts for Thee."

So at the very beginning of the service we open the doors of mind and heart and prepare to invite Him in, as the prayer for purity becomes our life-dedication in an hour of communion with Him.

OBSERVATIONS

Sir: As an ex-"Brass Hat" (of small size) may I make a few observations on the articles "Santiago de Cuba" and "The Military in Civil Government," in your issue of January 31.

As to Santiago, I have been there more than once when I was in our Navy. I was in our Landing Force there during the revolution of 1916-17. We camped in Wood's lumber yard in Santiago. In that city I met the Rev. Juan C. Mancebo and his wife. He, and they, were doing a fine work, amid discouraging conditions, and I hope the good work continues. Just to correct slight errors in the historical facts presented. Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, while prominent in the battles there in 1898, was still a colonel, and would be the last to be considered the commander-in-chief. And the Battle of Santiago was fought, not in its Bay, but on the high seas. These items are not important, and I want to emphasize our possibilities in Cuba, our church possibilities, and I am sure the Rev. Messrs. Mancebo and Serapion are right in their emphasis on work in the large city of Santiago.

As to "the Military in Civil Government," it sounds to me like rather a disloyal article. When I think of the many military and naval men who are, or were in their lifetime, good Christians, I fail to see why anyone should say that the American people, "at heart" have a "healthy disrespect" for the Big Brass. Admiral Leahy, in his duty as Aide to "The Commander-in-Chief"—namely, the President—is certainly supposed to be a "military" man. And I have heard few American remarks of disrespect for General Marshall. And also, what, oh what, shall we say of the many Navy and Army chaplains during the World Wars, to go no further back—military chaplains who are now in civil life? Is the Church, too, in your mind, being impregnated with "militarism?"

THOM WILLIAMSON.

A GREAT PREACHER IS GONE

The greatest preacher I have ever known died the other day. He was not known to fame; his sermons never appeared in famous volumes. Not many in the church had heard his name. He had been active in his diocese and in the General Convention for a generation, but it was always in a quiet and devout manner which few noticed. He was the best pastor in a large state capital and was acknowledged to be so by pastors of all denominations. His influence on college students was quiet but strong.

When I was in school there, back in the easy going twenties, in the easy going atmosphere of Carolina, students began as sermontasters. We started at his church and then went around to a dozen others of various denominations. We came back. His was a comparatively small church, but he preached a large and deep gospel. We had found no better sermons, and we listened to him for the rest of our school career there. It seemed that every Sunday his sermon would touch the very problem we had been concerned with that week. His words were fellow travelers with our questionings. I do not recall his texts or his themes, but I know there was light upon the way in the days that followed.

Since those days I have heard many famous preachers, and many others. But with none of them have I found such daily bread or had the problems of daily living illumined or the heart strangely warmed as by the words of grace of the rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lewis N. Taylor.

CHARLES G. HAMILTON.

BOOK REVIEWS

JOURNEY THROUGH THE BIBLE. By Walter Ferguson. Harper and Brothers. Pp. 364. $3.50

This is one of the better books on the Bible for the layman which makes pleasant and interesting the task of searching the Scriptures. His approach is refreshing. His language is simple and picturesque. Though the pages of the book are livened with humor, the subject matter is handled with reverence and the insights of the author are keen and penetrating. There is nothing stuffy nor conventional about this book. In it the figures of the Bible are no longer the dim wraiths of tradition, vague and bloodless, but the natural, homely, dynamic human beings they actually were. The chapter headings give a clue to the imagination and discernment of the author: A Good Man Down, The Baker Takes a Wife, The Little Farmer on Route One, The Misty Mid-Region of Weir, A Stranger At the Door, The Human Tornado. This book has certain imperfections as is to be expected of one written in so impulsive and imaginative a style, but withal it may be strongly recommended to the layman who will find in it much to delight and inspire him.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

The Story of the Church of South India

ITS DEVELOPMENT—REASONS FOR EPISCOPALIAN INTEREST AND CONCERN

AN APPEAL FOR YOUR HELP NOW

By THE REV. GARDINER M. DAY

Rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass.

On the twenty-seventh of last September, in St. George's Cathedral, Madras, India, a service was held which brought together Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist and Anglican Churches of South India to form The Church of South India. This meant the organic union of four denominations involving over a million Christian believers and covering an area of hundreds of square miles. It is the first time that churches representing such different types of polity have ever been united. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, President Emeritus of Union Theological Seminary, has called it "the most significant event in ecclesiastical history since the Reformation."

As anyone who has had anything to do with attempts to bring differing church groups together would suspect, this union did not happen overnight but was the result of a movement toward unity that had begun in 1908 when the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches in South India joined in organic federation and became the South India United Church. The actual planning for the larger church, which was inaugurated last September, began in 1919 when 39 men—26 Congregationalists and Presbyterians, 4 Methodists, 2 Lutherans, and 7 Anglicans—all Indian except 2, met together at Tranquebar, the historic spot where in 1706 the first Protestant missionaries landed in India. They drew up a manifesto declaring their belief that union was the will of God and calling upon all who shared that belief to work toward that end. The manifesto was widely discussed, and as a result, in 1920 a joint committee consisting of official representatives of the South India United Church (Congregational, Presbyterian) and the Church of South India, Burma and Ceylon (Anglican) held its first meeting at Bangalore to consider how such a union might be accomplished. Five years later at the fifth meeting of the joint committee official representatives of the Methodist Church in South India joined the meetings. By 1930 the conferences had progressed to the point where a proposed basis for union known as "The South India Scheme" had been drawn up by the committee for the consideration of the members of the churches which they represented.

While the Methodist, Congregational and Presbyterian Churches gave their official general approval of the plan for union, no greater encouragement was given to the South India Scheme than that of the Lambeth Conference in 1930, as this excerpt from the Lambeth statement will indicate:

"We observe, further, as a novel feature in the South Indian Scheme, that a complete agreement between the uniting Churches on certain points of doctrine and practice is not expected to be reached before the inauguration of the union; but the promoters of the Scheme believe that unity will be reached gradually and more securely by the interaction of the different elements of the United Church upon one another. It is only when the unification resulting from that inter-action is complete, that a final judgment can be pronounced on the effect of the present proposals. Without attempting, therefore, to pronounce such judgment now, we express to our brethren in India our strong desire that, as soon as the negotiations are successfully completed, the venture should be made and the union inaugurated. We hope that it will lead to the emergence of a part of the Body of Christ which will possess a new combination of the riches that are His. In this hope we ask the Churches of our Communion to stand by our brethren in India, while they make this experiment, with generous goodwill. . . ."*

The report went on to declare:

"We assent to the provision that those who unite in acceptance of the Episcopate with the functions assigned to it in the Scheme could not be required to accept any one particular interpretation of it.

"We approve the method of proceeding towards union by means of a pledge given in mutual trust, to respect the long-established traditions and conscientious convictions of the uniting Churches. Among such long-established traditions of our own we number the preface to the Ordinal, and, therefore, understand this pledge to secure that the rule which the Anglican Church has inherited, that an episcopally ordained ministry is within our Church required for the due administration of Holy Communion, will be preserved for those congregations which have in the past been bound by that rule.

"We welcome the principle of the Scheme, which is that of uniting the Churches through unification of ministries so that eventually every minister exercising a permanent ministry in the United Church will be an episcopally ordained minister . . .

"We approve the method by which it is sought to commend the use of Confirmation; we assent to the provision that the acceptance of Confirmation should not be insisted on as a prerequisite term of union; but we most earnestly commend the use of it. . . ."

As was to be expected each denomination from time to time made certain suggestions for the modification of the original scheme and the committee continued to work from 1930 until 1946. During this period the Anglican Church in South India referred questions relative to change in the Scheme to the Lambeth Consultative Committee in 1938 and 1943 and received not only the encouragement of that Committee but also the approval of the Committee appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury to study the plan under the chairmanship of Dr. A. E. J. Rawlinson, the Bishop of Derby.

On several occasions during these negotiations the Committee reached what seemed like a hopeless deadlock because of differing convictions. The Committee felt again and again that these difficulties were resolved only through the guidance of the Holy Spirit. One such instance is beautifully described by one of the Committee members, the Rev. John J. Banninga, in the April 9, 1947, issue of The Christian Century.

"It was early in the history of negotiations that, on the recommendation of Prof. Vernon Bartlet of Mansfield College, Oxford, the S. I. U. C. representatives asked that presbyters take part in the consecration of bishops, thus signifying the union of all the ministries in the ministry of the church after union. This request caused a great deal of debate and was referred by the Anglicans to the Lambeth Committee. At the 1930 Lambeth Conference it was voted that such participation might be allowed 'provided it was always understood and taught that the real consecrator was the bishop.' The non-Anglican could not accept this proviso. Attempts were made by individuals, by special committees and by groups of the various bodies to solve the problem, but finally the joint committee reached an impasse. Silence fell in the council room, heads were bowed in prayer. After some minutes the Bishop of Nasik arose and in a quiet voice said, 'I wonder if this would do.' And he read a brief statement to the effect that the clause should read, 'provided it is always understood and taught that the consecrator is God.' All felt that this idea was an answer to prayer. It was unanimously approved and stands in the constitution today. This was only one of many instances in which the committee was conscious of divine guidance."

THE BASIS OF UNION

A fundamental principle of the negotiations has been that the Union should not be attempted on the ground of the "lowest common denominator", but upon the basis that each Church should contribute its best gifts to the united church so that the church formed as a result of the union would be an enriched church. The doctrinal statement is based on the Lambeth quadrilateral which requires the acceptance of Holy Scriptures, the Old and New Testaments, as containing all things necessary to Salvation, the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, the two Gospel sacraments of Baptism and the Holy Communion and the Historic Episcopate.

A footnote on the basis of union pertaining to the Creeds is significant:

"The uniting churches accept the fundamental truths embodied in the Creeds named above as providing a sufficient basis for union; but do not intend thereby to demand assent of individuals to every word or phrase in them or to exclude reasonable liberty of interpretation, or to assert that those Creeds are a complete expression of the Christian Faith."

This note has been objected to as allowing too wide a latitude of belief. Nevertheless its purpose is to allow that liberty of interpretation which most Anglicans take for granted in relation to the Creeds. As the present Archbishop of Canterbury has said, "The note gives a liberty which most people use in regard to such words in the Creeds as 'ascended' and 'descended' ". While the four differing Churches have actually come together in the Church of South India, true organic union will only take place over a period of decades of working and worshippping together. Through interaction of the different elements in the Church real unity will be achieved. The differing consciences of the members of the church are carefully guarded by the following pledge which all the clergy of the church have taken:

"They pledge themselves and fully trust each other that the united Church will at all times be careful not to allow any over-riding of conscience either by Church authorities or by majorities, and that it will not in any of its administrative acts knowingly transgress the long-established traditions of any of the Churches from which it has been formed. Neither form of worship or ritual, nor a ministry, to which they have not been accustomed or to which they conscientiously object, will be imposed upon any congregation; and no arrangements with regard to these matters will knowingly be made, either generally or in particular cases, which would either offend the conscientious convictions of persons directly concerned, or which would hinder the development of complete unity within the united Church or imperil its progress towards union with other Churches."

By the spring of 1947 the official bodies of the four Churches had approved the entry of their respective Churches into the Church of South India.

OPPOSITION AT HOME

In view of the careful and extended nature of these negotiations from 1919 to 1946, one can readily imagine the shock which Anglicans in South India received when they learned that the Standing Committee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, meeting in England in May, 1947, passed a resolution which terminated the salaries of their forty-four missionaries and workers plus grants from the General and Medical Fund amounting to 25,000 pounds as of December 31, 1947. This meant that missionaries on the ground if they entered into the plan in which they believed it was the will of God for them to enter would cut themselves off from their source of income. Thus it became obvious that those in the Church of England who were opposed to union were going to try to prevent, by economic pressure, the Anglican Church in South India from entering into the Union.

Fortunately, Dr. Fisher, the present Archbishop of Canterbury, realized the enormous injustice of this move on the part of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, in view of the fact that the Lambeth Conference, the Archbishops, and the Derby Commission had given the Anglicans in South India such strong encouragement to proceed with the union. At the meeting of the Standing Committee of the Society in June the Archbishop presided and reviewed the entire relationship of the Church of England and the proposed union of the Churches in South India. As a result of this meeting the original motion of the Society was rescinded and after a very heated discussion the following motion was passed:

"That the Standing Committee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, believing that provision to continue former S. P. G. work in South India within carefully prescribed conditions, to be inconsistent neither with the terms of its charter nor with the declaration of policy made at its special meeting on May 8, sanctions the acceptance of subscriptions for this purpose and the payment thereof into a separate account provided that such payments do not necessarily involve any verdict on the status or principles of the South India Scheme."

The severity of the discussion is shown by the fact that motion requesting the secretary of the Society to inform by letter the members of the Society of this action in order that they might earmark part of their subscriptions for this separate account, was defeated. The Church Times reported that at one point in the discussion "The Bishop of Derby said it would be a great tragedy if people who thought as he did should be driven out of the Society." The Archbishop declared that, "the one act of treachery would be the withdrawal of the Anglican element. It must be maintained bearing its full contribution to the life and tradition of the church."

The effect of the S. P. G.'s action in South India is clearly revealed by the following open letter signed by twenty-four missionaries of South India and appearing in the English church paper, The Record, for August 29, 1947:

"It is our conviction that the Union between the Churches about to be inaugurated in South India is the Will of God and that the Anglican Church has been led into it by the Holy Spirit. This does not mean that we endorse wholeheartedly every detail of the Scheme of Union but that we believe, when rightly understood and interpreted, it does and will safeguard all that is most vital in our Anglican traditions of faith and worship. We wish to repudiate emphatically any suggestion that it will be impossible to teach the Catholic faith in the United Church and we believe, by continuing to serve the Church of South India to the best of our ability, we may each in our own measure help to bring in the full contribution of the Anglican tradition.

"Furthermore, as loyal Anglicans, we believe we can enter this Union with a clear conscience because we have behind us the declared support of the Lambeth Conference of 1930, endorsed by the Lambeth Consultative Committee in 1938 and 1943: the encouragement to go forward given in the 'Derby Report' issued by a Committee of Theologians appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1946 to consider the proposed Basis of Union and Constitution of the Church of South India; and the consent of our own General Council of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon given twice over, in 1945 and 1947. Moreover, in his address to the Convocation of Canterbury in 1945, the Archbishop gave to the Anglicans of South India the following assurance regarding the step we are about to take:

'If their going out were to be regarded as an act of schism or rebellion, then presumably there could be no relations between us and them or the Church they have joined. But their act is not so regarded. They have been encouraged to it by the Lambeth Conference; they have been authorized to proceed to it by the Province to which they belong; they take with them, as their contribution to the growth of the Church, Anglican orders, Anglican faith and forms of worship, and are protected by their constitution from the overriding of conscience. Schism is certainly not the right description of this act. It is separation accepted in the belief and hope that by it the cause of Union will be ultimately served.'

"In this belief we mean to carry on, and we are confident that God will not let His work suffer, but we have to face the fact that there will be grave financial hardships in some directions. The S. P. G. has decided to sever connections with their own work in South India from the end of this year. Block grants will cease altogether within six months while missionaries and dependent Indian workers will receive one year's honorarium. We do not wish to question the sincerity of those who made this decision nor to minimize their difficulties, but we wonder if you realize what the suddenness of this decision will involve. For a young Church, by itself, to make such a tremendous readjustment within the incredibly short time left to it is clearly impossible. Unless our friends and well-wishers, of whom we know we have many, come to our assistance, it is likely that many schools and hospitals, especially those serving the desperately poor, may have their usefulness seriously curtailed or even cease to be places of Christian influence altogether. Worst of all, a living, growing Church, its resources already heavily overburdened, may have to cease expansion, anyhow for a time and refuse to receive into its fellowship many who are sincerely seeking Christ.

"Mercifully this decision has now to some extent been mitigated by the fact that a separate account for the Church in South India is to be opened by the S. P. G., but, of course, the extent to which it can fill the gap will depend on the extent to which our friends will rally round us at this most critical moment in our history. We do therefore beg that all of you who have in any way helped us in the past will earmark your contributions for this separate account. And we also pray that many individuals and congregations, who are truly taking to heart our unhappy divisions, may see in our great venture the first practical step towards that great ideal of the Union of Christendom and give us the financial help we need in order that the rich contribution of our Anglican heritage may be given in all its glory."

Furthermore, in view of the fact that Anglo-Catholics have been holding meetings and by other means protesting the entrance of the Anglican Church into the Church of South India, the archbishops and diocesan bishops of England and Wales at a meeting last summer gave unanimous approval to the following resolution which was published in the English Church papers:

"We wish to assure the bishops and the ordained and lay members of our Communion who, in September, will be going forth to form with others the South India Church, of our prayers and of our continued fellowship in Christ. It is our most earnest hope that God will use them and their fellow-members in the South India Church to set forward the Gospel with power and to help the people of India to grow in unity; and that He will guide their venture of faith to the day when there will be full Communion between the South India Church and ourselves."

It is to be earnestly hoped that the Lambeth Conference in 1948 will approve of the action of the Church of South India, Burma and Ceylon in entering into the union church and give it all possible support. We can rejoice that the Archbishop of Canterbury has expressed himself with such clarity on this subject as he did in writing to the Rev. Canon William Elphic, Warden of Bishop Cotton Boys' School, Bangalore, India, in reply to the latter's inquiry as to the advisability of Anglicans joining the new Church of South India. The Archbishop wrote:

"I am very glad to have your letter as it enables me I hope to straighten some things out. Above all I hope that I can encourage you and your fellows to join the South India Church, happily knowing that your place in the Church of England is secure at least until Lambeth, 1948. My own sure belief is that Lambeth, 1948, will continue that security."

Meanwhile, however, as the Anglo-Catholics who oppose the union are trying to torpedo the United Church by economic pressure, it behooves those of us who believe that the Church of South India is not simply important in itself but may pave the way for unity in other parts of the world, to do everything we can to give it our immediate support and that as generously as possible. In the face of this situation, the Continuation Committee of the Church of South India, which is the executive committee of the Church entrusted with the carrying on of the work of the Church until the first meeting of the Synod of the Church, 1948, established a Thanksgiving Fund to which it is hoped all of us who are interested in the success of the Church of South India will give. The resolution establishing the Fund is as follows:

"It was resolved that a Fund should be established immediately to meet all expenses not otherwise provided for and that this fund shall be ultimately under the control of the Synod of the Church of South India. There may be many who will desire to express their profound thankfulness to God for His wonderful grace in bringing about this longed for union of the churches and this fund will give an opportunity for such thank offerings to be received and to be used to the best advantage in the service of the Kingdom of God through the Church of South India. During the early months of the life of the Church there will undoubtedly be many expenses that cannot at present be accurately forseen and it is necessary that there should be a strong central fund to guarantee that no essential service of the Church shall be neglected for lack of sufficient support during the period of transition from old organizations to the organization of the Church. It was reported with great thankfulness that already a generous anonymous thank offering of 1000 rupees had been received as well as some from America including $1,000 from Sherwood Eddy.

It was further resolved that this appeal should be made throughout South India and the Overseas Publicity Committee should be requested to further this appeal."

Dr. David G. Moses, Principal of

Hislop College, Nagpur, India, recently wrote:

"The union of the churches in South India means, in the first place, the fulfillment, however partial, of the great high-priestly prayer of our Lord and Master: 'Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word, that they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that Thou has sent me.' Countless souls, through the centuries have prayed on bended knee the same prayer of our Lord 'that they all may be one.' Today that prayer has been answered in South India."

Let every one of us express our thankfulness for this glorious answer to prayer by sending a contribution to the Church of South India and let us send it immediately for time is a tremendously important consideration. Funds are desperately needed now. Furthermore let all of us who are clergymen be sure that our congregations and Christian friends have an opportunity to give to this fund."

In order to facilitate the rapid transmission of funds, Mr. Harold Belcher of The American Board of Foreign Missions has graciously agreed to forward any contributions to Bishop Hollis in Madras for the Thanksgiving Fund. Kindly make your checks payable to The American Board of Foreign Missions and send them to the office of the Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, in care of Mr. Harold Belcher with the request that it be sent to Bishop Hollis.

The "Third Force" In Europe

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

In France recently a combination of Socialists and Liberal Catholics under the leadership of a Liberal Catholic Prime Minister took such resolute action against Communist disruption and strikes, that the outlines of what the French call "the Third Force" became apparent.

This "Third Force" is the middle ground of democracy against Communism on the left and reaction on the right. In France it seemed for a while as if Communists would drive the whole of non-Communist France into the arms of DeGaulle. That was symbolic of a general situation in Europe, and in the world for that matter.

This situation may be described as the tendency of Communism to scare people into reactionary conservatism and of reactionary conservatism to drive the left into Communism. In this fatal swing of the pendulum, the democratic middle ground is destroyed.

One reason why the democratic middle ground has been so precarious in Europe is because it is held by a combination of Socialists and Christian parties. The Christian parties, held together by common religious convictions, tend to include everything from extreme conservatives to those who share similar economic convictions with democratic Socialtists.

The reactionary wing of the Christian parties prevents cooperation with the Socialists. The Socialists, on the other hand, usually have rather "dated" and mistaken notions about the necessity of fighting religion as a reactionary force.

In France the movement headed by DeGaulle has taken the conservatives out of the Catholic party known as the M. R. P. (Mouvement Republicain Populaire) and has left people of the type of the Present Premier Robert Schuman and Foreign Minister Georges Bidault. Neither of these men can rightly be described as reactionary, as both Protestants and Socialists, who make a priori judgments about Catholic politics, are inclined to do. The radical character of their political and economic convictions would probably scare most Americans. But they are deeply devoted to democratic ideals as well as to their Christian faith.

Recent experiences with Communism have consolidated the uneasy alliance between this type of Christian and the democratic Socialists. Thus the "Third Force" emerges as a possible stable basis for the survival of democracy.

In other nations the situation is a little more complicated. In Italy for instance, the Catholic party is less democratic than in France. In Czechoslovakia the Socialists are still maintaining a united front with the Communists, though the front may not last much longer because the Socialists are increasingly apprehensive about the Communist suppression of civil rights.

It is therefore not certain that the "Third Force" will develop everywhere in Europe. But it is certain that something like the development in France is required to save democracy on the continent. It is also necessary that we in America should understand what is going on and realize that our support of the "Third Force" is absolutely essential.

II. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." (From the Decalogue, Page 68.)

But the heart is a fickle instrument, drawn here and there by pulls of affection or infatuation, sore beset when anchored in one place to one person. It is a beating, flowing thing and pours life unceasing through its portals never closed. Why do we speak of the heart at all? Can the heart love? Is the symbol of valentine's day sufficient for that great love we would have for the One who gave us life and the power to love? Not really, for the seat of our affections and emotions is in the brain, but the heart can still be used as the symbol of what we feel toward another. To love God with all our hearts must mean to squeeze everything out of our blood-streams—our life-streams—which would block off contact with Him or take up the room which we would always keep for Him. When our emotional centers are stimulated and controlled by the highest object of our being, God Himself, we can say our soul's, our heart's, our life's direction and flow carry Him at the center. We talk of the lusts of the flesh. We mean the wrong direction of our loving. Love God and there will not be time nor room for loving evil.

"With all thy heart." How often we would give our hearts to Him, but refuse to surrender the evil desires which leave no room for His entrance. First to learn, to believe, to cry aloud, "O Lord my God"; then day by day to follow where He leads, and at last our love for Him will fill our heart—all our heart's love will be for Him and for the work which He will show us to do.

J. W. KENNEDY.

DEAN BLOY ELECTED BISHOP

The Very Rev. Francis Eric I. Bloy, D. D., dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, Cal., was elected Bishop of the Diocese of Los Angeles on the first ballot at the Convention held in the Cathedral January 28. This was the second Convention called for that purpose. Dean Bloy has accepted the election.

The Rev. F. Bland Tucker, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., recently elected Bishop of Western North Carolina, has declined his election.

Lenten Surrender

Lent, we are fond of saying, is a season of spiritual discipline. Have we ever examined that word "discipline?" It means being obedient. It means the surrender of our will to the commands of another, or of a great cause. Lent, then, ought to be a time of surrender to the will of God. That surrender begins with an act of the will and of the heart, prompted by the mind. But the single act is not enough. Having surrendered, we become "occupied territory" to use our modern post-war phrase. Those who have traveled in the occupied nations of Europe tell us that the most significant thing about the occupation is that it is ever with you. Your food, your clothing, your shelter, your work, your travel, your education—yes, your life is all dependent upon the will of the occupying forces.

As Christians, we ought to be "occupied territory"! Not servilely, but proudly, for our surrender has been to Almighty God. If the keeping of Lent begins with an act of surrender, then the season might well be lived learning the rules of our occupation, the discipline of the new life. Traditionally, each Christian should have a "Lenten Rule." Its basis is always, "Not my will, but thine be done." Let us in these first weeks of Lent make our Lenten Rule. Let us not affront God by making it an affair of trivial triteness. Let it be truly a disciplining of selfishness. The coming offering for World Relief in our Church on February 29th might well be a guide-post to this rule.

The Tragic Lack of Vocations

There is deep tragedy in a letter sent out by the Rev. Frank Titus, director of the "Office of Church Vocations" of our Church. The letter begins with this sentence, "One hundred and fifteen parishes of the Episcopal Church need Directors of Christian Education." Then there is this blunt, tragic statement: "Only sixteen young women are graduating from our schools to fill the need!"

Add to this the fact that the number of men studying for the ministry in our seminaries will scarcely replace the normal loss due to death and retirement, and you realize that the Church is losing ground in respect to leadership.

Does this mean that American young people are not interested in responding to the Christian call to life service? No! Thousands of young people are entering the ministries in our sister Churches. In Richmond, Virginia, over one hundred young ladies are studying in the General Assembly Training School for Lay Workers of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. Our Presbyterian brethren in this Church number about one-quarter of the membership of the Episcopal Church. But in one institution they have nearly ten times as many young ladies studying for full time service as we have!

Something is radically wrong in our Church in this field. We believe it begins with the clergy, who do not call their young people to life service in the Church. Secondly, there is no national department of sufficient size and importance to carry on this work. All credit to Miss Ellen Gammack and the Rev. Frank Titus! But these two are "The Office of Church Vocations!" And even as such, they are off in a corner of our national organization. We need a national Department of Evangelism in our Episcopal Church!

What Is Cooperation?

We are one of the Churches that belongs to the cooperative "International Council of Religious Education." That great organization has just held its annual meeting in Grand Rapids, Michigan. It was a week-long meeting, to which religious educators and leaders of American Church life came from all over America. Its program was so extensive that it took a booklet of thirty-nine pages to print it. 256 leaders are listed in the booklet's seven pages of "Who's Who" at the meeting.

So far as we can discover, there is not a single Episcopalian among these two hundred and fifty-six leaders!

We do not fault the International Council for this, though we suspect it was poor strategy on their part. We think it happened because our cooperation in the International Council is more lip service than true cooperation. It is parallel to the attitude of our Church in so many interdenominational affairs, on both the national level and in local communities. We piously talk of cooperation and do nothing. Our national Department of Christian Education too long has acted like a lone wolf among the various Protestant denominations. Yet the record of our Episcopal Sunday Schools is not one of which we are proud. We are beset by curriculum difficulties; lack of leadership personnel; small and diminishing enrollment in our Sunday Schools; and a general apathy among the laity about the whole matter.

It would be no panacea, but there is just a chance that our brethren in the other Churches might teach us some of the answers to our needs. It can't always be that Baptist and Methodist Churches have Sunday School enrollments in the thousands while ours is in the tens simply because they have more children per family than we do! It might be that they know how to do a better job than we do!

But there is an even more important reason why we ought to make our cooperation in interdenominational affairs mean more. We have a great contribution to make to our brethren. Our Anglican heritage meets needs of which they are becoming increasingly aware. As we might learn from them, they too, might learn from us. The whole Church of Christ is weaker because of our stand-off attitude!

Nunc Dimittis

To very few was it given actually to handle the Incarnate Son of God. His mother of course had that privilege daily during the infancy period; and we may suppose that the aged Anna, who served God with fastings and prayers, coming into the temple at that instant that the man Simeon, of the second chapter of St. Luke, held out his arms, she too, after Simeon, may have handled God, manifest in that Child.

At the other end of His life, on the Day of the Cross, Joseph of Arimathea, a good man and just, who also waited for the kingdom of God, craved the Body of Jesus, and wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and laid it in his own new tomb. All four writers tell of that act, and those accounts should be read again with wonder and with worship.

During the years between the reverent handlings of Simeon and Joseph, (or, more correctly during the final three years), others there were who touched, or were touched by, that Saviour-Physician. See Matthew 8:3, 15; Matt. 9:29; Mark 3:10; Luke 7:14.

Others pressed upon Him, if only to touch His garment. Turn to Matthew 9:21; Matt. 14:36; Luke 6:19. Children were given a place in His arms, and received His benediction, as recorded in Mark 9:36 and 10:16.

We wish that His hands had been placed on our head, and that His arm had been thrown around us . . . And yet we make bold to say that great as was the privilege of the singer of Nunc dimittis, and of the others, we in this present dispensation of the Holy Spirit, are even more highly favoured, God having provided some better thing for us.

To come away from a celebration of the Lord's Supper, at which the Veil between the Lord and His friends was so slight, that in awe and with the deepest reverence and gratitude we were able to say made one body with Him, filled with His grace and heavenly benediction, He dwelling in us, and we in Him, that is indeed to know the Lord. That is the deep central glory of the Good News, actually experiencing the great promises made on the Paschal evening. But this giving of Himself to man, and our union with God in Christ is not confined to Sacramental fellowship.

"Our hands have handled the Word of life,"

In ages which we mark B. C. men of God had hid, or were hidden in the secret of God's Presence. They found that when the mind was stayed on God, great peace resulted. Look up such passages as Psalm 31:20; Isaiah 26:3; Exodus 33:14; Psalm 23.

But something yet grander was to be known. It had been predicted that a Redeemer would come, and He came, and that story is in the four Gospels, the account of His life, His crucifixion, and His rising from the dead; those great events were followed by a short period of further manifestation to the Inner Circle. The record includes the fact of the Ascension, and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. In all these, God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself.

As part of our Lenten reading, the great statements of the Upper Room should be included, chapters 14 to 17 (inclusive) of St. John's Gospel. And then, to note how the Christ of history became the Christ of experience, the Acts of the Apostles, and such Epistles as Ephesians, Philippians and Colossians should be read, and notes made of all passages which promise, or tell of, this great experience of union with the Lord Jesus Christ. He had said that it was expedient that He go away in order that He might come again. "I will come to you; the Holy Spirit shall abide with you for ever". We shall continue this thought (D. V.) in two week's time.

The Curate's Column

A BETTER SERMON

It was a cold Saturday afternoon and we were trying to 'polish off' our sermon for the next morning, but we were stuck. Somehow, it just wouldn't jell. While we were vainly trying to phrase our thoughts, we gazed idly out of the window. Slowly, it dawned on our consciousness that snow flakes were gently sifting down from a leaden sky.

We don't know what it is, but there is something soothing about the fall of snow. Watching the flakes, it was easy to concentrate on the chaotic world, and all extraneous ideas were quietly shut out. It was one of the best sermons we have ever worked out. It was just strong enough, not too strong. It reminded our people of their duties and responsibilities in a kind, friendly and convincing sort of way. It was just the sort of sermon we would love to preach.

We went to bed that night under soft blankets, and a soft blanket of snow covered the earth, but it was still snowing.

The next morning, we awoke and looked out of the window toward the Church. We blinked, and then looked again. There was snow and lots of it. It covered the third step of the Church, and those steps had eight inch rises—twenty four inches of snow. We knew what that meant. Every road and lane in the country-side was blocked. No one could get out. There would be no one at Church. We thought of our sermon —that wonderful sermon over which we had worked so hard, and which we had expected to preach so effectively. There would be nobody to hear it. It wouldn't be preached at all. That realization was a bitter disappointment.

We looked out over the snow again, and we wanted to feel a deep resentment, but we just couldn't. We saw a world clean and white, a world in which people were shut in with their own loved ones, and forced to live with them, and them alone. Then we thought of the other days when everyone scattered here and there, each intent upon his own business and his own interests, oblivious to everything and everybody else; firm in the belief that nothing else was so important.

They couldn't do that today, and it was good. People ought to stop once in a while and take stock of things. They ought to see that there are things which are more important than their own petty concerns, and people who are as important as they are. They wouldn't do it unless they were forced to. This was just such a day.

People couldn't follow their usual persuits. They couldn't seek their usual companions. They couldn't work at their usual aims. They couldn't, because a power greater than they had stopped them flat. They had to bow to Him. That was all there was, and there was nothing they could do about it, but accept it.

When we thought of this, we knew it was a far better sermon than any we could ever preach. Then we turned over in our bed and went peacefully to sleep.

THE MEEK

By the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.

What is meant by being meek? It does not mean to be "mild" or "shrinking" or "ineffective" or "timid." It is not a spineless, grovelling characteristic, nor is it a surrender attitude. It is not synonymous with that personal quality caricatured by Dickens in Uriah Heep. Were meekness anything like that, our Lord could never have laid it down as necessary in His disciples for happiness.

In the thought of Jesus, meekness must stand for something virile and positive and morally desirable. No other sort of attitude would have commended itself to Him.

Call to mind some Bible personalities which possessed the virtue of meekness. A familiar Bible question is designed to call forth the answer that Moses was ths meekest man who ever lived. Yet Moses was no milksop. He had enormous and daring energy, was capable of burning moral indignation and spoke with a force mankind will never outlive.

Jesus was meek. But no man was ever so strong, so morally unyielding, nor so effective, as His influence through all these centuries convincingly attests.

Saint Paul was meek. Yet one can scarcely imagine one more manly and vibrant with life and energy, more dynamic, or possessing more drive in his character.

That which made Moses and Saint Paul and Jesus meek was a trait they possessed in common. This was in utterly resigned obedience to the will and purpose of God. Moses never questioned or complained when he went up against what he knew to be the will of God. Not one word of protest escaped him when his whole life's desire was at last denied him and he was not permitted to lead Israel into the promised land.

Saint Paul was handicapped and perhaps tortured by a physical infirmity which he called his "thorn in the flesh." He besought God to remove it, but the only answer he ever received was, "my grace is sufficient for thee." He did not complain; his soul was not embittered. In some way too deep for him to fathom, this painful thing represented God's way for him and he was content. Indeed, he accomplished more in spite of that infirmity than most men accomplish who never have an ache or a pain.

In Gethsemane our Lord prayed as no other man before or since has prayed, and out of His prayer came the assurance that the cross was the only way, and without a murmur or a mental reservation He accepted it and went resolutely forth to die. This unrebellious and unquestioning loyalty to the will and purpose of God is what we mean by meekness. There can be no health and integration of personality without it.—The Episcopal Church Times.

THE RUBRICS

The last part of the rubric that includes the sermon holds out a very interesting suggestion, and in order to get its full value it will be well to quote the entire rubric. "Then followeth the sermon. After which, the Priest, when there is a Communion, shall return to the Holy Table, and begin the Offertory, saying one or more of these Sentences following, as he thinketh most convenient."

There are two striking features about these words. In the first place the term "Holy Table" is applied to that piece of church furniture which is almost universally referred to as "The Altar". Furthermore it is called the Holy Table at the very moment when the sacred elements are about to be placed thereon. Of course our emphasis on this fact will not roll back the wheels of time and change the altar to a table, but it is just as well to have this reminder, especially for occasions when a private Communion is being celebrated, and a simple table is vastly more convenient than a portable altar.

The other feature of the rubric that calls for comment is the phrase "when there is a Communion". This implies that the service up to this point (including the sermon and offertory) may be used as a separate form.

This use of the ante-Communion Service is very practical in the summer time, when, due to extremely hot weather and the vacation period choir attendance is limited, or non-existent. (It is an old saying that everybody takes a vacation in August except the devil). If this form is used with the Decalogue it gives us two portions of scripture, the opportunity for three familiar hymns, that nearly all congregations can sing without the leadership of the choir, thus eliminating chants, and those musical parts of the service that are difficult for a congregation to render without the choir.

The use of the service in this way also affords an excellent opportunity for the clergy to preach from and about the Epistles, which is a very good thing, because that portion of the New Testament is least known among the laity.

R. CARY MONTAGUE,

"MY FAMILY"

The other day on the train I was musing about what to write on the subject, "My Family." If you listen to conversations as I do, travelling around and eating out, you become interested in the number of times you hear about "My Family."

It is a subject about which we like to talk. We should be interested in our family but let us watch this. Do we boast too much about one famous member? Do we pin all our success, or our position, on it or our heritage? Are we not judging the merits of people on rather false standards? Family stories are fun in your own family, because as a rule they supply humor and a sense of give and take. But outside they are not too interesting except as an occasional sketch to illustrate a situation. A good family is a wonderful thing but it shows more in one's actions than words about it.

If we could turn this interest in "My Family" to a larger family how much happier we would all be. If we spent as much time talking about the Christian Family as we do our own we would have a deeper sense of belonging to something greater than ourselves. If we knew as much about some of the people of the Bible, Church History and Christian heroes of today we would be more verbal Christians.

Our Christian heritage is great. It is wonderful. We have saints, martyrs, missionaries, priest, deacons, bishops layworkers, parents and peoples of all walks of life. We should think of what "My Family" can do for "Our Family."

Now that we are reading and studying about Evangelism, we should all begin to talk about it. Unless we do we might have saved ourselves the time and money spent in getting the books and reading them. It helps you to forget about "My Family" and makes you think of "Our Family."

People need the feeling of belonging to something that has permanency and growth and security and love. The Church has it through her members.

Let us think constantly in terms of "Our Family" and their needs. Let us add to our prayers those not only in our immediate family, but also others around the world. During Lent, as we study in the Church Schools about others let us include them in our prayers. Let us pray by name as far as possible. We should work, study, and pray for "Our Family" . . . in One World.

Consultant of Christian Education,

Bishop Emrich Unanimously Elected Coadjutor—No Other Nominations

Detroit, Mich.—With dramatic suddenness, and in an atmosphere of complete and harmonious unanimity, the Rt. Rev. Edward S. Emrich, Ph. D., suffragan bishop of Michigan, was elected as Bishop Coadjutor at the 115th Annual Convention of the diocese, held in St. Paul's Cathedral, on January 28-29.

Bishop Emrich was elected suffragan bishop of Michigan in March, 1946, and came to the diocese in September of that year. A year later, the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of Michigan since January 1, 1940, announced that he would retire on March 31, 1948, and indicated that he would give consent at the next annual Convention for the election of a coadjutor to succeed him. Later Bishop Creighton suffered a slight heart attack, and subsequently a stroke from which he is now convalescing. He was therefore unable to be present at the Convention which elected his successor.

The election of Bishop Emrich came as a special order of business on the first afternoon of Convention. The Standing Committee of the diocese, of which the Rev. James G. Widdifield is president, had acted as a committee to receive nominations for a Bishop Coadjutor, and it was to Mr. Widdifield that Bishop Emrich relinquished the chair when the special order for the election was announced.

The name of Bishop Emrich was placed in nomination by the Rev. Francis B. Creamer, D. D., secretary of the Standing Committee, who explained as he did so that, although the Committee had determined to present the name, he made the nomination, not in his official capacity but as rector of Christ Church, Grosse Pointe. The nomination was seconded by the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, and for a few moments thereafter it became difficult to persuade the Convention that no more seconds were needed. It seemed that everyone wished to support Bishop Emrich.

Opportunity was afforded for further nominations, but none were made, and the Convention therefore went through the brief formality of a vote by the Clerical and Lay orders, unanimous in each case. Bishop Emrich was escorted back to the Convention to the accompaniment of a hearty ovation and the spontaneous singing of the Doxology, and shortly made a very brief address responding to the election, in which he stated that while suffragan bishop, he had merely been "going steady" with the diocese; now they were "married, for better or for worse," and that whereas the task of a suffragan bishop was "a job," his coadjutorship would be "my life."

Someone then noticed the presence of Mrs. Emrich in the balcony of the Cathedral Hall, and she was brought forward for recognition, receiving a tribute of hearty applause.

The Convention had opened with a service of Holy Communion in the Cathedral, attended by the clerical and lay delegates to the diocesan Convention, and the Convention of Women of the diocese. Bishop Emrich at that service made an address in which he said, "What good are all our doxologies today if we do not surrender our wills? And what good are forms, if our hearts are cold? O God, renew a right spirit within all of us. If any of us has lost his zeal, if any heart has grown cold, that is very simply because we have grown apart from God, and, like Paul before his journey, become dependent upon the things below us. . . . There is a spirit stirring in the Church, a divine discontent, a desire for a deeper life, a new missionary zeal, a willingness to venture out into new forms of endeavor. Don't block that spirit. It is not yours, or mine, but God seeking to recreate and renew His world. . . . God wants to re-create and to renew His Church. And a renewed Church, full of zeal and sacrifice, is the great hope for our present world sickness."

Following the election of the Bishop Coadjutor, the Secretary of Convention read the request of Bishop Creighton for the election of a Suffragan Bishop, and this was granted. The Standing Committee of the Diocese has been requested to draw up plans for a special Convention for this purpose.

A new Commission on Stewardship and Tithing will be set up in the Diocese in consequence of a resolution introduced by the Rev. A. E. DuPlan, rector of Grace Church, Port Huron, who explained how the tithing plan now in practice in his parish had been in successful operation for several years.

Propositions to amend the Constitution and Canons of the diocese included a proposal to permit the voting on General Convention delegates by orders, if demanded, which carried at this Convention but will have to be ratified by the next annual Convention. before it goes into effect. A proposal from the Convention of Women, to permit the election of not more than two women at a time to the vestry of a parish received more than a majority of votes, but failed to carry the two-thirds necessary to alter the Canon.

Resolutions

A resolution with regard to historic old Mariners' Church was adopted, putting the Convention on record as protesting strongly against any attempt to move the building from its present site, and directed that a copy of the resolution be given to the Mayor, Council and City Plan Commission, which is undertaking extensive plans for the rebuilding of Detroit's waterfront, including the property on which Mariners' Church stands.

A lively discussion centered around a resolution having to do with supplementing the pensions allowed to retired clergy, and widows and orphans of clergymen. It was finally determined that the Trustees of the Diocese and the Executive Council should appoint a joint committee to look into this whole matter, also including retiring allowances to lay workers who have been in the diocesan employ, and to report back

CONGRATULATIONS AND THANKS

In the year 1947 every Diocese and Missionary District paid at least 100% of its Expectation. Overpayments of Expectations amounted to $36,157.62 and the percentage paid was 101.5%. Out of 98 jurisdictions to which quotas were allotted, 69 met them in full. The following statement shows the record by Provinces:

Provinces	Dioceses and Districts	Met Quota 100%	Met Expectation 100%
Foreign	5	5	5
First	7	4	7
Second	12	3	12
Third	13	9	13
Fourth	15	14	15
Fifth	13	6	13
Sixth	8	5	8
Seventh	11	11	1
Eighth	14	12	14
	98	69	98

In these days of worldwide inflation and great missionary opportunity, support of this character is highly encouraging. Our thanks are given to all in the Dioceses, Districts, and Parishes who have made possible this fine record.

Faithfully yours,

LEWIS B. FRANKLIN,
Treasurer.

to the next Convention.

Modern warfare was also discussed, but the Convention defeated a resolution which would have petitioned the Lambeth Conference to declare that "all participation in war as it is now developed, even for a good cause, is contrary to Divine Will."

The Convention carried unanimously a resolution in support of the Stratton Bill which is now before the Congress, and which would authorize the admission of 100,000 displaced persons a year for four years.

APPEAL FOR 400 ADDITIONAL CHAPLAINS

New York, N. Y.—The United States Army, through the Chief of Chaplains, is appealing for 400 additional Chaplains for Army and Air Forces, during the year 1948. The mission of the Chaplain Corps is defined as follows:

"The Chaplain, as a clergyman in the armed forces, serves military personnel and their dependents, by arranging for and conducting public worship; by giving spiritual guidance and moral counsel; by building character and promoting morale."

Chaplains must be less than 50 years of age, members of the National Guard of the United States or the Chaplain Reserve Corps. They may elect to serve for two years or for an indefinite period.

The Army and Navy Division of the National Council states that there is a similar need for Chaplains in the Navy, and that information may be had from the Division, at 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Forty-fourth Annual Council

San Antonio, Tex.—The forty-fourth annual council of the Diocese of West Texas was held in St. Alban's Church, Harlingen, the Rev. Frederick A. Croft, rector, January 18-20. About 300 delegates and visitors were present, some coming 40 miles from "the hill country" to "the valley". The former were blamed for bringing a Texas norther to a city where blossoms of Bougainvillea and Bombay plant and pink grape fruit and tangerines were to be seen in abundance.

Bishop Jones delivered his annual address at the opening service on Sunday night, speaking on the council theme, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" and presenting the plans of the Presiding Bishop on Evangelism. The same theme had been used in 1942 he said when church work was geared to a war-time program; now it was equally important for a peace-time program.

Bishop Jones stated that during 1947 one mission had been admitted to the status of a parish and two new missions established, one Todos Los Santos in San Antonio, for the Latin Americans. Ground had been broken for two new churches, one for St. Philip's congregation of negroes. Confirmations for the year had reached 766, thus placing West Texas third in the nation in rate of growth (11.3 per cent). He stated that there were 33 clergy in the diocese now and that 5 more were needed.

The business sessions were streamlined by a new provision giving to delegates advance information on matters to come before the Council. Practically all reports of the departments of the Executive Board, Diocesan Committees and Commissions were distributed to all delegates in mimeographed form after the evening service. Thus the discussion and voting were done with dispatch. Among the reports of special interest was that of the Committee on plans for the celebration of the Diamond Jubilee of the diocese (and Missionary District) in 1948.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

The Woman's Auxiliary held meetings in connection with the Council. It was their fifty-third annual meeting, as they date their origin from the days when West Texas was a missionary district. The guest speaker was Mrs. Edward G. Lasar of St. Louis, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Province of the Southwest and their representative on the National Executive Board. Mrs. Lasar spoke on the work of the women of the church, using three sub-heads—organization, program and leadership. She developed each topic and invited questions and conducted a discussion. Miss Mary Louise Villaret, diocesan director of Christian Education talked on her work, and the diocesan president, Mrs. Philip W. Harral, based her address on the Council theme, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me".

The diocesan dinner was a very happy occasion attended by more than 300. The speakers were Bishop Jones on the work in the diocese, Miss Villaret on her survey of the church schools and Mrs. Lasar, who described Seabury House and the meetings of the National Board held there. The Rev. J. Wilson Hunter, rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, on behalf of the parishes of the diocese, presented to Bishop Jones a purse for his expenses in attending the Lambeth Conference. An a capella choir of the Harlingen High School won great applause by their excellent music.

Services of Holy Communion opened each day with memorials for those who had entered into the larger life during the past year.

MISSISSIPPI—DIOCESAN COUNCIL

Aberdeen, Miss.—Meeting at now famous Natchez January 20-21, the annual Diocesan Council of Mississippi reported 473 confirmations, the largest in any year. It also elected Negro President Milan Davis as delegate to provincial Synod, re-elected, by the highest vote, well know liberal journalist Hodding Carter to the executive committee, and endorsed the able leadership in church and state of the Presiding Bishop. Rev. A. B. Keeling presented the work of St. Mark's Clinic at Jackson which is performing an unduplicated service for the underprivileged of the Negro race. Rev. W. G. Christian reported advances at All Saints' College. President Davis of Okolona College, asked for a spirit of sharing rather than of giving educational opportunities. St. Columb's, Jackson, became a parish. A motion to name the two senior active clergy who had not previously been to General Convention as deputies to the next General Convention failed to pass.

Elected to the Standing Committee were Rev. Messrs. Franks, Malone, Engle, Aiken, Messrs. Clar, Dawley, Cheney, Yerger; to Provincial Synod, Rev. Messrs. Ailen, Allen, Green, Jones, Park, Stephenson, Messrs. Weston, Dawley, Compton, Doak, Davis, Lockyer; to Executvie Committee, Rev. Messrs. Hobart, Beall, Mann, Franks, Stephenson, Messrs. Carter, Spivey, Provine, Hawkins, Beard; as trustee of All Saints', Rev. Mr. Stephenson.

LAYMEN DRAWN TOGETHER IN CHURCH WORK

New York, N. Y.—Writing from Germany, Paul Bock of Church World Service tells of the increasing needs of displaced persons, and of the efficiency of the Hilfswerk relief program. In this, 90,000 voluntary workers are engaged. Said Mr. Bock, "The relief agency combining the efforts of state and free Churches has drawn together the greatest group of laymen into practical Church work more extensively than the German Churches have ever experienced.

"Throughout the whole system, Hilfswerk is well organized and efficient. Knowing the needs and the people, the agency avoids the injustices involved in a private package program where those receive who have friends or relatives or who can write the best begging letters. The close contact with people that such a Church private agency has, makes it possible for them to know that the food and clothes are correctly used and do not enter the black market. In fact, since most food is cooked and dished out directly to the people, it is out of the question that it could enter the black market. A double check on all relief work is done by American CRALOG workers in Germany, so the system is really fool-proof."

Mr. Bock expresses concern as to whether the summer camps can be operated this year. Last year they cared for 60,000 young people, the limit that could be fed. This year the people will be unable, because of poor crops, to make the contribution of potatoes that they did last year. "The young people had little energy for play. Although relief supplies were a considerable addition, the campers ate less in a week than the average American camping youth has in a day, or sometimes a meal, according to Mr. Elmer Ot, an American YMCA worker who helped organize German youth camps this year."

The camps, Mr. Bock said, were a valuable educational medium. "Searching questions about the meaning of life, the possibility of being honest in a time when to be ethical almost means to starve, and also about the possibility of peace, were discussed. What the camps mean for German youth is immeasurable."

Move to Organize Laymen Being Conducted

Jesup, Ga.—A concerted campaign is being carried on among laymen of the Diocese of Georgia which is expected to culminate in a diocesan organization of the laymen when the annual convention takes place during the spring. The spearhead in the movement is William J. Robertson, active lay reader of Christ Church, Savannah.

Mr. Robertson, associate editor of the Savannah Morning News, is a lay reader and a vestryman of Christ Church. He is chairman of the publication board of The Church in Georgia, also member of Diocesan Executive Council.

During December Mr. Robertson conducted district meetings in Albany and in Brunswick which resulted in district organizations.

On December 7, Mr. Robertson addressed a representative group of men in St. Paul's Parish House, Albany. Six parishes were represented. Mr. Robertson's subject was "The Radiant Life", which had to do with opportunities for action for men in the Episcopal Church.

St. Mark's Church, Brunswick, was host to a district gathering of men on December 14.

Program Suggestions

Mr. Robertson outlined specific programs of work for men. He recommended the organization of a men's club in every parish and mission, even though there may be less than a dozen men to start it. Such a group should undertake definite kinds of work, depending upon needs and facilities, he said, and he suggested that men offer their services as lay readers and be prepared to receive instruction in such work, that a men's Bible class be formed, that work among young people be considered a major job—especially work like that of the Big Brother movement; that men sponsor a weekly parish paper, that work be co-ordinated with that of the Woman's Auxiliary, that a parish library be sponsored and set up, that scholarship funds for seminary students be raised, that the work of the Church school be supported, that work in prisons and jails be undertaken, that a card file of the parishioners, listing hobbies and skills, be maintained.

The speaker expressed his belief that laymen are ready and eager to work in the Church if they are encouraged and guided.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE, 80TH ANNIVERSARY

Raleigh, N. C.—Two timely addresses featured the celebration at St. Augustine's College on January 10 and 11 of the 80th anniversary of its opening. The Hon. Hubert T. Delany, of the class of 1919, justice of the Domestic Relations Court, New York City, was the speaker at the Anniversary Convocation January 10, and the Rev. George A. Wieland, S. T. D., D. D., director of the Home Department, of the National Council delivered the anniversary sermon at the special chapel services.

Judge Delany challenged both the nation and the Church to apply the basic principles on which they are founded to the solution of our national problems and those of the world. "Too long have we in America been satisfied to continue dual standards of citizenship and Christianity," said the judge, who with his nine brothers and sisters was born and received his early education at St. Augustine's. "Second-class citizenship must go, or America will not be safe for its total population," he declared. Mrs. Nannie Delany, mother of the speaker, was present as an honored guest. She spent nearly 50 years at St. Augustine's as student and teacher, working along with the late Bishop Henry Beard Delany, also an early alumnus of the institution.

Dr. Wieland's sermon theme was the question of the Psalmist, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him?" Education which does not seek to answer that question is hardly worth the cost, he said. The basic problem of the world today is a religious one—that of "living together as sons of God in a God-created and God-governed human society." Calling for a rebirth of real Christian evangelism, Dr. Wieland expressed his belief that "the future of our nation and of our world is dependent upon the effectiveness with which the Christian gospel is proclaimed."

Dr. Harold L. Trigg, president of the college, was complimented by Judge Delany and Dr. Wieland, each of whom he presented to the respective audiences.

RED CROSS SUNDAY, FEB. 29

Washington, D. C.—President Basil O'Connor of the American Red Cross has announced that February 29 has been set aside as Red Cross Sunday, and February 28, as Red Cross Sabbath.

Observance of the two special days in churches and synagogues throughout the nation preceeds the opening of the annual Red Cross Fund appeal which will be conducted from March 1 to 31.

This practice, Mr. O'Connor said, is a tradition among clergymen of all faiths to give spiritual meaning to the Red Cross appeal. In many communities Red Cross uniformed volunteers will attend religious services en masse.

CLERGY RETREAT

New Orleans, La.—The annual clergy retreat of the Diocese of Louisiana was held this year at Chemin-a-Haut State Park, which is located in the Northern Convocation of the diocese, 11 miles north of Bastrop.

Silence began at compline on Tuesday, February 3 and continued through breakfast of the following Friday morning. The conductor of retreat was the Rev. Alan Whittemore, OHC.

The retreat is planned each year by a committee on Retreats and Quiet Days, which is appointed by the Bishop, and is composed of the Rev. Frank S. Persons, II, chairman, the Rev. William F. Draper and the Rev. Edward F. Hayward.

NEW OVERSEAS RELIEF FILM AVAILABLE FREE

How Americans through the churches are helping to clothe and feed physically and spiritually the needy of Europe is portrayed in a documentary film called "This Road We Walk," which is being shown throughout America this winter by churches, schools and community groups.

Released recently by Church World Service, the United Protestant Agency for Overseas Relief, this 16mm sound film is considered the best documentary film yet produced on the subject of the ministry of healing by the Protestant and Orthodox churches in 41 foreign countries, according to the Virginia Council of Churches which has sponsored collections of clothing and goods for the needy overseas shipped by the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Md., for the past two years.

The film is available to churches, schools, clubs and other groups without charge. It shows the needs of peoples overseas, how the food, clothing and medical supplies are distributed through the CWS and how the spiritual needs of the people are met by distributing Bibles, hymn books and other Christian literature and the rebuilding of churches and seminaries.

"This Road We Walk," filmed under the direction of Julian Bryan, may be obtained without charge by writing to your State Council of Churches. A choice of two or more possible dates should be suggested in your request since the film is being booked up rapidly.

In Virginia the film may be obtained from the Virginia Council of Churches, 1444 East Main Street, Richmond 19, Virginia. In North Carolina, the Council of Churches is in Durham, Duke University Station.

LAYMEN IN PETROLEUM INDUSTRIES CONFER

Austin, Texas.—A laymen's conference for men engaged in the petroleum and chemical industries was held in Houston on the first week-end of the New Year, January 2-4. It was sponsored by the Department of Christian Education of the Diocese of Texas.

Leading the conference was Dr. H. Richard Niebuhr, Professor of Christian Ethics at the Yale Divinity School. His topics were as follows: "The Christian Church and the Crises of Our Day"; "Christian Ethics and Economic Technique: Can They be Reconciled?"; "God and Our Economic Life"; and "The Politics of the Kingdom of God". Some seventy laymen attended and their average age was under thirty-five years—both of these industries employing young men in positions of responsibility.

The purpose of the conference was to bring together men who occupy positions of leadership in the developing industrial areas of Texas for consideration of the great fundamental principles of the Christian faith—particularly as they relate to the conduct of industrial affairs. A discussion period followed each of the lectures, at which time only laymen were permitted to speak—the clergy being enjoined to silence as mere spectators. The moderator was forced to call a halt to the discussion at the end of an hour at each session, for those present were most responsive and reflected a depth of serious thought upon matters of Christian living in the industrial world.

It is planned to follow up these lectures with discussion groups in local congregations where practical application of Christian principles will be given much more complete treatment.

W. A. ARRANGING TELEPHONE COMMITTEES

New York, N. Y.—Churchwomen are intensely interested in the Presiding Bisop's radio address to be made to the whole Church on February 29. At the suggestion of Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, women all through the Church are undertaking to arrange for telephone committees to help secure a full attendance in church at the eleven o'clock service on February 29. Following the receipt of the booklet An Invitation and a Report by Church members everywhere, the organized women's groups in the parishes will follow up with telephone calls urging attendance at the service and presentation of an offering for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. "Thus," Mrs. Sherman said, "we shall have a great audience across the country listening to the Bishop's message and a large offering to help meet our obligations to the needy peoples of the world."

BISHOP MELCHER CONSECRATED

Columbia, S. C.—Fourteen Episcopal bishops and many other well-known churchmen gathered on February 5 for the Consecration of the Rev. Louis Chester Melcher as bishop coadjutor of the missionary diocese of Southern Brazil. It was the fifth Consecration in Trinity Church, Columbia, third largest parish in the South, but the first inducting a missionary bishop.

Presiding Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill was assisted by the Rt. Rev. John J. Gravatt, bishop of Upper South Carolina and the Rt. Rev. Edmund Pendleton Dandridge, bishop of Tennessee, all 14 bishops participating in the imposition of hands.

Many stood outside and a capacity congregation filled the church. An augmented choir rendered beautiful music. Clergymen of other communions, including Baptists, Presbyterians, Lutherans and a Greek Orthodox priest, took part in the processional and recessional. Practically all the Episcopal clergy of South Carolina were present and there were many from other states.

The Rt. Rev. Middleton Stuart Barnwell preached a vital, powerful sermon emphasizing the need of a virile Anglican ministry in South America.

The presenting bishops were the Rt. Rev. Thomas Neely Carruthers, bishop of South Carolina, and the Rt. Rev. John Long Jackson, bishop of Louisiana. The litanist was the Rt. Rev. Stephen Edwards Keeler, bishop of Minnesota.

Reader of the Epistle was the Rt. Rev. Henry Disbrow Phillips, bishop of Southwestern Virginia, and reader of the Gospel was the Rt. Rev. Thomas Henry Wright, bishop of East Carolina. The canonical testimonial was read by the Rt. Rev. John Boyd Bentley, vice-president of the National Council, and evidence of election was read by the Rt. Rev. Edwin Anderson Penick, bishop of North Carolina.

Other bishops present and taking part were the Rt. Rev. George Purnell Gunn, consecrated only last month as bishop coadjutor of Southern Virginia; the Rt. Rev. William Ambrose Brown, bishop of Southern Virginia, and the Rt. Rev. Albert Sidney Thomas, retired bishop of South Carolina.

Others participating in the Consecration ceremonies included: the Rev. Charles Milne Seymour, Jr., rector of St. Thaddeus' Church, Aiken, S. C., and a former associate rector of Trinity, attending presbyter; the Rev. William Sentelle Lea, rector of St. John's parish, Knoxville, Tenn., attending presbyter; the Rev. William Austin Thompson, city missioner, Columbia, S. C., deputy registrar; the Rev. Canon James Robert Sharp, executive secretary of the diocese of Tennessee, master of ceremonies; the Rev. Eugene Lewis Nixon, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, assistant master of ceremonies; the Rev. Henry Bell Hodgkins, rector of Christ Church, Pensacola, Fla., reader of evidence of permission for election; the Rev. A. G. Branwell Bennett, rector of St. Timothy's Church, Columbia, S. C., reader of evidence of ordinations; Mr. Carroll Hammett Jones, secretary of the standing committee, diocese of Upper South Carolina, reader of the consents of the standing committees, and Mr. Robert Lawson Van Doren, organist and choirmaster at Trinity Church, director of music.

Clerical representative of the missionary diocese of Southern Brazil was the Rev. Benjamin F. Axleroad, Jr., originally of Miami, Fla., and now a missionary on leave from Bage, Brazil. Present to represent the Rt. Rev. William Matthew Merrick Thomas, bishop of the missionary diocese, was Mr. Llywelyn Thomas, Bishop Thomas' son, a Washington, D. C., lawyer.

At a Consecration luncheon following the service, Bishop Sherrill said he was particularly anxious to have the people of Trinity parish realize that they were sharing their rector for a great and vital work for the whole church. "The work in Brazil has so expanded," he said, "that we have faced the question not whether to have one missionary district, but whether to have two or three.

"The Japanese colony churches have given $40,000 toward the reconstruction and advance movement in Japan," he continued. That is an indication of much vitality and interest on the part of the people to whom we are ministering in Brazil."

REV. EDMUND L. WOODWARD

Rev. Edmund L. Woodward, D. D., of Orkney Springs, Va., founder and director of Shrinemont, died February 2 in the Cora Miller Memorial Hospital, at Woodstock, Va., where he had been a patient for several days.

Dr. Woodward suffered a heart attack a week ago and was stricken with paralysis at his home at Shrinemont. He was removed to the hospital, where he remained in an unconscious condition until he suffered a second stroke which continued until his death.

Dr. Woodward, son of Warren Minor and Mrs. Mary Eliza Kennedy Stewart Woodward, was born in Richmond January 29, 1873. He was graduated from the University of Virginia with the degrees of bachelor of arts, master of arts and doctor of medicine. He also was graduated from the Polyclinic Post Graduate School of Philadelphia.

The degree of bachelor of divinity was conferred upon him at the Theological Seminary of Virginia and later he received the doctor of divinity degree from the Seminary.

Dr. Woodward married Miss Frances Peyton Gibson, daughter of the late Bishop Robert A. Gibson, of Richmond. For 15 years he was a missionary in China, where he founded the St. James Hospital in Anking. He was the first dean of the Cathedral of Our Saviour in Anking.

Returning from the mission field, he accepted a call to become rector of Grace Church at The Plains, in Fauquier County, where he served from 1910 until 1914. For seven years he was dean of the Piedmont Convocation, Diocese of Virginia. He was also dean of the Richmond Convocation, the Valley Convocation and dean and charter trustee of Church Schools of the Diocese of Virginia.

Dr. Woodward was founder of the Cathedral Shrine of the Transfiguration, Shrinemont, and has been its rector and director since 1928. From 1922 to 1928, he was editor of the Virginia Churchman.

Dr. Woodward was a versatile writer and author of "Mid-China Syllabary," the "Prince of Jerusalem," a memorial presented to the peace conference at Versailles in 1918 and "The Cathedral Shrine of the Transfiguration."

Mrs. Woodward died at Shrinemont in 1945. Surviving Dr. Woodward are two sons, David Stewart Woodward, of York, Pa., and John Minor Woodward, of Newport News; two sisters, Mrs. J. C. Cochran, of Staunton, and Mrs. Benjamin Hodges Smith.

A funeral service was conducted at Shrinemont, the rites being in charge of his cousin, the Rev. Edmund J. Lee, of Chatham; his brother-in-law, Dr. Churchill Gibson, of Richmond, and his personal friend, the Rev. M. L. Zirkle, pastor of the Lutheran Church at Oarkney Springs.

Burial was beside the grave of his wife adjoining the chancel at Shrinemont.

NANNIE CHESTON MURRAY

Entered into life everlasting on December 30, 1947, Mrs. Nannie Cheston Murray, 84 years old, of Lothian, Maryland, widow of William T. Murray and daughter of Nannie Cheston and Fenwich Hall. Mrs. Murray is survived by two sons, William T. Murray, Jr. and Fenwich Hall Murray, six grandchildren and one great grandchild; also two sisters, Mrs. O. W. Gott and Miss Sally Hall. Burial services were held on January 1, at Christ Church, West River, Maryland.

REV. EDWARD JOSEPH WECKWERTH

The Rev. Edward Joseph Weckwerth, in charge of the Five Town Field, Florence, Ray, Hayden, Coolidge, and Casa Grande, in the Missionary District of Arizona, was fatally injured Sunday, January 25, when his automobile turned over on his way home to Florence from conducting services at Ray.

Born in Grace Church Parish in the City of New York, November 6, 1910, Mr. Weckwerth attended the city schools, going on for theological studies at DuBose Training School and the Virginia Theological Seminary. Ordained to the diaconate in 1943, he has been canonically connected with the Missionary District of Arizona since then. He was advanced to the priesthood in 1945.

Mr. Weckwerth suffered a health condition which was frequently a great risk to him in his work. He was fully aware of the condition and assumed it gallantly in the service of his Master.

Surviving Mr. Weckwerth are his mother, Mrs. Marcella Weckwerth, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a brother, Lieutenant-Commander Charles F. Weckwerth, now a professor at Springfield College, Springfield, Mass.

Funeral services were held in Christ Church, Florence, on January 27, with the Rt. Rev. A. B. Kinsolving, II., D. D., assisted by the Rev. Messrs. Joseph Gregori and Randolph M. Evjen, officiating.

REV. JOHN G. SADTLER

The Rev. John George Sadtler died in Falls Church, Virginia, Wednesday, January 21. His funeral service was conducted by Bishop Goodwin assisted by the Rev. Francis W. Hayes, Jr., in the Falls Church, Falls Church, Va., with internment in Baltimore.

Mr. Sadtler was born in Baltimore County, Maryland. He graduated from John Hopkins University in 1889, and afterwards did graduate work at Leipzig University. He graduated from the General Theological Seminary in 1893 and was ordained deacon and priest the same year by Bishop Paret. In 1899 he married Anna Bryant Hill. After her death he married Ellen Bruce Rutherford, who died in December of last year.

Mr. Sadtler served as rector of Grace Church, Darlington, Md., as assistant at St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, as rector of the Church of our Saviour, Baltimore; St. Mary's Church, Baltimore; Christ Church, Bridgeport, Conn.; St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, Va.; St. Mary's Church, Arlington, and St. John's Church, McLean, Va.

For 17 years he was a member of the Board of Examining Chaplains for the Diocese of Maryland.

MISS MARGARET ROBERTS

Miss Margaret Roberts, of Milton, Mass., who was on the Church's mission staff in the Orient from 1925 to 1931, died on January 3, 1948, after a brief illness. Born in 1898, she was a daughter of the late Waters Dewees Roberts, for many years rector of St. John's Church, East Boston, Mass. Miss Roberts studied physical education at Columbia anl Boston Universities. She went to China in 1925 and taught at St. Hilda's School, Wuchang, until the civil wars of 1927 sent many foreigners out of China. Miss Roberts went to Japan and continued teaching in St. Margaret's School, Tokyo. For the past fifteen years she has been executive secretary of the Middlesex County (Mass.) Health Association.

ORDINATIONS

The Rev. Deitrich Barth Cordes, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Lawrenceville, Va., was ordained to the priesthood at a special ordination service held at that church on Jan. 30.

The service, attended by ministers of the town, county and Episcopal churches in Petersburg, Blackstone and Emporia began at 10:30 A. M. and was followed by a luncheon at the parish house for the visitors.

The Rt. Rev. George Purnell Gunn, of Norfolk, bishop co-adjutor of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, delivered the ordination sermon, which followed the processional.

Taking part in the service were the Ven. Norman E. Taylor, of Norfolk, who presented the candidate; the Rev. Charles W. Carnaw, of Virginia Beach, litanist; the Rev. Dr. Taylor Willis, rector of Christ and St. Luke's Churches at Norfolk, epistoler; the Rev. Dr. John Zimmerman, chaplain in the United States Navy, gospeler.

The examination and ordination of the candidate was made and conducted by the Rt. Rev. Dr. William A. Brown, bishop of the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

HIS WAY IS BEST

The snows of winter nurse the hopeful corn;
Long, patient months produce the harvest fair;
The darkling clouds the sunset's throne prepare;
Mid glacier crags are noblest rivers born;
The tempest tracks the mountain's face adorn;
In deepest mines are treasured gems most rare;
The port is calmer reached through storms of care;
The night of weeping melts in joyful morn.
Events are not as first they meet the sight;
The sons of God by passing griefs are blest;
Amid the dark He ever leads to light;
His purposes and plans are always right.
Commit thy way to Him, His way is best;
Oh, wait for Him, wait patiently and rest.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Church World Service In 1948

Church World Service, Inc., has been established to serve as the united channel through which the churches conduct their cooperative overseas program. It is designed to assist in such undertakings as will stimulate and strengthen the spiritual forces of recovery, through help of various kinds for pastors, theological and other students, training institutions for lay workers, rehabilitation of church institutions of social welfare, religious literature, etc. It is helping to mobilize the Protestant and Orthodox Churches for service to the Displaced Persons wherever possible and necessary as part of the spiritual ministry. It is concerned with active relief measures, providing food, clothing, medicines and other similar items especially emphasizing help for children, for the elderly and invalids, and for the re-invigoration of church workers. It also assists in famine prevention, preventive medicine and other rehabilitative measures. It channels gifts from American churches packed at CWS centers, and distributed through the churches and church institutions and by church and mission personnel overseas. The million dollars the Episcopal Church plans to raise on February 29th will be largely expended through Church World Service.

The 1948 Program In Asia

The presence of the Christian impact in Asia in the effort to build the peace of the world is critical. Unless the Christian Church does its utmost to help accomplish a new world, humanity will not soon again be impressed by the Christian teaching. Our behavior in the next ten years will have an age-long effect upon the future of Christain work, and upon the direction of civilization. The critical period is not at some indefinite date in the future. It is now.

The war has drawn bolder thinking and action from the people of Asia. It has deeply intensified much insidious propaganda for chaotic ends. Most of the propaganda in Asia does not head toward world peace. It is directed toward further bloodshed and magnified suffering.

The tempo has been incredibly speeded up in Asia. Today decisions are impending. Decisions that will give shape to life for decades to come.

Our Christian personnel in Asia is at its lowest ebb physically. Whether from lack of food, overwork, worry, inadequate fellowship during the war or for whatever reason, the pipelines of power are clogged. It is intolerable that Christianity should not play its full moral part in this changing mind in Asia. The message of the Christ is so needed. The character of the power He has to impart so sufficing for the vacuums that Asia presents.

In each country are specific aspects of need that indicate the shape of the most useful service Christianity can render. The missionary enterprise is central to the necessary expansion of the indigenous church in each land. It is of paramount urgency that the mission undertaking should be reactivated in full concert with the counsel of the indigenous Christian forces. If Christianity is to have a major effect in creating those attitudes which build peace among the peoples of Asia, with their inescapable resultant impact on the west, the Church is faced with the need for emergency mobilization, not only for relief, but for its so-called "long term task." The long term task will only be captured if Christians move speedily. The four horsemen of the apocalypse move today at airplane speeds, not in what was a breakneck speed in biblical times.

American Christians are becoming conscious for the first time of the immense power they wield in solving tragic situations when they act together—rather than separately. Through Church World Service, their duly established united service channel—they can ship medicines badly needed in Northern India within 48 hours of receiving the appeal, and have them saving lives within another week through the use of airplane services. Clothing and food in bulk can be much more quickly mobilized when people are already giving through established church channels so as to minister to need wherever it may be.

Again a nation-wide emergency in Siam was met and mastered through Christian leadership, and Church World Service medicines. In a flood in Japan supplies stockpiled by CWS and other relief agencies brought immediate relief to the homeless.

This kind of service is being done all across Asia today. Missionaries and national Christians are devoting themselves sacrificially to utilizing the means we send them to the end that people may be re-inspired by new confidence in each other, and new determination to build for tomorrow.

In 1948 Church World Service proposes to the denominations that they supply funds to implement the following program in relief or emergency measures already inaugurated, or requested by the mission and indigenous Christian forces. Whatever will advance the total Christian program for liberating and inspiring new spiritual awareness and vision among the peoples of Asia is of supreme consequence. It is natural to look first at those major areas of population whose bulk and impact in world affairs proclaims their strategic importance for tomorrow.

1948 Program In Europe

Dr. J. H. Cockburn of Geneva has said: "It is now recognized that Europe is no longer Christian. The day has come when we can no longer count on a majority of the people in Europe having an interest in, or even a knowledge of, the Christian faith or the Christian Church, and when the majority look to the State rather than to the Church as the source of their well-being. This situation has not been sufficiently pondered, nor its consequences contemplated, for what is at stake is not only the civilization of Europe, but, in the long run, the civilization of the world, and that, because something deeper still is at stake, namely the Lordship of Christ Himself over the ways of men. It is time for the American Churches, and especially for their leaders, to recognize the facts that stare them in the face, and to brace themselves to make that contribution to the selves to make that contribution to the which none but the Churches can make."

Difficulties of the Churches

The war struck a shattering blow at the Christianity of Europe, and the days since fighting ceased have done disappointingly little to repair the damage. The Churches have found their activities brought almost to a standstill. Large populations have been shifted, communications are difficult, there is a shortage of ministers, the war brought a cessation of the training of ministers, and furthermore the fall in value of money, the increased cost of living, and the breakdown of industry have had dire effects on the finances of the Churches and on all their work.

Evidences of New Vigor

There are, however, elements in the life of Europe today which make it worthwhile to speak of the revival of Church life—

The Churches of Europe have, in most cases, been shaken awake. They are beginning to be aware of the true circumstances of the times, to recognize that the Gospel must be prepared to a pagan population.

It is noteworthy that in country after country the Churches are working side by side in a new fellowship, something new in Europe.

Never before have so many people been willing to listen to the Christian preacher. The opportunities are limited only by the capacity of the Churches to go out and gather in the people.

In addition to the emergency assistance of material aid, it is to the strengthening, the reinforcing and the practical promotion of these signs of revival that the "Committee on Cooperation with the Churches of Europe" of Church World Service presents its program for 1948 for the consideration of the American Churches. This is based on the study made by the Department of Reconstruction and Inter-Church Aid of the World Council of Churches, upon whose validation of requests from the national inter-church committees, the Committee on Cooperation with the Churches of Europe makes its recommendations.

The 1948 Contributed Supplies Program
(To be used in both Europe and Asia)

The Churches have joined in a contributed supplies program which during 1947 sent 27,885,274 pounds of clothing, food, medicines, etc., to 42 countries overseas. The conservative valuation of these supplies was $8,-024,955.

It is impossible at the beginning of the year to do more than make a general outline of the major materials which Church World Service hopes to handle in 1948. The quantities that may be given can only be estimated. Through the Christian Rural Overseas Program (CROP) in which CWS participates, appeals are presented through rural areas for bulk gifts of wheat, corn, cotton, and similar supplies.

In order to make these programs self-supporting, various measures are utilized to secure the necessary funds which will send these supplies to their destination. In some cases the donors are requested to permit the sale of sufficient grain to provide as much of the costs as may not be given in cash. In the case of clothing, shoes and bedding donors are requested to give 15 cents per pound to provide for these costs. CWS budgets an estimated figure of $1,500,000 to meet the costs but hopes to meet this figure through voluntary extra gifts for this purpose.

Tentatively the contributed supplies program might be smmarized as follows:

1. Clothing, bedding, shoes from local campaigns and by individual giving, weight 15,000,000 pounds; value, $7,-500.000.

2. 500 carloads of wheat and flour, 30,000,000 pounds at $3 per bushel; vale, $1,500,000.

3. 50 carloads of cotton (60 bales per car) each at 500 pounds, 1,500,000 pounds; value, $500,000.

4. 100 carloads of dried milk at $12,-900 per car; value, $1,290,000.

Total value, $10,790,000.

Such other elements in the program as may need to be added during the year in order to respond to urgent needs overseas would be added on the self-supporting basis in all probability.

Estimate Expense for the Year Ending December 31, 1948

A. Europe	$ 9,840,000
B. Asia	9,102,500
C. Auxiliary Services	578,310
D. Literature	100,000
E. Scholarships, Theological	100,000
F. Displaced Persons Service	2,400,000
G. Contributed Supplies (for costs of shipping supplies)	1,500,000
H. General Administration	336,000
I. Total	$23,956,810
Estimated value of Contributed Supplies	10,790,000
Grand Total	$34,746,810

There are in every land innumerable humble Christians scattered in towns, villages and on farms—in small groups and as individuals they pray for the dawn of a more promising tomorrow. They feel themselves alone and impotent—frustrated in any thought or effort to transform their corner of the earth into the Kingdom of Heaven.

They are the result of Christian nurture and missionary work. They are in truth the seed of the Spirit in manifold places.

Whether they may multiply into fresh vigor and courageous and sacrificial living depends upon American Christians. We can through Church World Service save their lives physically. What is infinitely more important, we can enable them to assert once again with courage and vigor the unsearchable riches there are in Christ—the spirit that is the symbol and promise of the brotherhood of man.

Tomorrow's world—its shape, its purpose, its direction—waits on American Christians. To a frightening degree tomorrow will be what we decide.

III. "Thou shalt have none other Gods but me." (From the Decalogue, Page 68.)

None other gods? But there is only one God, whom we know best through Jesus Christ. That commandment is no longer needed. We live in an enlightened age. Superstition and idolatry have gone. Why do we have to hear such out-of-date material in a Prayer Book revised as late as 1928?

Perhaps some such meditation has gone on in all of us at one time or another and we have responded half-heartedly to these ancient words, "incline our hearts to keep this law".

"I am thy God." Is it true? Do we worship and serve Him alone? Do we put our whole trust in Him and call upon Him? If we are honest some disturbing thoughts will arise about the other gods and half-gods which have come in and crowded the one Good God out. Be honest. What about these false gods: ambition, money, pride, power, body, race, nation, class, science, philosophy, ethics, profession, fame, state, children, reason, psychology, education, social service, and what else for us?

All these are false gods or half-gods on which we waste our worship and our hopes. So men have done from time's beginning, and still do. "Thou shalt have none other gods but me."

"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God with all" that He has given thee, and hold to His way alone, else thou wilt be led into lostness and darkness, and thy life will produce waste and wantonness.

God alone is worthy of our complete loyalty and allegiance. We therefore surrender to Him.

Reviews and Ratings of Current Films

By the PROTESTANT MOTION PICTURE COUNCIL

Picture of the Month:

THE TENDER YEARS

For many a moon, it seems, we have been lamenting in these columns and elsewhere the seeming inability (or unwillingness) on the part of Hollywood to devote its skills to the characterization of a Protestant minister who is not a caricature.

With the too occasional exception of such pictures as "One Foot In Heaven" —and that goes a long way back!— there has been such a dearth of dominies in leading roles as to raise the suspicion that a plot must be afoot to keep the preachers out. It has seemed too consistent to be accidental. Whenever a drama with a religious background is used—and there have been several good ones in recent years—almost invariably the hero has turned out to be a Roman Catholic priest. Not that we have anything against seeing our Roman brethren well depicted. (We have cheered heartily for such films as "The Bells of St. Mary's," "Going My Way" and "The Keys of the Kingdom.") It is just that, in a land predominantly Protestant, it seems a bit out of balance to have religious pictures go Roman Catholic by ten to one. And, whether Hollywood realizes it or not, that unbalance has made a great many good Protestants good and mad.

In the face of "The Tender Years," produced by Twentieth Century-Fox, we take it all back. This studio has proved that it can be done, and done well. We sincerely hope that the public's reception of this film will be such as to encourage repetition of the effort, on the part of all studios, to find real drama and inspiring story material in Protestantism.

But lest any leap to the conclusion that this factor was solely responsible for "The Tender Years" being chosen as our Picture of the Month, let us hasten to assert that such is not the case. This film, an original screenplay done by Jack Jungmeyer, Jr., stands on its own very excellent story merits.

It treats of a country minister, his young son and a grievously mistreated dog they shelter back in the late 1870's, before the brutal "sport" of dog-fighting was outlawed. Skillfully wrough into the story is the inspiring drama of a boy's love for a dog and a father's understanding guidance of his son in distinguishing between right and wrong.

As the pastor of a smalltown community church, Joe E. Brown gives his role great dignity and sincerity, showing how the Church can play an important part for the good of the community in particular and human welfare in general. The role of the son is ably played by 12-year-old Richard Lyon, son of Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon. And the dog is superb.

The scenes showing the cruelty to dogs, necessary to the plot and approved by the S. P. C. A., for the sake of the moral they impart, may be a bit too tense for very young children. But this film is otherwise unhesitatingly recommended for the entire family.

OTHER CURRENT FILMS

Audience Suitability Ratings: A—Adults; Y—Young People, 12 to 18; C—Children under 12.

The Senator Was Indiscreet (Universal-International). "United States Senator Melvin G. Ashton" (William Powell) has presidential aspirations, shared by "Mama" but not by his party. By threatening to make known the contents of a detailed and annotated diary he has kept during his political career, the Senator finally obtains the backing of the party's boss and he launches his campaign for the Presidency amid much "ballyhoo." A tremendous boomerang is effected by the disappearance of the elusive diary and "Mama" does not move to the White House as she had planned. This picture is "tops" in light comedy, some of which is broad, most of it is very subtle. Exaggeration is, of course, used in a high degree. And there may be some persons who will question the wisdom of burlesqueing the Congress in these times. But the moral may well be drawn that, if we want to avoid having such persons in high office, we must be informed and active voters. A, Y.

T-Men (Eagle-Lion Films). With documentary precision, this well-plotted film depicts the work of Treasury Men in bringing counterfeiters to time. The acting is excellent; the highly dramatic story sheds valuable light on the skill and thoroughness of our T-Men.

A, Y.

Dream Girl (Paramount). The story of a girl (Betty Hutton) who lives largely in a dream world—and finds it more strenuous than the world of reality. Dramatic and humorous in turn, this is good entertainment. And, if the audience is so inclined, there are some good ethical conclusions to be drawn.

A. Y.

A Woman's Vengeance (Universal-International). The contention that "hell hath no fury like a woman scorned" is well sustained in this story of jealousy and unreciprocated affection and the evils that follow in their train. Emotions are in constant conflict and tension is kept at high pitch.

A.

Sleep My Love (United Artists). A sinister psychological drama on a thoroughly unpleasant theme—that of a husband attempting to rid himself of his wife, to get her money and to free himself to marry again. The use of hypnosis and drugs to provoke terror and unsettle the mind cannot be condoned, even when the purpose is to expose evil. The whole film is "bad medicine." A.

The Little Ballerina (GB Instructional Films; Universal-International Release). A British film designed to show the strenuous road a girl must travel to become a ballerina. In a simple plot, humor and drama are intermingled; good family relations are foremost; artistic values high.

A. Y, C.

High Wall (MGM). Tensely gripping murder mystery in which the criminal is eventually discovered after an innocent and mentally sick veteran undergoes skilled treatment by a friendly woman psychiatrist. There are informative insights on methods used to treat the mentally ill. The use of darkness, rain and storm adds somberness to a picture already heavy with gloomy overtones. A.

My Wild Irish Rose (Warner). The life and career of Chauncey Olcott, popular Irish tenor of bygone days, is acted and sung with much gusto by Dennis Morgan and embellished with some apocryphal details related to his friendship with Lillian Russell (Andrea King). In vivid technicolor, this may offer some nostalgic enjoyment for lovers of Irish ballads, minstrel shows and gaudy spectacles common at the beginning of the century. The humor is occasionally heavy; the sentimentality often sticky. A, Y, C.

The Secret Beyond the Door (Universal-International). Another in the series of psycho-probing films so common lately. Though the story idea is well grounded and the acting consistently good, there is nothing here to "lift the spirit"; but much to depress it.

A.

The Prince of Thieves (Columbia). An entertaining story about Robin Hood, done in beautiful color and true "noble knight and damsel in distress" style. The youngsters will love it.

A, Y, C.

The Flame (Republic). An unsavory melodrama which nevertheless has some sound spiritual values. In this unlikely quarter, for instance, may be found emphasized (1) the idea that human life cannot be bartered for material gains, and (2) that only a marriage based Editorial . . .

You Are The Answer!

A little girl of six groped her way into the pitifully equipped surgery in the half-wrecked building. She was blind. The doctor examined her. Almost gruffly he said, "Her blindness is temporary." With a glad cry, her mother said, "What must we do to cure it?" In the same desperate tone, the doctor said, "Give her a quart of milk daily." The mother's face fell. She looked at her child, and the tears began slowly to roll down her cheeks.

Why this gruff voice of desperation and the tears? This is Europe in the winter of 1948. This is a little French child. For this is a true story, one that has been repeated many times. There are literally hundreds of thousands of children in Europe and in Asia today who are blind, stunted in growth, apathetic mentally, unable to play because of nutritional deficiencies. That is the polite way to say that they are slowly starving to death!

But there is more than just starvation. There is a soul hunger too. There are millions who face life hopelessly. And the pastors are dead and the Churches in ruins and the Bibles have been burned. The ministers who lived through war and concentration camps barely live on the food they can secure, without physical strength to do the work before them. The congregations carry on without even the bare minimums for the worship of God.

See this not in terms of millions, for it is too easy then to push it out of your mind. See one child, blind for lack of milk. You have a child. Think of this happening to your child. See one Church. Think of war's destruction in terms of your parish Church with roof bombed out and interior gutted by fire. Think of your minister crippled by years in a concentration camp.

Then realize that there is an answer! That answer is—You! You can restore sight to that child's blinded eyes. You can give Christian hope to that congregation. No, you can't go to Europe yourself. But you can send your help and your compassion through a sacrificial gift on Sunday, February 29th, in your own Church for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. Church World Service will see that it goes directly to the place of need!

Casual giving on February 29th will not suffice. Divide your gift by 365, for this is a gift for the whole year 1948, and look at the amount you have. Would it give that child a bottle of milk? Would it even provide a tablespoon of powdered milk? Would it buy a single Bible for that pastor?

Lives and faith and the peace of the world are at stake. But more! This is a test of our loyalty to our Blessed Lord, who said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these thy brethren, ye did it unto Me."

Christianity's Stake In World Relief

The Christian Churches of Asia and Europe are still struggling against odds to rise from the ruins of war in this, the third, spring after the beginning of peace.

This disturbing fact is of special concern to the church people of America. If Christianity loses the struggle for survival in the former embattled areas, it will no longer be counted as a spiritual force in the 20th century world, holding out to searching people a high ideal and a better way of life.

The Gospel of Christ must never be in retreat. It should be a vital force, surging forward into the lives and minds of men everywhere.

To aid in the reconstruction of church life overseas is the unique responsibility of the American church people, and Easter offers them a unique opportunity to share in this responsibility. The Protestant and Orthodox churches cooperating in this overseas task are again sponsoring a Lenten appeal. In the Episcopal Church, February 29 is the designated day. Their aid will be cooperatively administered and coordinated through their agency, Church World Service. In Europe this service is directed by the Reconstruction Department of the World Council of Churches, and in Asia by Committees in each country that represent the cooperating churches.

The appeal presents Americans with an appropriate way in which to observe Lent. By denying ourselves certain luxuries and so-called "necessities," we can make a significant contribution through our churches. Our gifts will go a long way in helping the churches abroad to rise again to serve in a great revival of religious life and work which is fundamental to the recovery of Europe and Asia.

To be specific, these gifts mean that ministers and church leaders will receive that "extra" help—salary supplements, books, bicycles, rest retreats—that enables them to carry on their heavy work. Laymen will be trained in lay schools for Christian service in their stricken communities, where leadership is needed as badly as shoes or shelter. Church-operated camps for young people will get funds with which to continue their work of teaching youth to live the highest principles of the Master, and to set an inspiring example by their lives. The physical and spiritual needs of displaced people and refugees will be met and many, many of the sick, orphaned and the aged will receive the ministry they so terribly need.

But this service from America is totally dependent on the willingness of Americans to respond to the need and give through the church channels at their command. Individual churches throughout the country will be active in placing the Lenten appeal before their constituencies. In most U. S. cities, Councils of Churches and inter-denominational women's and young people's groups plan to cooperate. Almost every Christian in the United States, regardless of his communion, will be and must be afforded a chance to participate.

The Lenten appeal is only one phase of the 1948 plans of the churches to send $24,000,000 in funds and supplies overseas through CWS. But it is a very distinct phase. For there is no date on the calendar so full of Christian meaning as Easter. The day itself and the Lenten season preceding, symbolize the rebirth of spirit that follows a long period of sacrifice and suffering. In Europe and Asia people have certainly suffered and sacrificed. They are ready for a spiritual revival, and they have the will to rebuild. But they lack the resources that America can supply. As Americans, we must make telling sacrifices now, if we hope to avoid suffering in the future beyond anything we have known.

Divorce and Child Delinquency

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

A Chicago judge who presides over a court dealing with divorces has recently analyzed the relation of child delinquency to divorce. He has concluded that the divorce of parents is the most fruitful cause of the delinquency of children.

In studying national statistics the judge found that the 502,000 divorces granted in the nation in 1945 involved 291,000 children, of whom 278,000 were dependent children. These figures are not accurate because they are arrived at by taking the proportions in the Chicago courts and projecting them on the national figures. But they give us a good view of the total situation.

It is disturbing that at the same historical moment in which we find it almost impossible to establish community in global terms we should also see the smallest, most intimate and most essential of all human communities; the family, disintegrating. Thus we are menaced by chaos at both the top and the bottom of the pyramid of human society.

It is also significant that the terrifying consequences of child delinquency, issuing from divorce, should prove how wrong were the individualistic conceptions of the marriage relation which assumed that marriage was merely a contract between two indivdiuals, and could be dissolved if these two individuals agreed to disagree.

The child, who has no voice in these agreements and disagreements between parents, is the real victim of the dissolution of the marriage bond. The sufferings of the child are a proof of how much more complexly life is related to life and how much further our actions reach than is assumed in the individualism of our age.

The learned judge, who expressed his concern, went on to suggest that this problem was as important as the task of European reconstruction and proposed that "the President appoint a commission for the study of this problem and its correction." It would no doubt be a good thing to have a study which would make our nation aware of the magnitude of the problem. But the judge is wrong if he imagines that a Presidential commission could do very much toward its correction.

The family is neither created nor preserved by law, though good laws may help to stabilize it and bad laws may hasten its disintegration. Of all the communities of mankind the family is most dependent upon attitudes of mutual trust and loyalty which cannot be generated by law. Rifts in family life have to be overcome by the spirit of forgiveness which is not in the province of law.

The stability of family life requires that sexual impulses be transfigured and disciplined by more stable moral purposes. For sex, taken alone, is a very unstable factor in human relations. One of the many reasons for the present divorce rate is the "romantic marriage" which rests upon nothing but sexual attachment and is unable to weather the storms and stresses of life.

This is not a problem for a Presidential commission primarily. This is a problem for all the religious and moral institutions of our society. They will have to remind men of old truths and will have to invent new techniques to bring these truths to bear upon the present situation.

"YOUTH MUST LEAD"

Conference Plans General Youth Program

Monteagle, Tenn.—"Church youth must lead in showing Christ to a world which needs Him," said Dan Plunket of College Park, Ga., 20-year old college student and chairman of the Episcopal Church National Youth Commission, at the closing session of the annual planning meeting held January 29 to February 4. "The Church's quibbling and babbling over non-essentials is the devil's work. Our chief task as Christians is to present a common front to convert the world," continued Mr. Plunket, in a statement following unanimous endorsement by the Commission of Presiding Bishop Sherrill's call to Evangelism as the over-all emphasis of the Episcopal Church during the coming year.

Forty-two delegates selected by eight provinces and representing twenty-six states gathered for the meeting this year at the DuBose Conference Center in Monteagle, Tenn., the Rev. Leonard E. Nelson, warden. Their objective was to plan the general youth program for the coming year and to evaluate the progress made during the past year.

In addition to the evangelism theme, the young people voted to support the "Youth to Youth" program of Church World Service as the DO IT DAY BY DAY WORLD RELIEF PROJECT for the year. Under this plan money, clothing and supplies will be sent directly from Episcopal Church youth to young people in Europe and Asia through the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

Support of the A. U. J. E. (Acion Unida de la Juventad Episcopal), the new youth movement of the Missionary District of Puerto Rico, was designated as the project of the annual United Youth Offering presented each fall on Youth Sunday. This Offering will make possible a Church program designed to meet the spiritual, educational, vocational and physical needs of Puerto Rican youth. A highlight of the session was a report of the Second World Conference of Christian Youth held at Oslo, Norway, last summer. An offering of over $80.00 was designated by the young people for the work of the Oslo Continuation Committee which is providing emergency relief to European and Asian Church youth leaders.

The Conference was under the supervision of the Rev. William Crittenden, executive secretary of the Division of Youth of the National Council, the Rev. Charles E. Fish, assistant secretary, and Miss Mary Margaret Brace, educational secretary. The Rt. Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, bishop of Alabama, is the National Council chairman of the Division of Youth.

LENT IS TO BE USED

Lent is to be used. It is a time set aside by the Church for an annual spiritual inventory of our inner lives. Instead of drifting on through life in the same groove, which eventually can become a rut, the Church asks each member to take stock of his spiritual life. Just as a store puts on its door a sign, "closed—inventory", so we put out a sign on the outside of our heart, "closed—inventory". As we look over the accumulation of habits of the past year, we might find some that are worthless for life. It would be easy if we could have a fire sale on bad habits, and get rid of them in a hurry. But spiritual products do not move that fast. When we have catalogued them, the only way to get them out of the way is through faith and repentance and forgiveness.

That is the three point program of any Lent. Faith and repentance and forgiveness. They come in that order. And as much as we might try to reverse the order, we cannot do it. A great deal of the spiritual failure we make is the result of trying to reverse the order. We would like to have the forgiveness first. But it does not come first. You do not even forgive your own child before the child has first believed in you and then said he is sorry. Only then can you shower your loving forgiveness upon him. You remember the Prodigal. He came into his inheritance, and wasted it. He came to himself, and repented. He came to his Father, and found loving forgiveness.

Each Lent then is to increase our Faith. That will bring us to repentance, and repentance will be the grounds of our forgiveness. Each of us must say to himself, "The place to deepen the life of the Church is within me."

To that end, Fast for the forty days. In your Fast, give up something that has become your besetting sin. For some it is intoxicating liquors, for some cigarettes, for some over-eating, for some betting. Also demonstrate your loyalty to your Church by turning down parties, entertainments. The Church has traditionally said, "no weddings, please." If the Protestant world insists on having an annual Ball on Good Friday, tell them that you know of an event greater than a Ball that happened on that day. Our Church has a sensible discipline; let us observe it. Give the money thus saved by your self-denial to the extension of Christ's Kingdom.—St. Paul's Church Bulletin, Augusta, Ga.

OUR GIRLS HERE AND THEIR GIRLS THERE

Our girls here and their girls there in China, but all girls growing up together because the Girls Friendly Society are giving us a chance to work together. The brand new Girls' Friendly Mission Object is to send a young college woman, a former GFS member, to teach English at a university in Southwest China. This University was formed during the War when the western trek came in China. Here in the present Missionary District of Yun-Kwei, under the Rt. Rev. Quentin K. Y. Huang, the Church has really pioneered working among the descendants of many of the old aboriginal tribes who were pushed back into this mountainous, backward area by the expansion of China, years and years ago.

Today, the District of Yun-Kwei included seven churches, 1,500 communicants, 2 hospitals, a school for the blind, an orphanage, and two universities . . . all since 1940! In Bishop Huang's words, "Our opportunites are many; our challenges great; our burdens heavy; and our needs enormous".

The GFS are to send this young woman—Violet Phinney—to teach in one of the universities there. Is it not wonderful that we can send her? We will help the Chinese girls to know our language and above all to know a Christian young woman. Violet Phinney is a former GFS member and leader from Massachusetts. She was one Massachusetts' delegate to the 1946 GFS National Council, and last summer was head counsellor at the GFS Holiday House in the Diocese of Newark. Before that time she had secretarial training and worked as a private secretary in insurance, law, and radio advertising. In November 1944 she married a lieutenant in the Army Air Forces who was killed in the following March. Since his death she has been a student at Antioch College in Ohio and at present is employed in Chicago by the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults. What a wide experience she will take with her!

Here is a grand chance for us to learn about this new opportunity that the Church has in this newly opened China. Through study of the Mission Object, through our prayers and our gifts we shall feel closer to our teacher, Violet Phinney and to those whom she will teach.

Our Girls here and their Girls there are all one great family. Let us help to raise money so that we can have a share in spreading the love of God, His Son and His Holy Spirit in this part of the world.

Let us remember that this project is sponsored by Our National Church, through the GFS and it is the share of our girls' gifts for other girls. Let our GFS members in America say "Gung Ho" this year so that Chinese girls may learn to say, "Work Together".

CXXIII

The Offertory Sentences.—The first of these sentences leads to some interesting speculation concerning the words of our Saviour. As we all know it reads "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." The citation given is Acts xx. 35, and on looking it up we will find that it is taken from St. Paul's farewell address to the Ephesians before he left them on his way to Jerusalem.

Furthermore we cannot find these words anywhere in the Gospels, so we are forced to conclude that Paul either had some manuscript with sayings of our Saviour which has now been lost, or else he quoted something that had been told him by some of the other Apostles. This latter supposition is unlikely, for he emphasizes the fact in his Epistle to the Galatians that when he saw Peter and John in Jerusalem "They added nothing to me."

No doubt there were some early authentic Christian manuscripts lost in the persecution under Diocletian, since he made an especial effort to stamp out Christianity through burning all of the Christian writings.

We count today two Epistles of Paul to the Corinthians, although in his first Epistle he refers to a "former letter" that he had written, and which we do not now have. Also in his second Epistle he mentions "a sorrowful letter" which seems to have been lost.

In comparatively modern times a papyrus has been found in Egypt, which seems to contain some sayings of Christ that are not recorded anywhere in the New Testament. One of these is as follows: "Split the wood and I am there. Cleave the rock and you will also find me."

In that dry eastern climate, and with modern archeological research it is quite possible that papyrus manuscripts may be found which will give us the two lost letters of St. Paul to the Corinth-

News of the Church

FIFTH PROVINCE, TOWN AND COUNTRY CONFERENCE

London, O.—Urging that the Church do a better job of training rural ministers, the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Bishop of Northern Michigan, told the first annual Town and Country Conference of the Fifth Province that something must be done to get more men into this particular phase of the ministry, to break down their feeling of isolation and inferiority as compared with the so-called "urban ministry" and to give them a much greater measure of economic security. The conference, which was attended by representatives of all thirteen dioceses in the Fifth Province, was held from February 3rd to 6th at Orleton Farms, London, Ohio.

Taking as their theme, What Is the Rural Ministry?, the delegates heard presentations from the Rev. Clifford Samuelson, of the Department of Domestic Missions, the Rev. James Plankey, Church of the Advent, Chicago; Professor Wm. V. Dennis, of Pennsylvania State College; the Rev. E. Dargan Butt, of Seabury-Western Seminary, and Mr. Alex Short, Chief of the Ohio Wildlife Conservation Extension Service.

Prof. Dennis' report showed that while the population of the province was 66 per cent urban, the communicant strength of the Episcopal Church in that area was 95 per cent urban. Claiming that the rural ministry was the most important missionary field today and characterizing it as the "feeder-belt" for the urban church, Prof. Dennis stated the primary job was to awaken the total Church to the job that it has to do.

In dealing specially with the rural situation, Prof. Butt said that there are three basic aims in the establishment of town and country church work: to give the rural people a sense of self-respect, to allow them to use self-government in the establishment and administration of their parishes and to work for complete self-support. From the very nature of our church, which is so predominantly urban, the rural population, at present too often have a feeling of being considered second best.

Dr. Plankey, stating that the face-to-face community relationships of town and country life made the use of laymen in Church work most practical and necessary, discussed ways and means for achieving comprehensive lay leadership in such parishes.

The Rev. Samuel Keys, of Waynesville, Ohio, who was general chairman of the conference and president of the Town and Country Department of the Fifth Province, set the tone of the conference by stating that its purpose was not so much to develop successful techniques, but rather to establish a basic philosophy which should underlie all of the Church's rural work.

The conference went on record as giving vigorous support to the present program of the Church's national rural work, under the direction of Mr. Samuelson, and urged that more pamphlets, papers and tracts dealing with this phase of the Church's life be published and distributed.

VOCATIONAL CONFERENCE —First Province

New York, N. Y.—Mary Jordan, daughter of Mr. Robert D. Jordan, Director of Promotion of the National Council, is student chairman of a Planning Committee setting up a Vocational Conference for college women in the First Province. Miss Jordan is at Radcliffe College.

The Conference is sponsored by the Commission on College Work of the Province of New England, the College Work Division of the National Council, the Woman's Auxiliary, and the New England Student Christian Movement. It will be held at Farrington Hall, Lincoln, Mass., the week-end of February 27-29. The theme is "All Work of Church Work." The purpose is stated as being "to consider how one acts as a Christian in any calling, and to present specific vocational opportunities for women in the Episcopal Church."

SPECIAL CONVENTION TO ELECT SUFFRAGAN

Detroit, Mich.—All clergy and secretaries of vestries in the Diocese of Michigan have received from the Rev. James G. Widdifield, president of the Standing Committee, and the Rev. Henry Lewis, D. D., secretary, notification that in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the Diocese, a special convention will be held at St. Paul's Cathedral on April 5 for the purpose of electing a Suffragan Bishop. Consent for the election was given at the annual convention held last month. The Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., bishop coadjutor-elect of the diocese, has asked the Standing Committee, enlarged by four additional persons, to act as a committee to receive names for consideration and presentation to the special convention. Names are to be sent to the Rev. Dr. Lewis at Ann Arbor.

A part of the special convention program will be the institution of Bishop Emrich as Bishop of the diocese. He will succeed the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., present Bishop, upon his retirement on March 31, 1948.

Bishop Scarlett Urges Complete Support of Marshall Plan at Bishop's Consecration April 7

St. Louis, Mo.—"We are now engaged in a social and economic struggle of the first magnitude," the Rt. Rev. William Scarlett, D. D., bishop of Missouri, told the 109th annual Convention in his address in Christ Church Cathedral, on the evening of February 3.

Urging full and complete support for the Marshall Plan, Bishop Scarlett declared, "It is a struggle 'against hunger, poverty, desperation and chaos.' It is a struggle to win the minds of the people of Europe. If this battle goes by default and Communism sweeps the Continent, it does not require much effort to imagine what the repercussions will be.

"Now this social and economic struggle to win Europe is the second phase of the effort to negotiate peace. If the people of Western Europe, primarily through their own efforts but with our indispensible marginal aid, can continue the process of recovery, maintain free institutions, keep the door open to co-operation with Eastern Europe and with Russia, then I believe the Cause of Peace will be immeasurably advanced.

And if now the United States will do its full part in this matter, the tide will continue to run in this direction. But if we fail to do our part adequately, there will be economic collapse in Europe and rapid political change of the sort we would not like to see.

"But we must keep firmly in mind that this is a social and economic struggle. It is not a military struggle. It need not become a military struggle. If we now meet the economic and social situation adequately the possibility of war becomes much less likely. Therefore, the stakes are tremendous. And if the peoples of Western Europe, with our aid, are successful, then it is possible that the curtain will rise on the third act of peace negotiations, with a good chance to deal realistically with the issue.

"I believe a heavy responsibility rests on the Churches of our land and on the Church people. For it is not only essential that the European Recovery Program which is passed by the Congress of the United States be entirely an adequate one, and adequate even in the face of rising prices. This will call for continuing sacrifices on our part. It does seem a complete reversal of proper direction to think now of lowering taxes. The high stakes for which we are struggling will demand continuing sacrifices and sacrifices all around, as Mr. Baruch has suggested. But they will be sacrifices for the sake of peace.

"It is not only essential that the aid to Europe be adequate, but also that it be accomplished in the right spirit. By this I mean that if in order to pass an adequate European Recovery Bill it is necessary to whip up a kind of war hysteria and stir up hatred of another country, then the evils would be greater than the good which would come of it. . . . This is a social struggle. They believe their way of life is best for Europe; we believe that our way, with free institutions, modified to meet the different conditions of Europe, is the best, for them, for ourselves, for the world. Let us work and sacrifice then, without hate, to win this struggle. And let us strive above all to put our own house in order that we are not a mockery among our neighbors."

Earlier in his address, Bishop Scarlett had referred to the rising price pattern in this country, stating that he had written to every Senior Warden of every parish asking that the salary of each minister be reviewed against the background of rising costs. "One wonders what became of the confident predictions of many of our friends, to the effect that if price controls were only lifted, prices would quickly readjust themselves and reach a lower level. Instead of this, the spiral continues to wind its way upward. And every new loop in the spiral makes clearer to us the need of a more carefully planned and controlled economy. There is a lot of sheer greed in this inflationary movement, and it is the essence of democratic futility not to control this menace in the interest of the general welfare.

"Those who have something to sell, or those who have powerful unions to fight the battle for them, can ride the elevator of inflation. But the man or woman with a fixed income or a fixed salary sees the income or salary diminish in purchasing power day by day, and the savings, built up over a lifetime of economy to provide for his old age, melting away. It is a shortsighted policy indeed on the part of the leaders of our country. Economic laws are not 'acts of God', into which category, wickedly named, all problems are tossed about which nothing can be done. They are not beyond human control. They are subject to human intelligence. And, as the history of every country that has experienced severe inflation indicates, it is a fatal policy which allows inflation little by little to undermine a country's middle class which is the bulwark of its stability." The Bishop also informed the Convention of the part played by the Diocese in the Delmo Homes project in Southeast Missouri, where facilities were provided by which evicted sharecroppers could own their own homes. He stated that 560 homes had been purchased in nine communities which are now being taken over by their owners on a long-term loan basis.

The attached resolution on World Relief was passed. Text in full:

RESOLUTION ON WORLD RELIEF

We believe our Nation is now called upon to make decisions which will be recorded as among the most momentous in the history of its people.

As we sacrificed for war, so now an unparalleled opportunity is ours to contribute to the cause of peace.

That Europe desperately needs our assistance is "no longer a matter of debate". The economies of the nations devastated by war must be rebuilt if deeper descent into misery and chaos is to be prevented.

This Nation alone has the power and wealth adequately to meet this situation, and before God we bear a heavy responsibility to do all in our power to build a stable, prosperous, peaceful world.

THEREFORE, be it resolved that this Convention expresses the earnest hope that Congress will act swiftly and affirmatively on an adequate European Relief and Recovery Plan.

We also express the earnest hope that as quickly as possible international machinery will be set up to handle this matter.

And further, that we urge our people to make known at once to their elected representatives their determination that this great Nation give generous and adventurous leadership in helping to create a better world for all peoples.

DIOCESE OF MARYLAND

Evangelism Theme At All Gatherings

Baltimore, Md.—In a deeply moving address at the opening of the 164th Convention of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Noble C. Powell, bishop of Maryland, committed clergy and people to a determined and sustained effort to heighten individual spirituality and to increase group worship (small praying groups in the midst of congregations) that whatever inertia may exist be dispelled. "I ask for no intensive campaign set between two dates, but the beginning now of a permanent zeal for growth of the Kingdom of God among us. Achieve this goal of revived religious devotion and the statistics will take care of themselves."

The Convention, participated in by the Woman's Auxiliary, met January 27, 28 in St. Michael and All Angels, Emmanuel and Grace, and St. Peter's Churches for various features of the program. Evangelism continued the theme of all gatherings to the exclusion of all save necessary business detail.

Addresses by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, bishop of Bethlehem, on the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral and Evangelism contributed largely to the sustained interest.

The Convention stood to adopt resolutions of regret at the death of the retired bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Edward Traill Helfenstein, D. D., and to express its deep sympathy with Mrs. Helfenstein in her loss.

Bishop Powell pronounced a concluding benediction and declared the 164th Convention adjourned.

DIOCESE OF ALABAMA

Annual Convention

Mobile, Ala.—At the 117th annual ocnvention of the diocese, the people were called upon to contribute $260,000.00 for the building of adequate student centers at the universities and colleges in the diocese. The bishop in his address had suggested $150,000.00, but a group studying the proposals recommend that the amount be increased. The recommendation was unanimously passed and the laymen took it upon themselves to conduct the campaign.

The record in the National Church as far as is known, was appropriaely recognized when Mr. R. H. Cochran presented his forty-fifth report as treasurer of the diocese. Mr. Cochran was the guest of honor at the diocesan banquet and was presented a silver cup. Mr. Cochran has been a member of the diocesan convention for fifty-four years.

The Rev. John Huess, director of the Department of Christian Education of the National Council, was the principal speaker at the banquet. He spoke on the desperate situation in our Church Schools and suggested that it was extremely necessary that this be strengthened and especially that it be undergirded by Christian Education in the home.

Recommendations were passed calling upon the Executive Council to examine thoroughly the missionary needs of the diocese and to make definite plans for expanding the missionary program of the diocese to meet these needs.

ARIZONA CONVOCATION

Tucson, Ariz.—The 55th annual convocation of the Missionary District of Arizona yesterday afternoon concluded interesting and inspiring sessions February 4 in the beautiful Church of Saint Philip's In The Hills, Tucson, the Rev. George Ferguson, rector. Again there was almost a 100 per cent attendance, indicative of the deepening of interest and activitly in the Church in this district.

Bishop Kinsolving, in his address, pointed out the plight of the long-suffering Navajo, to which people the Episcopal Church has been ministering for over half a century. The Bishop declared, "There can be no permanent solution to this problem until the Navajo are given reasonably civilized education, hospitalization, when needed. and reclamation. We hope that the people of America realize how valuable to Communistic propaganda is democracy's failure in this field." The Bishop urged the churches to dedicate their Advent offerings to the Good Shepherd Mission to the Navajo at Ft. Defiance.

Bishop Kinsolving reported that a quonset has been given for use as a church by the Havasupai Indians in their reservation at the Grand Canyon. The hut is to be delivered into the canyon by a helicopter. The missionary budget for 1947 was over-subscribed. Work among the Spanish speaking people in Phoenix has progressed and expansion at the two sanatoria for the tuberculous, St. Luke-s-in-the-Desert, Tucson, and St. Luke's Sanatorium, Phoenix, is in progress.

Bishop Kinsolving said that the slogan for the new church year is "Evangelism." He stressed the world's desperate need of evangelism and pointed out that the world had just killed one of its prophets in India. He said, "The world is still unable to distinguish between its saints and its betrayers, its best and its worst."

Announcement was made of a gift of barracks for use on the campus of the University of Arizona Episcopal Student Center. The Rev. Leon N. Laylor, chaplain at the Center, in making this announcement, stated that the chapel is to be a memorial to the Bishop's son and namesake, Arthur Barksdale Kinsolving, Ill, who died recently as the result of an accident.

Other features of the Convocation sessions were the adoption of an overall budget of $16,000.00; increase in the mileage rate for missionaries from 5 cents to 8 cents; the recognition of a newly erected parish, St. Paul's, Yuma.

Mrs. Arthur Sherman, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council, addressed the joint session of Convocation and Auxiliary.

Cleveland, O.—Canon Almon R. Pepper, director of the Department of Christian Social Relations of the National Council, was the speaker at the 131st annual convention of the Diocese of Ohio on January 27, when he spoke on the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, emphasizing his experiences on a recent trip to Europe, and the needs which this fund is helping to meet.

Colonel Burrett B. Bouton, of Howe Military School, was a visitor at the convention, and spoke of the opportunities and need of secondary schools under Church auspices.

Laymen Uniting In Diocesan Organization

Savannah, Ga.—Headed by William J. Robertson, an active layman of Christ Church and editor of the Savannah Morning News, a concerted effort is being made to unite all the laymen of the Diocese of Georgia into a diocesan organization.

In January, Mr. Robertson met the laymen of Augusta; in December, he conducted district meetings which resulted in district organizations for the Albany and the Brunswick-Waycross districts. The subject of Mr. Robertson's addresses is The Radiant Life" which has to do with opportunities for action for men in the Episcopal Church. In Savannah, Mr. Samuel N. Blair, a member of Christ Church, was elected chairman. Plans have been made to have the first get-together meeting at a banquet at the Savannah Hotel on March 21.

Granted Leave To Do Rural Work

Darien, Ga.—At a recent congregational meeting of St. Andrew's, Darien, the Rev. Archer Torrey, vicar of St. Andrew's for two and a half years, announced that he had received a year's leave of absence from parochial duties to do rural and industrial chaplaincy in the diocese. The congregation immediately began girding itself to continue a full parish program without waiting for a new missionary. At the December meeting a budget of $4,000 was adopted, in hopes of applying for parish status at the next diocesan convention and calling a rector.

Mr. Torrey will conduct missions and Bible study classes among the industrial workers and rural people throughout the diocese, receiving partial support from the People's Institute of Applied Religion, of Birmingham, Ala., a non-denominational group.

Bishop Of Ohio Guest Preacher

Savannah, Ga.—Among the special guest preachers at Christ Church this Lent is the brother of the Rector of Christ Church, the Rt. Rev. Beverly Tucker, D. D., bishop of Ohio. The Rev. Bland Tucker, D. D., recently elected Bishop of Western North Carolina, is rector of Christ Church.

While appreciating the honor done their rector, the people of Christ Church were dismayed that their rector might leave them. Dr. Tucker has done fine work at Christ Church, the mother Church of Georgia. Now located in the business section of the city, it is dependent upon the loyalty of its members to uphold the program outlined by the Rector, of not only parochial duties, but much social service work among the underprivileged who live in the immediate neighborhood of the parish house.

SPECIAL SERVICE TO CAUSE OF GOOD WILL

Colon, Panama.—Christ Church-by-the-Sea, Colon, has asked, through its vestry, for status of an "aided parish" instead of a mission. This is the first mission in the District of the Panama Canal Zone that has applied for parish status since the Cathedral of St. Luke, Ancon, a few years ago.

The rector of Christ Church, the Rev. John R. Chisholm, held January 21, a special service dedicated to the cause of good will among men of all nations and races. Solemn Evensong was conducted entirely in the language of the country, the first all-Spanish service in the history of the Church in this District. The First Lesson was read by the Hon. Robert G. Bailey, American Consul, and the Second by Lic. Alexis Vila Lindo, Governor of the Province. Officiants were the Ven. John T. Townsend, Archdeacon of Colombia, and Mr. Chisholm. Other clergy participating were the Very Rev. Raymond T. Ferris, Dean of the Cathedral, and the Rev. Lemuel B. Shirley, priest in charge of St. Christopher's, Rio Abajo, who attended the Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Reginald H. Gooden.

In line with the theme of this service, and in recognition of its 83 years of service to the community, a specially made flag of the Republic of Panama was presented to Christ Church, the oldest in the City of Colon, by Commandante Luis J. A. Ducruet on behalf of the Cuerpo de Bomberos de Colon (Fire Department of Colon). The Episcopal Church flag, the flags of Panama, the United States, and Great Britain were carried in the procession. A considerable part of the service was broadcast by radio station HOL, Radio Atlantico. Motion pictures were made of the entire service. The church was packed to overflowing, with several hundred unable to get in, necessitating special police to handle the traffic.

A reception was held in the rectory following the service.

Detroit, Michigan.—The twenty-fourth season of the Round Table Fellowship, Lenten program for adults of the Diocese of Michigan, opened at St. Joseph's Church, Monday, February 16, and will continue for five Monday evenings through March 15. The theme of the Round Table Fellowship is "The Good News", with the emphasis on Evangelism, as suggested by the National Council for Lenten study. Various departments of the Diocese will present panels to relate the address of the evening to their work.

A distinguished Lutheran clergyman, the Rev. F. Eppling Reinartz, D. D., of New York City, who will be preaching at noon-day services sponsored by the Detroit Council of Churches, will open the series of addresses at the Fellowship. He will be followed by four nationally-known Churchmen: the Rev. W. Hamilton Aulenbach, rector of Christ and St. Michael's Church, Philadelphia; Dr. Almon R. Pepper, director of Christian Social Relations of the National Council; Dr. Gordon Keith Chalmers, president of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio; and the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., bishop coadjutor-elect of the Diocese of Michigan.

At each weekly meeting, dinner will be served at 6:30 P. M., followed by a short chapel service led by the Rev. John A. Scantlebury, rector of St. Timothy's Church, Detroit, and chaplain of the Fellowship. The address of the evening will then be given, and will be followed by the panel discussion.

The Rev. William C. Hamm, rector of St. Joseph's Church, is chairman of the Round Table Fellowship, which is sponsored by the Adult Division of the Diocesan Department of Christian Education. Mr. William I. Green, organist of the host parish, will play for the services.

PROTESTANT AGENCIES CABLE INDIA'S PRIME MINISTER

New York City—Leaders of two of the largest Protestant interdenominational agencies said that Gandhi's death marked "the passing of a truly great soul and servant of humanity, who devoted his life to the attainment of peace for which Christians so fervently pray."

The two agencies were the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, composed of 118 foreign mission boards and the Department of International Justice and Good Will of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Texts of the cables dispatched by the two agencies to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehree, prime minister of India, follow:

"The violent death of Gandhi is deeply regretted by those who have recognized in him a leader who devoted his life to the attainment of that peace on earth for which Christians and other men of good will so fervently pray and labor." (Signed) Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk, Secretary of the Department of International Justice and Good Will of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

"American and Canadian members of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America mourn with India the passing of a truly great soul and servant of humanity and rejoice in his abiding contribution to the spiritual life of the world." (Signed) Dr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, chairman, Committee of Reference and Council, Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

DEAN URBAN INSTALLED AT BERKELEY DIVINITY VOCATIONAL CONFERENCE

New Haven, Conn.—The Rev. Percy Linwood Urban, S. T. D., was installed on January 29 as the sixth Dean of the Berkeley Divinity School. Bishop Budlong of Connecticut officiated at the ceremony, held in Dwight Memorial Chapel of Yale University. Greetings were extended by President Seymour of Yale, who dwelt on the old connection between Bishop Berkeley and education in Connecticut, which he himself represented as former holder of a Berkeley scholarship and more recently Master of Berkeley College. Dean Weigle of Yale Divinity School and Dean Rose of the General Theological Seminary, on behalf of the other Seminaries of the Church, also brought salutations. The Presiding Bishop had been delayed on his return from Texas but arrived during the service, and before giving the blessing spoke briefly of the importance of Seminaries in connection with the Church's problem of personnel, and their need of support.

Bishops Nash of Massachusetts, Gray, Coadjutor of Connecticut, Jenkins, formerly of Nevada, and Aldrich, formerly of Michigan (representing Princeton University) were also present. Other official delegates included President Funstan of Trinity College, Dean Hirshson of Hartford, representing Kenyon College and Bexley Hall, Dean vanDyke of the Hartford Seminary Foundation, Dean Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School, and Dean Roberts of Princeton Theological Seminary. Many other schools and colleges were represented, and a number of Connecticut parishes sent official lay delegates. A crowd of clergy and laity filled the Chapel.

UNUSUAL DAY

Wilmington, N. C.—February 29, 1948, is a remarkable date, according to facts unearthed by Mr. C. McDowell Davis, member of the National Council, and president of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company.

Mr. Davis found that February 29 has fallen (or will fall) on Sunday in the years 1756, 1784, 1824, 1852, 1880, 1920, 1948, 1976.

It has been 28 years since February 29 fell on Sunday, and it will be 28 years before it falls on Sunday again.

The unusual date provided a perfect opportunity for the Presiding Bishop's radio broadcast to the whole Church, as it was hardly in the realm of possibility that parishes and missions should have other important events scheduled for that day.

INTEREST INTENSE IN PRESIDING BISHOP'S BROADCAST

New York, N. Y.—Parishes and missions everywhere are intensely interested in the Presiding Bishop's Churchwide radio broadcast on February 29, if orders for supplies prove anything. In less than three weeks the parishes and missions have ordered more material on the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief than they ordered in the whole year 1947. More than a half million families will have copies of An Invitation and a Report.

PROMPT REPORTS REQUESTED

New York, N. Y. —The National Council is asking for prompt reports on receipts for the nationwide radio network program which it is hoped may be started next fall.

Parish treasurers are urged to report at once to their diocesan treasurers if they have not already done so, and diocesan treasurers have been asked to send in their reports at once. Planning for the radio program is limited by the amount of money available.

ST. STEPHEN'S CELEBRATING 125TH ANNIVERSARY

Philadelphia, Pa. — St. Stephen's Church in the city of Philadelphia will celebrate its one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary from February 29 to March 7.

Many faithful parishioners who served the church in years past are now no longer living in Philadelphia, but the Rev. Dr. Alfred W. Price, rector, extends a cordial invitation to all of those who in the past were connected with St. Stephen's to return and share in the anniversary celebration.

Those taking part in the various services will be: Rt. Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., Dr. Leicester C. Lewis, Dr. Robert O. Kevin, Gouverneur P. Hance, S. B. B., I. Smith Raspin, Very Rev. Charles L. Taylor, Mr. David D. Wood, Dr. Edward E. Allen and Mr. H. B. Rumrill.

RACE RELATIONS, FELLOWSHIP SERVICE

New York, N. Y.—By invitation of the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, bishop of New York, a Service of Interracial Fellowship, was held in the Cathedral on February 8.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Georgia, delivered an address on: "The Unpopular But Inescapable Christ."

Dr. Mays, distinguished Negro educator, was honored two years ago by election as a Vice-President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

The Interracial Choir, under the direction of Harold Aks, faculty member of the Juilliard School, sang anthems by Vitteria and by Bach. This was in addition to the full Cathedral Choir of 65 men and boys under the direction of Dr. Norman Coke-Jephcott, Cathedral Organist.

The Rev. Dr. Earl F. Adams, executive secretary of the Protestant Council of New York, and the Rev. Alfred S. Akamatsu, pastor of the Japanese Methodsit Church, Manhattan, assisted in the service.

ECUMENICAL SHARING

New York, N. Y.—According to a Church World Service report, the Old Catholics in Germany, in cooperation with Hilfswerk, are giving "an admirable demonstration of ecumenical sharing." The sum of 12,000 Swiss francs was placed at the disposal of the Old Catholics in Germany through Church World Service and the Episcopal Church, for the provision of clothing for 60 Old Catholic clergymen. The Old Catholic representative at Hilfswerk agreed that the money should be used to purchase raw wool which was imported into Germany and from which some 500 suits of clothes were manufactured. That meant, of course, that the beneficiaries under this project were chiefly clergy of denominations other than Old Catholic, and "is an example of the willingness to share which is a genuine mark of ecumenical understanding."

EXPERIMENT IN ADULT EDUCATION

Sacramento, California.—A three-days' experiment in adult missionary education, accompanied by a series of "Christ for the World" exhibits, illustrating many phases of the Church's work, was carried out successfully at Marysville, Sacramento and Santa Rosa, in the Diocese of Sacramento, January 20, 22, by local committees assisted by members of the National Council staff. Exhibits included richly colored textiles, carved wood and other works of art, native products and handicraft from Alaska, China, Cuba, the Hawaiian Islands, Japan, Mexico, Panama, the Philippine Islands, and elsewhere. Each "court" displayed a map, portraying the Church's missionary activities. Persons appropriately costumed were on hand to explain the exhibits and distribute copies of the "Today" series of missionary folders. In other courts were altar frontals, vestments and vessels, with devotional literature. Tables elsewhere showed pamphlets, books and posters illustrating the Church's program in Christian education, college work, laymen's activities, rural work, social relations, Woman's Auxiliary and welfare projects. The Church Divinity School of the Pacific and St. Margaret's House in Berkeley, California, were represented among the photographic exhibits.

SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Wilmington, Del.—Sponsored by the Department of Christian Education of the Diocese of Delaware a School of Christian Education was held on the Tuesday evenings in January at the Cathedral Church of St. John.

In spite of inclement weather on each of the nights the total registration was more than 230 with an average attendance of over 180. Every parish in the Wilmington area was represented and others came from all over the diocese.

The School was divided into two periods, the first dealing with content courses and the second with methods. A course on the Life of Christ by the Very Rev. Robert M. Hatch and one on Church History by the Rev. John Ellis Large, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, featured the first period.

The second period was divided into three groups with courses on "Women in the Life of the Church," "Laymen's Work In the Church," and method courses on Church School and youth work.

The leaders for the women's courses included Mrs. William H. Hannah, president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Long Island, Mrs. George Trowbridge, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania; Miss Avis Harvey, educational secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council, and Mrs. Alfred M. Chapman, chairman of the executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Leading the discussion groups on laymen's work were Lt. Governor E. N. Carvee, of Delaware; Dr. J. Fenton Daugherty, dean of men of the University of Delaware; Manfred Keller, special assistant, rayon department, du Pont Company, and Raymond P. Generaux, haed of the design division of the engineering department of the du-Pont Company.

The Rev. Paul A. Kellogg, rector of Christ Church, Dover, gave the course on youth work, and Mrs. Leonora R. Harris, Miss Ruth Gill, and Miss Florence V. Miller taught courses on Church School Methods.

GIFT FOR FREE MEDICAL SERVICE

New York, N. Y.—Early in January Presiding Bishop Sherrill and the World Relief Committee allocated $4,400 for additional free medical service in the Shanghai medical institutions. The allocation was transferred through Church World Service, from the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

Bishop William P. Roberts of Shanghai has acknowledged the gift, with thanks to the Presiding Bishop. He stated that he has appointed a committee of three, Bishop Keh-Tsung Mao, Mr. J. H. Pott, and the Rev. E. H. Forster, to administer the gift, and to assure that it will be used entirely for free medical service, and not for the running of any institution.

RESOLUTION

Dr. E. L. Woodward

Be It Resolved: The Vestry of Grace Church, Whittle Parish, The Plains, Virginia, hereby takes note of the passing of Dr. E. L. Woodward; remembering with gratitude his ministry here at Grace Church, in Whittle Parish. We also recognize the fact that Grace Church building and its Parish Hall is a monument to Dr. Woodward who was responsible for its being built, this church being considered one of the finest of its type in the United States. A copy of this resolution be sent to the family of Dr. Woodward and The Southern Churchman and The Virginia Churchman.

ians, and possibly the fifth Gospel known to Bible scholars as "Q," from which it is quite evident that Matthew and Luke copied such expressions as the message to the disciples of John the Baptist, when they inquired if Christ was the Messiah, or if they should look for another.

If such manuscripts are discovered with proof of authenticity it will pose an interesting question to the Christian world, as to whether or not the Canon of Scripture should be reopened to include them.

HEARTENING

Sir: Thank you for sending me the marked copy of The Southern Churchman of January 3 and for the citation in the paper's 1948 Roll of Appreciation. It is heartening to me to receive such a commendation even though I fear it is quite undeserved. Work such as I have done for the past twelve or fourteen years is often discouraging (we seem to progress so slowly when, as someone has said, there is so much to do and so little time) and it is fine to know that others understand and offer intercession to God for us.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Something Worth Dying For

By FULTON OURSLER

On one of the many highways in a certain American state, the motorist comes suddenly on the sight of a beautiful modern church surrounded by imposing brick buildings. One of these is a large Negro school; another is the only clinic for free treatment of Negroes in a large area. On the side of one building appears a great stone slab, carved with familiar words:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal . . . ."

On the face of the church is an 18 foot marble carving of the Crucifixion.

"And that," the Rev. Harold Purcell, who established this settlement to help pauper Negroes, will tell you, "is hung there so that wayfarers may understand that the brotherhood of man is something worth dying for."

Yet there are a great many churchgoers in that neighborhood who see small use for such work.

The most impudent contradiction in the world is a prejudiced Christian. No one can take the great description to himself who shrinks from any other human being of whatever color or creed. The love of man for man, and the responsibility of man to man is at the core of Christian faith.

People stand in the church and recite: "I believe in God the Father . . . ."

They close their eyes, and many kneel, as they repeat that prayer of all prayers which begins: "Our Father . . . ."

How can a child of that Father shrink from His other children? How can lips move on to the rest of creed or prayer if, lurking in the soul, there is scorn for those who are fashioned a little unlike themselves? What Christian can cherish disdain for those whose faith is a little different from his own since in our most clairvoyant moments we know that we are all of God's family?

There is no theory that can stand before this awesome fact. We are what we are, the offspring of the Lord: try to evade the responsibilities of that estate and we deny our Father in Heaven.

Yet this wicked folly does persist. It is responsible for a great deal of the trouble in God's family on earth. Too many Northerners believe that God is a Rotarian and a Republican; too many Southerners worship Him as a white Democrat. Knowing this to be absurdities, too many of all the rest of us still have our own little private mental reservations about the brotherhood of man under the Fatherhood of God. None who feels so has the right to call himself by the sacred name of Christian. Prejudice is a denial of all that was taught by judges and prophets, all that was meant in the Sermon on the Mount; all that was made forever clear on Calvary; all that was stated in three simple words: "Love one another!"

Of all the scabrous pestilences which afflict mankind from time to time, none is more mischievous or vicious than hate. Its chief vice lies in its violation of the law of love, which is the law of God; and in the horrible effects it has upon its victims and its perpetrators. Cruel suffering is the lot of the former, corruption of soul the lot of the latter—as we saw in the pitiable inmates of Buchenwald and Dachau and the consuming inner rottenness of those who tortured and murdered them.

Its chief mischief lies in its initial deceptiveness. It persuades the person whom it possesses that it is but a species of justice—that the one whom we begin mildly to disparage and contemn deserves our contempt, our detraction, our discrimination. And starting in small things it grows from disparagement to contempt to hate until soon we are rationalizing lynchings, pogroms, Lidices.

No man is immune to it simply by nature. The price of justice and love, like liberty, is eternal vigilance. Let us all beware of its insidious beginnings. Let us resolve to avoid the unkind word, the criticism based on ill-considered or insufficient inquiry, the contemptuous act, the discrimination or prejudice that divides brother from brother. For we are all sons of the same Heavenly Father and brothers one of another.

An American Heritage

Our forefathers wrought wisely and well. They saw that men could not be secure in their life, their liberty, and their temporal happiness unless each man was secure. They saw that the individual could not be secure unless he was protected from the changing whims of rulers, parliaments, majorities. So they sought some other base on which to predicate such security.

There is only one ultimately stable base, as they clearly saw, and that is God. Accordingly, having revealed the context of their thinking by appealing to "the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God," they went on to state "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness."

We would do well to reaffirm that faith today, in practice as well as in precept. For we have seen the abyss into which denial of human rights can plunge us, and we have seen that majority agreement is no safeguard against the plunge.

Unless we love our neighbor because of love of God, we shall probably not love Him for long, if at all. But if we remember that God is the Creator and Disposer of all things, that He "made of one blood all nations of mankind," that He is our Common Father and all of us His sons, that we are, therefore, brothers one of another, that it is His will and His inexorable law that we live, as befits brothers, fraternally, we may count on His justice and hope for His mercy.

This brotherhood of man requires us to treat all men, good or bad, likeable or unlikeable, not merely as fellow human beings, fellow citizens, or neighbors, but literally as brothers. Some may be erring brothers, some may be temperamentally different from ourselves—but they are all brothers and as such entitled to our justice, our best understanding, and our deepest charity.

Unless all of us take this to heart, not merely as a kind of sterile intellectual affirmation but as a vital principle governing our everyday behavior, we shall be unworthy of our religious heritage, whether as Jews or Christians, and of our civic heritage as Americans. And because of our unworthiness, we can then confidently expect fulfillment of the old adage, that a house divided against itself cannot stand.

"The Church and Publicity"

A Report to the Church of England

A Report to the "Church of England"

A far-reaching scheme for the extended organization of Church publicity and information services at a cost of £14,000 a year, is suggested in "Church Information: Being the Report of the Publicity Commission Appointed Pursuant to a Resolution of the Church Assembly passed in January, 1946," which was published January 26th by the Press and Publications Board of the Church of England. The Report of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Film Enquiry Commission is published as an Appendix of the Report.

The proposals include the setting up of a Church Information Board, which would take the place of the present Press and Publications Board, which is complimented on its pioneer work in various spheres with very limited funds. The new Board would carry on and extend the present publicity services; and would be charged with responsibility for advising the Archbishop of Canterbury on public opinion; stimulating Press organization and information work in the dioceses; developing liaison with the publishing houses; and organizing the use of visual aids, including lantern slides, film-strips and modern exhibition techniques. Much of the present publishing work of the Press and Publications Board would be transferred to S. P. C. K.

The Publicity Commission's Report begins with a section on the importance and scope of Church Information. After warning that "it would be misleading to expect immediate returns from an investment of energy in Church publicity" before "a re-orientation of thought and outlook" has been accomplished, the Commission continues—

"Modern methods of publicity, well equipped for the presentation of demonstrable facts and for inculcating by repetitive suggestion particular action, seem at first sight void of capacity for arousing spiritual awareness.

"Nevertheless, the Commission believes that modern publicity methods are not incapable of assisting such spiritual action, and is convinced that they should be used in so far as they can be adapted to this purpose."

They plead—

"Church publicity will only be effective when it is recognized to be a general, almost an instinctive, responsibility of the clergy and laity alike in the dioceses and parishes of the country.

The Report goes on to summarize with favorable comment the present work of the Press and Publications Board and to indicate directions in which the Commission believe that it needs extension. They contrast the handling of religion by the national dailies with its more effective handling by the provincial Press as follows:

"The attention given to religion by the big national dailies is not such as to leave the church people with any sense of satisfaction. They are too often bound to feel that the things of the spirit are neglected or suppressed as not being news, and that Mammon in its unsavory aspects tends to be exalted when it affects the Church. The provincial Press, in closer touch with civic life, and, therefore, with the mind of readers, in the main recognizes a greater obligation and is to be commended as well as encouraged for its more accurate diagnosis and its sense of responsibility. The Fleet Street approach may at times bring disrepute on the Church as a whole by the undue and unfair emphasis of incidents of a nature equally likely to arise in other walks of life. The treating of religion as a dull subject which can safely be played down unless a 'titbit' is forthcoming is due not so much to hostility as to the reflection and sharing of public apathy, combined often with want of understanding and proper perspective on the part of those responsible for producing a newspaper. It is not for the Church to claim any particular privileges, but rather to secure that the positive aspects of its life and activity are understood and fairly presented."

At the same time, the Commission urge that "a campaign to create a Press consciousness among the rank and file, and also extending to the highest dignitaries of the Church, is called for and education of the clergy should be undertaken to break down an admittedly hard core of resistance."

Broadcasting and Advertising

In the course of a long discussion on broadcasting, the Commission writes:

"The Press and Publications Board has maintained regular communication with the News Division of the B. B. C., and this obviously should be encouraged. At Broadcasting House news of all kinds, including religious news, is under the control of the News Division. At an early stage of our proceedings, following an enquiry why the Church Assembly, after sitting for four days, was not deemed worthy of a broadcast reference, we heard with surprise that it is rare that Church news is regarded as of sufficient importance to warrant inclusion in the news bulletins. It is only fair to say that since then there has been evidence of a modified attitude, and we hope that the enlightened policy of the Governors of the B. B. C. in the religious sphere as a whole may be expressly extended to include in the news bulletins regular references to Church events and matters. No preferential treatment is suggested; only an adequate inclusion on the same footing as other reports reflecting the daily trend of events, whether social, economic, diplomatic or general."

The Commission "recommend in favor of Press advertising," but not in favor of a large advertising campaign at present owing to financial stringency, the shortage of newsprint and the argument that such advertising can be effective only when the members of the Church themselves "are attuned and educated to help to the full." They write:

"We consider that before the Church inaugurates the great spiritual gamble of a Press advertising campaign, those who comprise its active membership must have a better appreciation of publicity and of its value as a modern weapon to further the cause of Christ and to make the Church more acceptable to the indifferent and the skeptical among the general public."

The Report then deals at great length with parochial, diocesan and central periodicals, making many suggestions for improvement. Further sections of the Report deal with general literature, visual aids, religious drama and the organization of the new Church Information Board which is proposed. This would have a Chief Information Secretary (£2,000 per annum; an Assistant Information Secretary (£1,500); a Press Officer (£1,000) with two Assistant Press Officers, a Publishing Officer, and a Visual Aids Officer.

Film Commission's Report

The Archbishop of Canterbury's Film Enquiry Commission describes the present work of the Church of England Film Commission, discusses new factors in the post-war period, and outlines "objectives and functions of a representative Church of England Film Board or Authority." Their principal recommendation is that "the two Archbishops should proceed to constitute an authoritative advisory Church of England Film Council of, say, 15—10 nominated by the Archbishops and 5 by S. P. C. K. To keep connection with the permanent Publicity Board, the Chief Information Secretary appointed by the Assembly should also be either the Secretary of this Council or a member of it. This Advisory Council would be responsible for all questions of Film policy. If possible, a Diocesan Bishop should be Chairman of the Advisory Council." The S. P. C. K. would be asked to consider undertaking the responsibility, acting under the Advisory Council, of becoming the Executive Film Agency of the Church of England.

Nunc Dimittis

At the meeting of the House of Bishops in Winston-Salem it was stated that "the greatest fault of the clergy today is worldliness. A world priest cannot bring people to God."

This present series of meditations is being written by a layman for lay-people, and, changing only one word, we take Bishop Darst's warning to ourselves—"A worldly layman cannot bring people to God."

An absence of real spirituality in the pew, hurts the Body of Christ even more than does the presence of a worldly-minded man in the pulpit. He is one—we are many. The clergyman may move on—the congregation remains; and if that congregation is to be one comprising truly godly men and women, then, individually, we must see to it that we are right with God, holy and clean.

Are we enjoying the utmost fellowship with our Lord Jesus Christ? Were it not for the exceeding love of God our Saviour, and His great grace, this present writer would have no right to ask that question, he would have no title to write at all. Sorrowful admission is made of a break in communion with the Master. Though not of recent years, yet there was a period when the struggling and failure described in the seventh chapter of Romans, was a reality. But the grieved Holy Spirit continued to convict, and grace was not withheld, and grateful testimony is here given of the experience of being redeemed, restored, forgiven. We rise by the things that are under our feet; by what we have mastered of good and gain; by the pride deposed and the passion slain, and the vanquished ills that we hourly meet. There are three "therefores" in the Epistle to the Romans, and good it is to consider them, and to know the things to which they point. To truly experience them, is to be delivered from that worldliness which makes a man well-nigh useless in the service of God.

In Romans 5:1 is the "therefore" of Justification. Of the singer of Nunc dimittis, it is recorded that he was a just man. It is justification that makes a man just, and justification includes reconciliation through the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Such passages as Rom. 3:23-26; 4:25; 5:9-11 should be consulted and pondered over. In deep penitence we give ourselves back again to the God whom we had so grievously failed.

We go on to the "therefore" of Romans 12:1. It is our rededication, our reconsecration, leading us on and out to service for the Church—and only because of that other glorious "therefore" of Romans 8:1. In the past, "the flesh" had been the seat and vehicle of sin, but now the Holy Spirit is to be our Source of holiness (Gal. 5:19-26).

The broad law of the victorious Christian life, is that Christ Jesus must be dominant within the soul, the Indweller, delivering us from worldliness, or any form of unworthy living, leading us on to holiness and service. In this renewed fellowship there are specific blessings and responsibilities. The latter shall be considered (D. V.) on another occasion. Among our benefits we list a new leading—we are led by the Spirit of God. He becomes the controlling and directing Force in life (Isa. 57:18; Gal. 5:18; Rom. 8:14; Acts 16:7).

Our hearing is quickened — "My sheep hear . . . ." We have an inward hearing. God is able to speak His secrets to such as have ears to hear. Alongside this is set the companion grace of not knowing; not knowing the voice of strangers; that innocence of ear on which whatever is unjust, or unkind, or unclean, is lost (John 10:3-6, 27; Isa. 30:21).

We have a new sense of taste, an improved appetitite for the Word of God. No longer is it a mere "eleven-o'clock cracker" that we reach for, nor do we now think of any part of Scripture as being "light bread," but the whole blessed Book becomes our Food and our Feast. The Spirit of Christ was in the Prophets, and we find the Bread of Life from Genesis to Revelation. See Numbers 21:5; 1 Pet. 1:10, 11; Jeremiah 15 verse 16; Ps. 119 verse 103:

As the Scriptures are explored with new earnestness, prayer becomes more real, a glorious thing, whether it be prayer alone, or with others; whether at stated times, or at casual moments. And all these things affect and enrich our worship with the congregation, causing that to take on a new reverence and helpfulness.

When Simeon came by the Spirit into the temple, and as the old prophet's eyes "saw" salvation, everything in that temple shouted "Glory!" As new men in Christ Jesus, our grateful hearts join in that exclamation, for, by that same Holy Spirit, we, too, are beginning to see the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Read again in Luke 2:27; 2 Cor. 4 verses 5 and 6; 2 Cor. 5:17.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT P. PATTERSON

General Chairman of Brotherhood Week, 1948

I saw the concentration camps at Buchenwald and Dachau a few days after the liberation. No one who saw those places and the helpless survivors of them will ever forget the experience. Buchenwald and Dachau could not be understood, except as they bore witness to the depths that men can sink to when they accept and put into practice a doctrine of hate against those who differ with them in opinion, religion, or race. The world will see more Buchenwalds, more Dachaus, if the time should come again when the rule of hate prevails over the spirit of brotherhood.

We Americans are committed to the cause of world peace. Words will not win world peace. We will not reach it unless we have a strong, united nation here at home. And a strong united nation is an unattainable ideal unless we keep brotherhood as the guiding rule of our daily lives.

Intolerance is bound to produce a divided people, a weak nation. We may be sure that we will never achieve a lasting peace on such terms.

The unity we had in the war years, when we saw the losses and sorrows of war being borne by Americans without distinction as to race or religion, when it was plain to all of us that our spiritual aims and purposes were far more powerful than our differences, is still available as the vital force for peace. The understanding and goodwill found in the bond of brotherhood will bring us to realize that unity. I know of nothing else that can.

CONVENTION, DIOCESE OF DALLAS

McKinney, Tex.—Highlights of the 53rd Convention of the Diocese of Dallas were the admission of ten new missions, the admission of six missions as self supporting parishes, the Bishop's request for a suffragan, and a clear denunciation of lotteries and gambling devices for the purpose of raising money for Church needs. Bishop Mason directly requested that such methods be banished from the diocese. The committee appointed to advise on the Bishop's Charge made the motion to ask that a special convention be called within the next few weeks to ascertain the financial obligations involved in the question of Episcopal help and to act upon the Bishop's request. In 1952 the diocese will observe the centenary of the first Episcopal Church service held and plans are being made to recognize this anniversary throughout the diocese.

The Bishop called for ten new missions to be opened every year for the next five years, and also pointed out that to reach the national average proportion to the population the diocese must double the communicant list. He urgently stressed a real evangelism.

The Place of Gandhi In Our Day

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

It is only very occasionally that the message of a man reaches beyond the borders of his own nation and culture to influence the thoughts and ideals of men everywhere.

Mahatma Gandhi's influence in the West was in two different dimensions. He had the respect of thousands who did not follow his teachings, but who merely responded, as all men ought, to a life of singular sincerity and singleness of purpose. He also had the veneration, bordering on adoration, of a smaller group of American pacifists who were persuaded that Gandhi had found a new way to make the ethics of Jesus relevant to the political problems of our day.

They were deeply persuaded that his doctrine of non-violent resistance was identical with the doctrine of non-resistance as preached by Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount. In this they were mistaken.

The doctrine of non-resistance is a purely religious ideal which cannot be applied to a political struggle except in the sense of lifting men completely above the relative and proximate problems of establishing justice by the push and pull of political life.

The doctrine of non-violent resistance, on the other hand seeks to persuade us that if we do our pushing and pulling without violence we can preserve the ideal of perfect love. This doctrine assumes that the use of physical force is evil, but that the use of "spiritual" or "soul" force is good.

Such a doctrine assumes a sharp distinction between the corporeal and the spiritual which is native to the Orient, but is foreign to the Western world. Gandhi thus stood on Hindu foundations. Furthermore, his numerous fasts, intended to bring political influence to bear through self-punishment cannot be fitted into our Western spirituality.

It is significant that even his most ardent disciples, however much they made of this technique of using martyrdom as an "instrument of political policy," never sought to emulate his example. It would not have made sense in the context of our world.

This combination of saintliness and political shrewdness is not possible for us. The Christian idea of martyrdom requires that if life is sacrificed or risked it shall be done without calculating the possible political power or prestige to be gained.

While Gandhi was a product of the Orient it must be recognized, however, that there was a real synthesis in his life and thought between Oriental and Western ideas. The doctrine of non-violence, for instance, was taken, not from the Sermon on the Mount in the first instance, but from Jainism. But in Jainism it is a fantasticaly negative doctrine. It requires that no harm be done to any living creature, including the most insignificant or the most noxious insect. Gandhi transfigured this negative doctrine into a positive instrument of political power.

In the eyes of the West Gandhi will be revered as a great man and as a great patriot. He had a quality of greatness which transcended his particular doctrines. In the eyes of the East he will be revered as a saint or as a kind of god who will be added to the pantheon of gods, which characterize Hindhu Polytheism.

"THE CHURCHES AND THE EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM

Theme of Special Meeting to Be Held in Washington

New York, N. Y.—A special meeting "to demonstrate the concern of church people for the constructive principles essential to the success of the European recovery effort," will be held at Washington, D. C., in the Cathedral, Thursday evening, March 11. The meeting will be sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches, in cooperation with the Washington Federation of Churches.

Church leaders from many sections of the country, in addition to groups in the Washington area, are expected to attend. Members and officials of government are being invited.

Secretary of State George C. Marshall has been invited to participate and has indicated his acceptance. Among the speakers will be John Foster Dulles, chairman of the Committee on Policy of the Federal Council's Department of International Justice and Goodwill, and the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun. Bishop John S. Stamm, vice president of the Federal Council and bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church will preside. Moderators of constituent communions of the Federal Council have been invited to sit with the speakers.

The theme of the meeting, "The Churches and the European Recovery Program," is set by the statement recently adopted by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council, setting forth nine constructive recommendations on the recovery proposal.

The evening meeting will follow an afternoon conference on church policy in regard to the European Recovery Program, at which Willard Thorp, assistant secretary of state for economic affairs, will speak, and churchmen will confer on future education and action plans in regard to the Program.

It is expected that a petition in support of the Federal Council's statement will be presented by church officials to leaders of the Congress, in connection with these meetings.

MEDITATIONS IN HIS PRESENCE

IV. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . with all thy mind." (From the Summary of the Law, page 69.)

And all thy soul. But what is a soul? It's an instrument of the mind. Love God with thy whole being. This is what Jesus meant. This means further that our emotions, which sometimes lead us astray, will be guided by our wills, our intellects, and that devotion will be coupled with reason to track down truth and harness it as the driving force of the soul's life. Wisdom for making right choices, understanding for deepening the choices, revelation for sparking the choices into revolutionary actions, knowledge for giving perspective, and will for holding to the purpose seen and set—all these things are functions of the mind. When we say God is Light, we mean that He is the light of the minds that know Him. What chaos and confusion, what blurring of goals, of right and wrong, what misconceptions of God's Will for those who cling to the dim illumination of their minds cut off from God. If only the mind were more devoted to its chief end and function: to seek after God's law and God's will and to obey both. The I. Q. is important, but far more effective for God's use is a small limited mind wholly devoted in love to Him. Yes, of far greater service to Him than the wide capacities of a super mind dissipated in the pursuit of a philosophy or an ethic without a religion.

Reason is of God. He gave us a mind. Fear it not, provided it follows the wise and reasonable laws of nature, man, and God.

J. W. KENNEDY.

SHRINE MONT TO CONTINUE AS CONFERENCE CENTER

Richmond, Va.—Plans for the operation of Shrine Mont, at Orkney Springs, Virginia, as a Church Conference and vacation center, were made at a recent meeting of the Shrine Mont Commission, of which Bishop Goodwin of the Diocese of Virginia, is chairman. The death of the Rev. Edmund Lee Woodward, D. D., founder and director of Shrine Mont for the past twenty-five years, made it necessary to consider plans for carrying on the work in the future.

Mr. Wilmer E. Moomaw, business manager, is also acting as agent to make arrangements for conferences and summer guests. Among the conferences that have already been arranged for are the Washington Youth Conference, which will be for two ten-day periods during the month of July, and the Clergy Seminar.

Editorial . . .

Property And Personalty

There are many preachers who regard it as necessary to apologize whenever they mention money in a sermon. Of course apologies would be appropriate if our sermons degenerated into mere financial appeals, but this is not a serious peril among the clergy of the Episcopal Church!

If we are to preach to the people who sit before us, we are not reaching their whole selves if we fear to make any reference to their possessions. For our property is an extension of our personality. In the life of the present day we cannot think of a man without including some thought of the things which he owns. If I have three cents, I can enlarge my personality by actually being in two places at once tomorrow morning. I can mail a letter through which my will may influence another person far away. If I own a few dollars I can have an extra pair of arms and legs working for me, and even a brain. That is why the warning of our Lord regarding the danger of wealth was never truer than now. The man with millions is a veritable octopus, for he can control the actions of thousands of arms and legs and brains.

Therefore it is obvious that if the Church has a message for human personality, it cannot disregard the property which is so vitally related to that personality. Show me your budget; let me know the proportion of your income which is spent for food, clothing, housing, amusement, personal adornment, charity, education, religion, and I have a pretty accurate picture of your soul. Tell me how you spend your money, and I can tell you what God thinks of you. For we may truly reverse the saying of Jesus and say, where your heart is, there will your treasure be also.

Those who complain that the "passing of the plate" introduces an unspiritual note into a service of worship, do not understand that worship is always offering. They would insulate their religion from life. We are trustees of all we have, and the man who boasts that he spends his money, his time, and his talents just as he pleases, is an embezzler. Jesus once told a parable of a care-taker of an estate who during the long absence of the owner used the property for his own profit and the entertainment of his friends. He was punished, as every man deserves to be who is not "paying his board," not paying back to God and to God's children some share of all that it has cost them to make us what we are.

A parish's campaign to meet its budget and that of the whole Church is not a "necessary evil" which interrupts its worship, but is a necessary proof that it cherishes the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. When we think of our contributions to worthy causes in terms of sacrifice, we must not forget the meaning of that word. It denotes not loss or suffering, but simply to make holy. May we all remember this as we give our offering to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief on February 29th. Surely this Fund is what God would have us do above all else with His property. May His Spirit flame in our hearts on this Leap Year Sunday! —W. L. C.

A Good Lenten Exercise

Mass-production is no doubt one of the great attainments of modern industry, which has raised our standard of living by bringing to the multitudes goods which formerly went only to the few. Probably its evils are of minor concern compared with its advantages. But we believe we have every right to complain of the mass-production of ideas. What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own individuality?

All about us force has displaced reason and propaganda, persuasion. Big business has mastered the psychological technique of compelling millions of persons to join the procession, wear the prescribed uniform, and buy all manner of things they do not need. We older folk, in order to discover what has happened, have only to compare modern advertisements with those in the magazines of our youth. They were no doubt highly ineffective. They seemed to say, quietly: "I do not want to annoy you at all, but if you need a good tooth-powder, I know of an excellent brand, and will tell you where you can buy it."

Now we are bludgeoned with advertisements which drive many to alter radically their personal habits. Our young women are learning that the chief end of man, or at least of women, is to plaster up their bodies with artificial ornaments which are guaranteed to allure desirable men. Classical music on the radio is often smeared with mouth-wash! The tired business man must be driven to amusements and diversions which once were spontaneous. In his clubs he has forced upon him standardized conviviality and prescribed camaraderie, and is often fined if he fails to conform to the canonical back-slapping and nicknaming.

We recommend as a wholesome Lenten exercise the determination of certain fixed posts at which the Christian resolves to stand as a guardian of his freedom, refusing to be driven into work or play, beliefs or habits, which seem to him to have no rational or religious value, and are not congenial to his own nature. The average Englishman has this faculty, which most Americans lack, of asserting his own individual opinions and observing his own favorite habits, regardless of the fashions of the crowd. There is no virtue in being merely different or queer, but there is a serious danger in being swept away by the current, with no thought of the value of what we are doing, or of where we are going. —W. C. C.

THEIR CONVICTION IS STRONG

It is good to know that many men who were without Christian conviction are finding it. They are writing about it so that others may share what they have found. They are people skilled with the pen and the mind and with conviction, and they are turning out "best sellers" in the religious field. More people are showing interest in these laymen's books. They are doctors, lawyers, business men, and farmers, housewives, teachers. leaders, and social workers, who come into the Book Store looking for books to read on Christian subjects.

If we could get parents to read them and share the thoughts around the family discussions, how fine it would be! Young people are seeking people with conviction. These books will be good for them as they grow through the "doubting" period. This doubting period is our fault as we have not taught them The Faith. It is natural for them to want more of the truth as they grow up.

Here are three authors that I wish you would read. "Stop Looking and Listen," by Chad Walsh, with the subtitle, "An Invitation to the Christian Life." It is a little primer of Christian belief, written by a man who recently came out of unbelief and skepticism to belief. He is a poet and professor of English. He predicts, "Before this generation can recognize the sanity of Christianity they shall have to realize the shallowness of the current brands of secularism."

Another writer is Emile Cammaerts, who is a Belgian poet, essayist, playwright and patriot, who since 1933 has occupied the Chair of Belgian Studies at the University of London. His "The Flower of Grass" is a book for everyone to read. Someone has said: "The story of how a quiet literary man, a sane and decent citizen, came out of humanistic skepticism into Christianity has significance, is suggestive, challenging." "Upon This Rock," also by Mr. Cammaerts, is a tender, poignant memoir to a son who lost his life with the R. A. F., and is also an honest and helpful record of a father's effort to understand the fact of death.

Most people are familiar with the writings of C. S. Lewis. Mr. Lewis is Fellow and tutor of Magdalen College, Oxford, where he lectures on English literature. His "The Screwtape Letters," "The Case for Christianity" and others are books which are helpful and practical. He has almost uncanny skill for illuminating profound truth with vivid illustration.

Why not spend some time reading some of these books, which will help you and your family in their thinking, and hand them over the fence to your neighbors. We share and "swap" other books, why not one of these?

The Offertory Sentences

None of the other sentences here offered for use have such interesting implications as the first one, to which we have already referred.

The second sentence, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," might be misunderstood, unless the emphasis is laid heavily on "seeing your good works." Unless this is done it gives the impression that a large contribution should be made and that others should be inspired to do likewise by such an example, forgetting that the exhortation is that people should see the good work, but not see the person doing it.

The rest of these quotations merely encourage liberal giving sometimes for the sake of an earthly reward or for a heavenly reward, or for missionary purposes.

In any case, however, the rector rarely has time for more than one or two sentences before the choir takes over, and usually consumes more time than is necessary in order to complete the collection.

Here it is well to call attention to the fourth rubric on page 73 concerning these anthems that they should be limited to words "of Holy Scripture or of the Book of Common Prayer." Some choirs, or choir directors have gone far afield in this matter, and have chosen anthems more for their musical arrangement than with regard to this injunction, although the matter is actually under the direction of the minister and is limited by the rubric itself.

Your author is completely devoid of musical talent, and upon attending his first choir rehearsal confessed this deficiency by saying, "It is not worth while for me even to take a Hymnal. I know so little about music." Whereupon one of the leading ladies turned to him with great earnestness and said, "You will keep quiet then, won't you?" It is an admonition that has proved to be a very useful piece of advice.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

PASSING IT ON

Basic in this way of life is the privilege of passing our discoveries on to other people. While many nominal Christians make religion a private, self-centered affair, the Founder of our faith put His own friends to work at once "fishing for men"—and religious awakening in our skeptical age depends upon the faithfulness with which we follow such a practice. Instead of leaving evangelism to the minister, each one of us needs to get busy, too.

Now, the happy secret about all this proves to be that each one of us can begin immediately by simply using some of the actual personal experience and conviction he has received and telling about that. It need not be the full-blown Gospel. God does not expect us at once to present theology, or to try to describe the beauty or power of religion—He just wants us to be open about what we have already tried, how we have begun, some new conviction, which has happened (however small) in our own lives.

A man I know, who helps other people all the time, started, himself, by asking forgiveness and saying yes to God's leading to go and work in a certain place. At that point he still didn't see how to reach anyone else; but the moment he began quite simply to speak of his own decision and plans, another man replied, "You gave your life to God last night; I would like to give mine to God right now!"

People are sick of advice but eager for news of something that works—and of how it works. Be honest about yourself and you will have companions. And this new usefulness and happy fellowship will in turn enrich your own life still more—The Calvary Evangel.

The tendency has always been to regard Christianity as an individual relationship with God. The whole message of both the Old Testament and the New Testament, however, is that God is concerned with the community and not merely with the individual. The Protestant religion has always tended to be individualistic. We tend to forget that we are not only sons of God but brothers one of another.—Cuthbert Bardsley.

NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETING

Unpredictable! Very!

Seabury House, N. Y.—The February meeting of the National Council was succinctly summarized by the remark of a lady who has the vantage ground to know: "This meeting was interesting, wasn't it? But the National Council Council is very unpredictable!" Very! Your correspondent arrived for the Thursday session too late even for the blessing. And that because, with the National Council's "nose to the grindstone" as is inevitable at Seabury House isolated seven miles out in God's green acres, the Presiding Bishop led the Council through a mass of agenda like Tennyson's "Light Brigade," and the curfew rang at 11:45 A. M. instead of 5 P. M. Mr. Irwin will take up where I leave off. This is the first meeting at which I didn't bump up against an executive session.

Christain Education

It would be a dangerous presumption to evaluate the importance of the matters that come to the attention of the Council, and even though iit might be an editorial prerogative, I venture to report on one part of the agenda first—not to get it over with—because Dr. Huess said "The clergy . . . are badly worried (about the Sunday School)", and I am one of them. The Director's report for the Department of Christian Education was a weighty one which brought forth the applause of the Council, but at the time no action.

"For more than 100 years the Episcopal Church has relied upon Sunday Schools to transmit to its people its formal education in its beliefs and practices. In the earlier days it was taken for granted that what the child learned on Sunday would be amply reinforced throughout the week by the Christian life of his home. . . . Today that comfortable and workable educational system no longer exists. . . . (The children) come largely from homes that are in little distinguished from the secular world which surrounds the Church at every turn. . . As the children grow older and assume the basic attitude of the parents that religion is not vitally important, the excitement dies. . . .

"Today (the Episcopal Church) is relying almost entirely upon the influence of the Sunday School. . . . It has tried to make shift with a one-hour, one-day-a-week influence, which is the limit in most Sunday Schools. The theoretically ideal Sunday School is supposed to acquaint a child with the Bible, Church History, Worship, Doctrine, the Christian Life, Missions, and Stewardship, to prepare him spiritually for the life of Prayer and Grace, to equip him with a knowledge of Christian moral values, and to set him upon the road which leads toward the attainment of saint-hood. . . . The life-long total of Christian instruction (based on a survey in a Western diocese) is exactly three full days. . . . The total time of instruction most of our children receive is so pitifully small, as to make no sense at all. . . .

"There must be teachers to do the teaching, and there must be materials to teach with. What are the teachers in our Sunday Schools like? Not enough can possibly be said in praise of their loyalty, their unselfish services, and their deep sense of obligation toward this all-important task. They are, as a body, the least recognized and the least appreciated of all of those, who today as lay folk serve the Church. . . . The all too frequent custom is, to give them a preliminary push into the cold waters of a class, and let them flounder along for the rest of the year as best they can. . . .

"The clergy do not assume the responsibility more widely of training their teachers, because most of them simply do not know how! With one or two notable exceptions our seminaries are not equipped to train men in Christian education. Unless a priest has the opportunity to serve a curacy in a parish where there is a good Sunday School, whatever he learns about education will be learned the hard way. What happens is that most of the clergy, knowing how little they know, and being pressed with many other things, turn the Sunday School over to a lay superintendent. . . .

"There are ten Sunday School lesson series available for use today. None of these is official in any sense, and all of them have been produced by private initiative and means. Two of these, the Cloister and the Saint James, are being more widely used than the others. . . . The average Sunday School curriculum is a hodge-podge of several systems, and many, I dare say the majority, of our Sunday Schools are using some materials taken from the lesson series published by the Congregational-Christian, the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Baptist, the Lutheran, and the Dutch Reformed Churches. . . . There is little hope that as a child transfers from one Sunday School to another that he will find a Church which continues to teach him on the foundation of what he has been taught before. . . . If some madman had deliberately set out to evolve a plan of educational confusion for a Church, he could not have done it more effectively than we have done it with the best of good intentions."

In his experience in college work during the past sixteen years, Dr. Huess found that Episcopal students in such institutions, presumably products of Church schools, were completely uninterested in the Church for the most part, and most of the students would admit freely that they had learned absolutely nothing in the Church schools. "The Episcopal Church," he said, "is playing at the serious task of educating its youth. It is a feeble gesture in the direction of education and nothing more."

"This Department warns against a hasty jettisoning of the traditional Church School system under any circumstances. . . . The day of the Sunday School is by no means over.

"The emphasis is shifting today in religious education generally, and it is shifting fast. The directions may be summarized in four necessities:

1. To supply the educational needs of the small school.

2. To emphasize the teaching of content materials, especially the beliefs and doctrines of our religion.

3. To create a workable and realistic curriculum for use in the schools.

4. To re-utilize the teaching possibilities of the Christian home to reinforce the instruction of the Sunday Schools.

"If we neglect to furnish the aid which (the teachers) so desperately need, we shall do very little to improve the effectiveness of the Sunday Schools in our Church.

"Work has already begun on that curriculum which General Convention ordered the Department to create. The first step in this work was to get a clear-cut idea of what a child should be expected to know by the time he is confirmed. Therefore, the first task of curriculum development is to publish a Manual of Instruction, which shall contain a clear statement of these things. It will contain what a child should know about the Bible, Church History, Doctrine, Worship, and Christian Living. This book is now under preparation by a committee of representative scholars of our Church, chosen largely from our Seminaries and headed by Canon Wedel. It will be a reference book to the authors and editors of each course. It will furnish a "terminus ad quem" for the new curriculum up to the Confirmation level. It will give definiteness to the content material. To give it the authority it needs, it will be based upon the Office of Instruction.

"We are now at the point where we are ready to employ a Director of Curriculum and authors to begin the writing of materials, a slow and laborious work. The Saint James Lessons took six years to complete.

"The new curriculum must be aimed at the home, it must be prepared for use in the home. . . . To this end, I hold the Adult Division in our Department to be of the greatest practical importance. At present it remains a Division in little more than name. No money is provided for it in the budget and it has no personnel.

"The former Division of Christian Education was a small organization, an Executive Secretary, a part-time editor and field worker, and two assistant secretaries, who were primarily field officers. When our new department is fully staffed under present bugetary allowances, it will have exactly the same number of staff officers as it had when it was a Division in the Home Department, in number ten people. It is our plan to employ a Director of Curriculum Development in the next few months and to give him two associate editors. But, we shall still remain the smallest educational organization among the major Churches of America."

The report then outlined what the department should be like if it is to do its work with maximum results. This is not considered possible in this triennium, but it should be approved and recommended to the next General Convention. With travel expenses and salaries of fifteen stenographers, this program would cost in the neighborhood of $196,000 a year. Heading it would be the director. In the Division of Child and Home an executive secretary with one assistant secretary each for Teacher Training, Parent Education, Weekday Education, and Missionary and Stewardship Education. In the Division of Youth, an executive secretary with a male assistant and two female educational secretaries. In the Division of Audio-Visual Education, an executive secretary, educational secretary, and visual service director. In the Division of Adult Education, an executive secretary and an assistant for young adult work. In the Division of Curriculum and Material Development, an editor-in-chief, four assistant curriculum editors, and five assistant editors for materials other than curriculum. In the Division of Field Service, ten resident provincial field workers, two of which shall do Youth work.

With this staff set-up, the department would be able to produce the educational materials and methods which the Church so desperately needs and wants us to produce. "It would have an impact on the total life of our Church which in the return of loyalty, allegiance, and giving would many times over repay the expenditure made upon it."

If this plan is approved by the Council and General Convention there would still be the problem of housing the staff, for the present accommodations at "281" are insufficient. The publishing of the needed materials must be complete. The art work must be superior to anything which exists today. The format in which the materials finally appear must be such as to win respect for the Church's educational effort. Dr. Huess said the department recommends that the Presiding Bishop appoint a committee to study these problems, its membership to include the most able financial experience on the Council. "I have no doubt," he concluded, "but that such an emphasis upon education as I propose here that we all make, will have behind it the approval and support of the whole Church."

THE PRESBYTERIANS

This fascinating report might have ended here, but with an evident grasp of strategy, Dr. Huess turned the attention of the Council to the "fait accompli" of the Presbyterian Church in presenting Dr. James Smart, editor-in-chief of the new curriculum of the Presbyterian Church, and invited Dr. Smart to tell what it cost if he chose to do so. Dr. Smart didn't tell, but I heard it rumored that the brethren we have been courting ecclesiastically have spent no less than three millions to produce lesson material whose standard of excellence is a goal for the P. E. C. U. S. A. to aim at.

Dr. Smart has been working on his project for eight years, and he declared that this is the most opportune time for curriculum development because divorces of ideas have been overcome. He reiterated what Dr. Huess had said about the need of restoring religious education to the home, and to that end their lesson material is of such permanent value and form that each text can be used as the foundation of a home library on religion. Heretofore millions of dollars have been spent on lesson pamphlets or leaflets, which at most last only three months, some only a few days, and then were destroyed. I cannot picture any family discarding one of the beautiful Presbyterian texts, but only their being re-read time and again. With the aid of age-level quarterly magazines, teacher, parent, and pupil will work together on lessons that will face realistically the issues the Church has to face today.

SEABURY HOUSE

Bishop Sherrill felt that the time had come to make a report on Seabury House, which more and more is becoming a center for conferences. These include Christian Education, a monthly meeting of officers, Rural Work, college professors, Committee on Laymen's Work, Church Unity Commission, and Companions of the Holy Cross. The purchase price of the estate was $100,000. Of the $140,000 received so far, the Presiding Bishop himself raised a large percentage, but now, in his appeals, he is moving in ever narrowing circles. With the amount over and above the purchase price, equipment has been purchased, but it is going to cost between $75,000 and $80,000 to put the buildings in complete repair. It should be understood that the staff are paying rent for the buildings they occupy on the estate. The $75,000, which Bishop Sherrill wants repaid to the National Council, will have to be raised by putting some of the land on the market if gifts aren't forthcoming. There is a representative of Seabury House in each province. Of the committee appointed by General Convention to consider a residence for the Presiding Bishop, Bishop Lawrence has been of great help. "I do not ever want to see the maintenance of Seabury House in the Missionary budget of the Church." said Bishop Sherrill. "An endowment of $400,000 would provide the $15,000 a year income needed to carry it." There are possibilities here of special projects. Why cannot the dioceses give houses by endowing them and letting them bear the names of the several dioceses?

COMMUNICATIONS

Among the communications presented by Dr. Barnes, was one from the House of Bishops calling on the Council's departments to prepare material for the observance of the 400th anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer in 1949. This was referred to the next meeting of officers. From the Christian Education Department of the Diocese of Pennsylvania came a telegram commending the work of Dr. Huess' Department in curriculum development. Someone asked the pertinent question, "Was there any money with it?", or maybe it was impertinent.

COMMITTEES

On the Presiding Bishop's nomination, the present members of the Standing Committee were reelected. The same can be said of the Committee on Trust Funds, following Dr. Franklin's nomination of them.

TREASURER'S REPORT

Dr. Franklin reported that 98 dioceses and districts paid 100 per cent of their expectations; 69 paid their full quota. Because some overpaid, $36,000 more than the expectations was received, a part of the $70,000 in excess of income counted on. The present time indications are that there will be no lapsed balances. Total actual receipts for 1947 were $3,238,591.48. The estimated deficit, after expenditures is $28,715.52. The quotas, which now are on a strict mathematical basis, for 1948 are $2,839,076. There is a deficiency of $299,147.50 in the actual expectations. For this year, 24 dioceses and missionary districts have pledged expectations above their quotas, 52 equal to their quotas, and 22 below quotas. Provinces 3, 4, and 7 are on the honor roll in the first category.

In May, 1943, the Council adopted resolutions requiring medical examinations before the election or appointment of any officers. By action at this meeting the ruling is changed so that the examination is required only before they take office.

RECONSTRUCTION AND ADVANCE FUND

To set the records right, the appropriation of $500,000 for the purchase of surplus war supplies has been reduced to $300,000, since no more such purchases will be made.

$7,345,000 was the total of R. and A. Out of that $738,000 has been appropriated for World Relief. Since this amount is more than the 10 per cent promised, no further appropriations will be made for World Relief from R. and A. World Relief cannot expect 10 per cent of the interest on deposits.

Scores of appropriations were made all over the world at a time when it is impossible to obtain contracts for building. Labor and materials are unobtainable, except in Changsha. A great deal of the money is still in New York, guarded and waiting for the right conditions.

DIEU VOUS GARDE

A notable gift of $24,000 from Miss Marie Louise Constable of Saint James Parish, New York, for Christian Education was reported. Previous giving for the same purpose from Miss Constable amounted to $12,000.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S COMMITTEE ON LAYMEN'S WORK

Mr. Lewis introduced to the Council the new Assistant Secretary of the Committee, the Rev. Frederick A. McDonald, and reported on the annual meeting held in January here. With the increased subscription price to the Sermon service ($1 to $2), only one protest was received and that was from a Canadian priest. Four pamphlets on laymen's work have now been published.

OVERSEAS DEPARTMENT

The Department expressed the hope that the National Council would appropriate or lend $40,000 to the District of Cuba for the completion of the auditorium connected with the Cathedral consecrated last November 30. The auditorium is to be a memorial to Bishops Knight and Hulse. Dr. Franklin termed the building of the Cathedral, its close, school, and deanery a magnificent job. The request was referred to Finance.

From Dr. Sherman came a request that the National Council permit the Central China College to draw $100,000 from the $200,000 allocated from R. and A. Dr. Magill warned that Dr. Francis Wei, College President, might be under great pressure. But the district where the college is may be in the hands of Communists in another year. Bishop Dun said that we ought to let Dr. Wei know we will proceed as soon as we have every reasonable assurance that the investment will be safe for the Church, and on the Presiding Bishop's recommendation, action was postponed until the April meeting to give time for the Overseas Department to get information from Bishop Gilman, the State Department, and Church World Service.

Because of student disorders on the campus, Saint John's University, Shanghai, has been closed temporarily as discipline and until the parents give assurances that no further disturbances will occur. The request for $5,000 for two months' faculty salaries was referred to Finance.

EMBARRASSMENT

With the receipt of the Portuguese translation of the Book of Common Prayer from Bishop Thomas, the Council discovered that our Prayer Book in Latin American Districts does not conform exactly to our own. True, General Convention permitted the dropping of the word, "Protestant," from the title page and from the Promise of Conformity in the Consecration of Bishops, but in the three Spanish editions already printed there are other additions and revisions, none serious, but providing the precedent of irregularity. Even the 25th of the Thirty-nine Articles has been revised in one. They contain no Certificate of the Custodian of the Standard Book of Common Prayer, because Dr. Suter did not think he could certify them. Now, the Portuguese translation has deletions from the Prayer of Consecration. The Council feels that, in paying for these editions, it shares the guilt of "having done those things which we ought not to have done," and adopted the following:

"Resolved, That the National Council instructs the Director of the Overseas Department to transmit to the Standing Liturgical Commission of the General Convention the manuscript for the proposed revised translation of the Portuguese Prayer Book; and be it further

"Resolved, That the National Council will not publish or finance any edition of the Book of Common Prayer which does not conform to the Standard Book of Common Prayer and is so certified by the Custodian there; and be it further

"Resolved, That the National Council deeply regrets that it has been unwittingly party to the publication of editions of the Book of Common Prayer in Spanish which do not conform to the Standard Book, and recommends that the fact of the actual or proposed changes in editions of the Book of Common Prayer in foreign languages be expressly brought before the next General Convention by the President of the Council."

DOMESTIC MISSIONS

The Bishop and Diocese of Florida have relinquished the National Council's appropriation for Negro work and won the congratulations of the Council on the removal of Florida from the list of aided dioceses. Southern Virginia is also off the list by assuming one salary item formerly paid from National Council Funds. South Florida is next, having relinquished one-half the Council aid this year, and the second half next year.

COLLEGE WORK

Mr. Barrett reported that the College Work Division has overcome the manpower shortage, and that it now has the largest number of directly-affiliated Canterbury Clubs. The Division has three goals:

1. To have as near as possible to the campus gate a clergyman and where needed a woman worker, providing the "external relationship" between education and religion.
2. To have inside every college and university a religious education system.
3. Try to convert the teachers.

In connection with this, the 17 faculty people at Seabury House for the recent conference set up the organization of "The National Association of Faculty Episcopalians." Dr. Kuebler commented that N. A. F. E. can do a real job. "The only way to convert the campus is to convert the faculty."

LEAP YEAR DAY

Mr. Jordan reported that 80 to 85% of the parishes and missions will hear Bishop Sherrill's broadcast on February 29. Of the 4,500 clergy listed, 3,021 have ordered all the materials, a very high percentage considering the nonparochial clergy and those who are assistants. The radio hookup is so wide that only 25 parishes and missions in the Church cannot be reached that way. They will have transcriptions.

The Department of Promotion submitted a resolution through Bishop McKinstry, and it was adopted, extending the 1947 authority to 1948 for the 3% contributions to the Radio Hour. A further resolution provides that the Department make a Churchwide study of Every Member Canvass methods.

BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL

Bishop Penick brought to the Council's attention several reports in the form of resolutions by the Council, the American Church Institute for Negroes, and the Board of Trustees of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, together with statistical data from Dean Goodwin and an opinion by Bishop Brown on the $192,000 allocated to the Divinity School from R. & A. for capital improvements. Because conditions have changed so rapidly since the allocation, no candidates having entered the school this year, and the Supreme Court having made a decision regarding the education of Negroes in Oklahoma, the Council adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in the light of the rapidly changing conditions affecting the education of Negroes for the Ministry of this Church and the graduate education of Negroes generally, the National Council communicates to the Trustees of the Bishop Payne Divinity School our considered judgment that it would be unwise at the present time to expend $192,000 for new buildings at the present site of the school.

While recognizing that an appropriation of this amount to the American Church Institute for Negroes for the capital needs of the Bishop Payne Divinity School was approved by this Council on April 22, 1947, we now express the hope that the Trustees of the Bishop Payne Divinity School may agree that for the present it would be wise to permit this Council to hold the $192,000 in reserve for the School, paying the income of that fund to the Trustees for the support of the School."

The $58,000 raised for the School itself is being turned over to the Trustes for the building of faculty residences, rather than a dormitory.

Wednesday's session closed with an address by Mr. Sidney de la Rue, of the State Department, who, out of his experience as financial adviser of the U. S. to Liberia, spoke on that country, with special attention to the Stettinius Plan.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION COUNCIL MEETS

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Appointment of a Committee on Religious and Public Education and authorization of research and discussion of this subject were among the significant actions taken during the 26th annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, which met here Feb. 8-14.

The meeting also highlighted the role of laymen in Christian education, heard many outstanding speakers, received important reports, elected officers and staff members, and carried on its other business.

Seventeen sections of the Council met during the first three days of the week. Major Council committees, the Commission on Educational Programs and Board of Trustees also met in addition to the governing body itself on the last two days of the week. In all, some 1,100 educators representing the 40 denominations and 659 councils of churches and religious education which cooperate in the Council attended the sessions.

Dean Luther A. Weigle, long-time leader in religious education and the Council's work, will head the Committee on Religion and Public Education. Thirty prominent churchmen will serve on the committee in working out principles for relating religion and public schools without violating separation of church and state. Active committee work will begin soon.

Other significant actions include:

(1) Ratification of important changes in the constitution and by-laws of the Council which among other things restate the purpose and functions of the Council and allow for greater representation of laymen from constituent denominations and councils of churches.

(2) Provision for a Department of English Bible in the Council, which will advise other departments and committees on the use of the Bible in lesson and program materials and will continue promotion of the Revised Standard Version.

(3) Establishment of a joint bureau of architecture by the International Council and the Home Missions Council of North America, part of the functions of the bureau being to advise churches in erecting buildings for religious education activities.

(4) Provision for a larger role of church school superintendents in the annual meetings of the Council.

(5) Ratification of constitutional measures by the Publishers Section of the Council whereby a Protestant Church-Owned Publishing Association will be organized. Although final approval must await a second vote next year, this new trade association will begin operation in the coming year.

The role of laymen in Christian education was dramatized in an All-Council Fellowship Luncheon held Tuesday noon, Feb. 10. Robert Garrett, Baltimore churchman, was given the fifth annual Russell Colgate Distinguished Service Citation.

Probably the most talked about address of the week was given at this luncheon by the first layman of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., Wilbur La Roe, Jr., who is moderator of the church. He said that although only the church can safeguard the future of humanity and that although ministers are more important than generals, the work of the church will fail unless laymen are active in its redemptive mission.

In addition to the by-law providing greater lay representation in the Council, a study was authorized for the coming year which would suggest a plan for broader participation of laymen and women in Council policy and program making. Further action is planned at next year's annual meeting.

Among other outstanding speakers heard during the seven days were Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs; Dr. Kenneth I. Brown, president of Denison University; Dr. Charles W. Gilkey, former dean of Rockefeller Chapel, University of Chicago; and Dr. W. W. Orr, Des Moines, Iowa, pastor. Scores of other speakers were heard in section meetings.

Prominent in the discussions of the week were educational evangelism, week-day religious education, Christian family life, and use of the Bible in teaching.

Heading the list of reports was that of Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council, in which he reviewed the work of the Council and proposed new lines of cooperative activity in Christian education.

Dr. Ross announced participation of the International Council in the Protestant Radio Commission, which will be organized March 17. He proposed to the Council a 1948 budget of $616,625.55, which is the highest in Council history.

A report on early plans for the World Sunday School Convention to be held in North America in 1950 was heard. It was indicated that among the purposes for the conference were the following (1) "to make an impact upon the general public" and (2) "to develop an ecumenical consciousness in the interest of Christian education."

The world convention program will include conferences for laymen and women, for young people, seminars for professional religious workers, and mass meetings.

Elected to be chairman of the Council was Dr. Paul Calvin Payne, general secretary of the Board of Christian Education, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. He succeeds Dr. Arlo Ayres Brown, who had served for nine years.

Dr. Ross was appointed to another four-year term as general secretary, having now completed twelve years.

Rev. H. H. Kalas, executive secretary of the Iowa Inter-Church Council since 1945, was elected to be director of educational evangelism for the Council. He will succeed Dr. Harry C. Munro, who had resigned from the Council.

The Arizona Council of Churches was received as the thirty-third state council member of the International Council.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY, EXECUTIVE BOARD

Long Session Discussing Chaos In Today's World

Seabury House, N. Y.—The state of the world seemed a matter of such serious moment to the members of the Woman's Auxiliary National Executive Board, meeting at Seabury House Feb. 13-16, that they spent a long session discussing what Church-women might do in regard to it. The following statement resulted:

"Keenly aware of the chaos and confusion in today's world, the members of the Board are positive in their expression of the certainty of the Christian faith, and in their conviction that the Church has something greater than atomic power. . . .

"As Church people we will work for the Marshall plan, not for any political motive, but because we are concerned that children of God about the world be restored to self-respect and self-support. As Christian people, facing possible world-destruction, we will try to be God's instruments to help build One World, bringing a Christian motivation and dynamic to some form of world government. As Christian people, we should make an effort to understand Russia and other peoples, and should read and study to this end.

"Furthermore, any attempt to solve the problems of the world today means that Church people must find a solution to division in Church groups based on differences of race or class. . . . The world situation brings a new sense of urgency to St. Paul's message that 'there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, for all are one in Christ Jesus.' "

The new director of the National Council's overseas department, the Rt. Rev. John Boyd Bentley, D. D., made his first appearance before the board in that capacity, though they had long known him as Bishop of Alaska. Besides Bishop Sherrill, Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, and the Rev. Wm. C. Crittenden, head of the National Council's youth division, the board's other visitor was J. Benjamin Schmoker, head of the Committee on Friendly Relations among Foreign Students, a group through which the national YMCA, YWCA, and Foreign Missions Conference of North America cooperate.

The triennial United Thank Offering budget has an item for new mission buildings which is usually all appropriated in the first year of the triennium. The last of the current item was voted at this board meeting: $1,500 for a preaching hall much needed by the new Bishop of Shensi, Newton Liu, in the city of Sian, northwestern China; and $6,000 toward a chapel for Canterbury College, Danville, Ind., a coeducational college which came under Church auspices in 1946.

Appropriations made by the board for equipment or repairs will benefit missions in the Virgin Islands, Cuba, Puerto Rico, China, Alaska, the Philippines, Liberia, and the dioceses of Eau Claire and Vermont.

The total received so far for the United Thank Offering to be presented in 1949, compared with the previous offering at the same point in the triennium, shows: Jan. 31, 1945: $529,-924.68. Jan. 31, 1948: $733,847.69. A gain of nearly $204,000.

NORWEGIAN BISHOP HERE IN INTEREST OF AMSTERDAM MEETING

New York. — The Rev. Dr. Arne Fjellbu, Lutheran bishop of the Diocese of Trondheim, Norway, in the U. S. on a two months tour at the invitation of the American Committee for the World Council of Churches, described wartime religious services he conducted in Russian-occupied territory where he preached under the shadow of Stalin's picture, flanked by emblems of the hammer and sickle.

He described how he was in hiding from German Gestapo agents in Finnmark, northern-most province of Norway, at the time that area was liberated by Russian forces in January, 1945.

When Bishop Fjellbu asked permission to conduct religious services for Norwegian troops, he quoted the Russian commander as saying: "I am glad to have you with us, since your work in the resistance movement is well known. You can feel free to use our premises for your religious services."

Bishop Fjellbu reported that Russian troops attended his services regularly. "While they did not understand Norwegian, they appeared attentive and reverent," he said. "Of course, I daresay, good politics prompted them to behave so well."

"Yes, I felt strange preaching sermons with a picture of Stalin behind me. But since I was using a Russian hall, there wasn't much I could do about it."

The Bishop, who played an active part in the resistance movement and lost his post as a result, said he was dismissed as Dean of the Tronheim Cathedral on orders from Vidkum Quisling in February, 1942. He was arrested several times, but finally escaped to Sweden by air.

His fate at the hands of the Quisling government, the Bishop said, was similar to that of the 700 clergymen in Norway, 150 of whom were sent to concentration camps. "Only 30 clergymen collaborated with the Nazis," he said. "They are now either serving prison terms or have been banished from their pulpits."

The Bishop stated that church-going has increased in Norway over pre-war levels because "our churches were the only place people could hear the truth. All sorts of people attended."

While the Bishop showed no bitterness concerning war-time experiences, he expressed concern "over the possibility of losing the values we fought for in the world conflict."

"When the war came and Christians in Norway had a common enemy in the Nazis, all differences were forgotten. Even the Roman Catholic Church showed its sympathy in our fight. We had a high degree of unity in Norway during those years," he added.

He warned, however, that "those values for which we fought together during the war era are still in the greatest danger. Disillusionment and hopelessness paralyze mankind. The world today is in deadly peril through lack of confidence."

Asked how this principle might be applied to attitudes of Americans and Russians toward one another, he said: "Statesmen today do not trust each other and such distrust is one of the greatest war-making factors of our time."

Bishop Fjellbu expressed the view that churches could lead the way in promoting peace "by demonstrating the practical values of cooperation on a world-wide basis."

He said it was important for Western churchmen to keep contact with Eastern Orthodox churchmen, and "it is of great value that we as churchmen maintain contact with Russian churchmen."

While admiting the Russian Orthodox Church had not yet accepted the invitation to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches this summer at Amsterdam, Holland, Bishop Fjellbu said it was "of utmost important to continue negotiations with the Russian Orthodox churches."

The Bishop reported that 127 churches from 42 countries already had accepted invitations to the Amsterdam gathering. He said he was in this country to interest American congregations in the assembly at Amsterdam, and has planned a two months speaking tour of the mid-west and east for this purpose.

CONSECRATION OF BISHOP OF ALASKA ON MAY 18

New York, N. Y.—The Presiding Bishop has taken order for the Consecration of the Rev. William J. Gordon, Bishop-elect of the Missionary District of Alaska, to take place in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, N. C., at 10:30 A. M., May 18—just twelve days after he has attained the age of 30 years. According to Article II, Section 2, of the Church's Constitution, a bishop must be at least 30 years old when he is Consecrated.

Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill will be the Consecrator, with Bishops Edwin A. Penick of North Carolina, and John B. Bentley, vice-president of the National Council and former Missionary Bishop of Alaska, as co-consecrators.

The Bishop-elect will be presented by the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, and the Rt. Rev. Edmund P. Dandridge of Tennessee, and the preacher will be Bishop Thomas C. Darst, retired Bishop of East Carolina.

Bishop Frederick A. Goodwin of Virginia will read the Litany, and the attending presbyters will be the Rev. Warren R. Fenn of Anchorage, Alaska, and the Rev. A. Stratton Lawrence, Jr., of New Orleans.

The Rev. Thomas J. C. Smythe of St. Thomas' Church, Reidsville, N. C., will be Deputy Registrar.

This is a picture of the Washington family pew in old Christ Church, Alexandria, Virginia. George Washington was a member of the Vestry of the Parish of which the original Christ Church was a part. On February 27, 1773, he bought the most expensive pew for 36 pounds, 10 shillings. The 175th anniversary of Christ Church is being celebrated at this time.

"AN IGNORANT MISSIONARY" ON HIS WAY BACK TO CHINA WRITES

S. S. Aimee Lykes.
Feb. 3, 1948.

Sir: In the past few months I have been hearing a great deal about Evangelism. Being an ignorant missionary I am not quite sure what the Episcopal Church means by this word. However, I am quite sure that the Episcopal Church needs a change of heart, or I am afraid that it will be a dead church.

During the last year many things have distressed me. Many of our clergy seem to feel that they have bestowed a favor on God and man, because they are clergy. None who has grown up like I have can fail to see the value of the lives of those who truly serve the Master. Those whom I have loved most have been men lowly in their own eyes, but in their lives their religion shown forth like a light in the darkness.

When I go to church, I see lots of little altar boys running around the church. The clergyman does all sorts of gymnastics, and often preaches a sermon having little to do with reality. As I walk out of church he patronizingly shakes hands with me. If I happen to mention that I have spent the greater part of my life in the mission field, he does not seem to be interested.

The name of our church is the Protestant Episcopal Church. Many of the clergy seem ashamed of the word, "Protestant." Personally I would as soon drop the Episcopal, but glory in the Protestant. We protest against sin and the pomps and vanity of this wicked world. Most certainly we protest against a clergyman who feels that his ordination has made him a son of God. This can come only by living the life of the Master.

The world today is vitally in need of Christianity and of an Evangelical Christianity. We do not want churches who think mainly about themselves, but those who feel their mission is among all people.

I am on my way back to China. In many ways I do not wish to go, but my friends have urged me to come back and help them. To know and to understand other peoples, and then come to live with them, this is the purpose of Christian Missions. Christianity is not a group of doctrines, but leading the life of the Master.

The Church of Christ is one, and I am sure that it will rise to its mission. If so, we can face the future with confidence. ELLIS N. TUCKER.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Christ Church, Alexandria, Va. Observes 175th Anniversary

By CLEMENT E. CONGOR

Beautiful old Christ Church, George Washington's home church in colonial Alexandria, Virginia, is holding its observance of the 175th anniversary of its completion. On Friday, February 27, a service marked the actual anniversary of the meeting of the Vestry at which the church was received as "finished in workmanlike order" and on which occasion ten pews were sold at auction to defray the extra costs of construction.

George Washington was a member of the vestry of the parish of which the original Christ Church was a part. At the auction of pews in the new building, he bought the most expensive pew for 36 pounds, 10 shillings. In the churchyard in 1774 he publicly withdrew his allegiance from King George. On the first Sunday after his return to Mount Vernon upon the completion of the Revolution, he was in his accustomed pew in Christ Church. He regularly attended this church until his death on which occasion the rector of Christ Church conducted his funeral at Mount Vernon.

Christ Church, Alexandria, was originally one of several churches in Truro Parish, Virginia. George Washington was a vestryman of Truro for eleven years ending in February 1774. Apparently a very busy man during these years, he attended only 23 of the 31 meetings of the Vestry. Washington's diary shows his regular attendance at Pohick Church, one of the other churches in Truro Parish and about twenty miles south of Alexandria, until shortly before the Revolution, whereas after that time we find him usually in attendance at Christ Church.

In those days vestries were elected by the freeholders or qualified voters for entire parishes, not for a particular church as now. In addition to their church work, they performed the duties of civil officers and assisted the courts in certain secular affairs. They were even required to report to the chief magistrate violations of the laws such as Sabbath-breaking, absence from religious worship without reasonable excuse, profanity, disturbing public worship, gambling, etc.

By 1 January 1767, Christ Church was a part of the new Fairfax Parish carved from Truro Parish as the population of the area increased. The Vestry directed the church wardens to publish in the Virginia and Maryland Gazettes the letting out of two churches to the lowest bidders, one near the Falls (Great Falls of the Potomac) and the other at or near Alexandria, to replace the building then in use which was in poor repair and too small to hold the growing congregation.

James Wren, reputed to be a relative of Sir Christopher Wren, architect of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, produced the plan most pleasing to the Vestry and James Parsons agreed to build the church at Alexandria for 600 pounds. Wren was paid 40 shillings for the use of his plan and the church is very little changed to this day.

The most interesting points in the plans are that, "The quoins and arches are to be of rubbed brick, the pediments to the doors rubbed work in the Tuscan order, the lower windows to contain eighteen lights each nine by eleven. The upper windows twelve lights and besides the compass head, the sashes of the lower windows to hang with weights and pulleys and to be clear of sap, to have a medallion cornice under the eaves. The roof to be covered with inch pine or poplar plank laid close to shingles. The shingles to be of the best juniper cypress, 3/4 in. thick, 18 in. long and to show 6 inches. The altar piece, pulpit and canopy to be completed in the Ionic order".

The very interesting records of the Vestry at Christ Church unto this day, do not say whether inflation caused higher costs or what, but at a vestry held on May 25, 1772, James Parsons, the undertaker (old term for contractor), indicated he would be unable to complete the structure, although by his original agreement he could have sold ten pews in the completed church to his own advantage to defray additional costs.

On June 8, 1772 a contract was let to John Carlyle for 220 pounds, the lowest bid, for the completion of the structure. The contract specified completion by Christmas Day 1772. It appears from the records that the church was completed by November 23, 1772, but it was not until February 27, 1773 that the Vestry actually received the church at Alexandria from the undertaker, Col. John Carlyle, and was "satisfied that the said Church is finished in workmanlike order."

At this same meeting the Vestry immediately proceeded to sell the ten pews noted in the original contract. One of the conditions was that if the sales fell short of the sum advanced by the Parish for finishing the church, that the subscribers or purchasers would be chargeable with one fifth of the deficit. Only inhabitants or taxpayers of the Parish were permitted to purchase pews by law. As his residence, Mount Vernon, was still in Truro Parish, Washington could not legally be a vestryman of the new Fairfax Parish. He was, however, eligible to purchase a pew in Christ Church, Alexandria, as he was a taxpayer on property which he owned in Alexandria. Accordingly at the auction he bought the most expensive pew in the new church at 36 pounds, 10 shillings. The undertaker, John Carlyle, purchased one for 30 pounds, and the First Lord Mayor of Alexandria, William Ramsay, purchased a pew for 33 pounds.

In the very shadows of Christ Church one Sunday morning in 1774, surrounded by the congregation, every one of whom he knew well, Washington advocated withdrawing allegiance from King George and declared that he would fight to uphold the independence of the Colonies. Nine years later, after the independence had been successfully established, he returned to Mount Vernon on a Christmas Eve. The next day found him back in his accustomed seat in Christ Church to hear the Rector, the Rev. David Griffith, proclaim that peace and good-will reigned once more in the land. It is said that no one bowed in deeper gratitude than the great general on this occasion.

On April 25th, 1785, George Washington and other prominent laymen of Fairfax Parish met in Alexandria and signed a contract binding themselves, their "heirs, executors, administrators and assigns" to pay annually to the Minister and Vestry of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Alexandria the sum of five pounds for each pew assigned to them. George Washington's well-known signature is appended to this original contract, which is still preserved in the old minute book of the Parish Vestry.

The Rev. Thomas Davis, rector from 1792 until 1806, conducted General Washington's funeral at the request of Mrs. Washington at Mount Vernon on December 16, 1799.

George Washington Parke Custis, adopted son of George Washington, presented to Christ Church "The Family Bible of General Washington used at Mount Vernon" on April 12, 1804. This Bible is still in possession of the Church and is one of its treasured relics shown on special occasions.

The original building, enlarged by the addition of a graceful tower, still stands serenely in a quiet churchyard shaded by beautiful and ancient trees that were mere saplings in Washington's day. Like traditional English country type churches, it is impressive in its simple elegance. Especially impressive is the all-white interior with box pews, beautiful white-painted woodwork, wine-glass shaped pulpit with a sounding board overhead, mounting to a golden flame. Most beautiful single aspect of the interior is the pair of tablets on either side of the pulpit containing the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, the Apostles' Creed and the Golden Rule. These tablets, lettered by James Wren, the architect, in 1773, have never been retouched. Although the lettering is black on pure white, the background appears as a soft golden hue, a shade acquired solely by exposure to the atmosphere for 175 years. At the time that the tower was built and galleries added in 1818, all the square pews were changed to face forward with the exception of Washington's pew which still retains its original proportions. During services, anyone may occupy this pew who so desires.

This famous pew has been occupied in the intervening years by the great and near great of America and other nations. For 175 years, the ageing structure has lived as a house of worship ministering to a growing community and also as a national shrine. For many decades it was the custom of the President of the United States to attend Christ Church on the Sunday nearest to George Washington's birthday. President Wilson and David Lloyd George, Prime Minister of Great Britain, worshipped in Christ Church at the time of the First World War. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill attended New Year's Day services at Christ Church together on January 1st, 1942. President Harry S. Truman attended Thanksgiving Day services at Christ Church on November 28th, 1946.

Christ Church has continued to grow until now its congregation is more than double the capacity of the church. Today, when all the pews are free, even standing room will be at a premium for the special service commemorating the anniversary and the birthday of the church's most distinguished layman, George Washington. Washington's favorite prayers and hymns will be used. The mellow-toned bell will toll as it did in the early days and the serene old church, mindful of its glorious past, will look forward confidently to its mission of ministering to men of the distant future.

A Dark Light On Human Nature

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

In the newspaper dispatches on the increasing food crisis in Germany there appeared a disturbing note about the attitude of the German peasants toward the hunger in the cities.

Despite the reduction of rations in the cities to the starvation diet of 1,000 calories per day (to be compared with the 3,000 calories per day consumed by an average American), the German peasants have not been cooperative in throwing their surpluses into the market.

The German authorities have not had the power to enforce food collections from the farms; and the farmers had no economic incentive to deliver the food. The currency with which they were paid for the food was becoming increasingly worthless and furthermore there were no goods on the market which could be bought with this currency.

Some of the journalists who reported the unwillingness of German peasants to deliver food surpluses to the cities pointed out in all fairness, that the peasants of other countries showed the same reluctance. In fact, Secretary Marshall, in his Harvard speech, which started the whole process now culminating in the European Recovery Program, stressed that Europe was in economic misery not merely because of the obstacles to international trade but also because currency inflation and lack of consumer goods had destroyed the incentive of peasants to raise food for the cities.

Some self-righteous city people have drawn the conclusion from these dismal facts that peasants and farmers are particularly individualistic and not inclined to look at the problems of the common good, which transcend their own interests. It may be so. Life on the soil is not calculated to give men a vivid sense of the mutual dependence of men in a modern technical society.

But it would be better if we all drew a lesson from these sober facts. That lesson is that though we all talk about love and brotherhood we are all much more dominated by self-interest than we would like to admit.

While no society can maintain its health if the individuals who compose it do not have some sense of responsibility for their fellowmen, it is also true that no society would live if it did not harness, as well as sublimate and suppress, self-interest. Human society is partly the achievement of a genuine sense of mutual responsibility.

It is partly an artful contrivance which enables men to serve one another indirectly, even though their primary motive may be to serve themselves. This is true of international as well as of domestic relations. The European Recovery Program is partly an expression of our sense of responsibility to hungry people in Europe. But it is also partly an expression of a wise self-interest.

"Moral" people are sometimes affronted by this element of self-interest in all political life. But that is because they do not know themselves sufficiently to understand that these artful contrivances, by which self-interest is harnessed for the common good, are necessary, not because the bad people are selfish but rather because all of us, the virtuous and the unvirtuous, are not good enough to preserve community by other means.

PHILIPPINE CONSECRATIONS SOMETIME IN APRIL

New York, N. Y.—With the ordination to the priesthood of Mons. Isabelo de los Reyes, Jr., and Bishop Manuel N. Aguilar of the Philippine Independent Church, arrangements are now being made for their Consecration.

Bishop Norman S. Binsted of the Philippines is hoping it may be possible to have the consecrations sometime in April, and has written to Bishop Harry S. Kennedy of Honolulu inviting him to attend and take part in the service. Bishop Kennedy believes it may be possible for him to fly to the Philippines so as to arrive there about April 5. Presiding Bishop Sherrill has sent a radio message to Bishop Kennedy urging him to go to the Philippines for this service.

An Effective Ministry By Mail

By REV. ALLEN W. CLARK

Calvary Church, Danvers, Massachusetts

There are never enough hours in a parson's day to cover everything. Therefore, he has to do the absolutely necessary things first. This is especially true of his calling, where priority must be given to emergency calls to homes and hospitals, the sick and sorrowing, to calling on church workers to plan out the work, to newcomers in town, etc. It takes good judgment even to get in all the necessary calls.

As a result ,there are some calls that are not made, on people that the parson sincerely wants to see, and to whom he wishes to minister. One group that suffers especially is that considerable number of faithful people who cannot get to church services—the shut-ins, the old, young mothers with small children, and women who work Sundays, the isolated who live far from the church and have no car. Here are people who really care about worshipping God, but are prevented by circumstances beyond their control. They are just the sort whom the minister wants to keep in touch with, who "rate" his time and thought. Of course he gets to see them occasionally; but, Sunday after Sunday they are left without an opportunity to worship; week after week they do not see their minister. Each year he resolves to see more of them; and then finds the urgent calls once more crowding them out. He is still looking for a practical solution of this problem.

A little over twenty years ago a practical solution was found. A young minister found himself in charge of three churches: his "home base" in a college town, where he had three services in the morning; and two little country churches, one in a village, and the other out in the Vermont hills, at the crossroads in a scattered rural community. His schedule Sunday afternoons was a two o'clock service in this last church (called "Beaver Meadow"), and then back to the other church by four. For one winter he carried out this schedule faithfully, studying the situation. He found that, in bad weather, the Beaver Meadow congregation (which would number twenty to thirty in summer) would often drop to six or eight people. There was no horse-shed, and no intelligent farmer would drive to service, and leave his horse out for an hour or so in ten-above-zero weather. Most of them lived too far from the Chapel for them to walk it both ways. The young minister felt that the trip was worth while, even for a congregation of half a dozen faithful souls; but he was not satisfied, for his job was to provide worship for that scattered community; and he was not succeeding in doing this.

As he went about calling upon the people, he noted a well-thumbed volume, giving signs of constant use, in every farm-house kitchen—a mail-order catalogue. Suddenly he saw what this mail-order habit meant to him and his problem. Sears Soebuck, Montgomery Ward and others had solved their rural problem handily. Since the old way of selling goods only through stores had not succeeded in reaching the rural people, they must find some other way. So they taught these people to shop by mail, and the farming folk had taken hold of the idea enthusiastically. It occurred to the young minister that, if people could be taught to shop by mail, they could also be taught to worship by mail. Rural people have been called conservative, and righly so; but they are always enterprising enough to take hold of a new idea that is sound and useful.

So, one Sunday in 1927, he proposed a new set-up. He would come to Beaver Meadow one Sunday afternoon a month for a service; and for the other Sundays he would send them "mail-order" worship. There would be a simple worship-service for each family, consisting of prayers, a Bible Reading, and a brief sermon, which the father or mother could read to the family. There would also be a return postal-card, addressed to the minister, saying, "We had Home Prayers on Sunday, and there were .... present (including the children)," with one of the family signing the postal-card. The Beaver Meadow folk agreed to try it.

The first service went out, and on Sunday the parson wondered if any family would actually gather for Home Prayers. He watched the mail eagerly after Sunday, and was moderately happy when return postals came from three families, reporting a total congregation of fourteen. That was more than he had by going out for service. The next week he was sure that he had hit on a practical solution when reports came from nine families, out of the twelve he had sent services to, with a total congregation of thirty-four. Some of them began to call these Home Prayers "Sears Roebuck religion," indicating clearly that they believed in it!

"Home Prayers" had one feature missing in the mail-order catalogues. Each mimeographed copy was signed by the minister, like a letter; and a personal postscript added, inquiring after the health of the family, asking if the cow had calved, whether the well had run dry. In addition to providing worship, he was also succeeding in keeping in steady personal touch with the people.

From those early days in 1927, when Home Prayers opened up the field of worship-by-mail, their growth has been steady. It was a natural step to begin sending these services to sick folk in home and hospital, and to the great variety of people who actually are prevented from church-going.

Before long other clergymen heard of Home Prayers, and wanted to use them. So extra copies were made, and sent, well ahead of time, for them to use for their parishioners. Some 5,500 copies go out each week to 150 ministers and church workers, in more than half the states in the Union.

During the war many parishes sent Home Prayers to their youngsters in the service. A Massachusetts minister heard from a young lieutenant on Saipan, who wrote, "Home Prayers have been delivered to me in some of the toughest places and at the oddest times, and were very welcome, and used by several members of the company. On Saipan I had three of them delivered to me at once one day, when the mail orderly and I were pinned down by machine-gun fire. It is late—my candle is almost gone, so I'll close for now."

For many clergymen, Home Prayers have become an effective solution of the vexing problem of a ministering to these people who cannot sit before him in the pews. Each week this simple worship service comes to them; and, because it is signed in his own hand, perhaps with a personal postcript, they feel something of the love of God coming steadily to them through their minister. They know they are not forgotten, even though he can only ring their doorbells occasionally.

For a clearer understanding of this ministry-by-mail, its main points are outlined below:

A SIMPLE SERVICE—This attractively printed service has an opening prayer, a Bible reading, and closing prayers—all of it simple enough to be used steadily by those who have little education. On the other hand, it has also been used for years by college professors, and other highly educated folk, for it seeks the simplicity of the Gospel.

FOR BOTH CITY AND COUNTRY. While Home Prayers began as a rural venture, and is today widely used in rural fields, at least half of its circulation is in city parishes who use this service for their shut-ins—g r e a t parishes like Trinity, Boston, and All Saints', Worcester, Mass.

FOR THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL. Home Prayers are written by an Episcopal clergyman, but, from the first, they have avoided a one-church viewpoint. The original Beaver Meadow group belonged to a variety of churches. Today Home Prayers has its largest circulation in the Episcopal Church, because their author is best known in that church; but it is also used by Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, Universalist, Baptist, Christian, and other churches.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH is supplied by each minister or church worker signing the copies he sends out. In other words, your copies come to you unsigned. Up in the corner is "written by the Rev. Allen W. Clark," so there is no worry about your seeming to claim authorship. If you add a personal postscript, Home Prayers are doubly effective—that person knows that you remembered him when you wrote. People say, "I always look at the bottom of the page first to see if you have written anything to me."

THE POSTAGE YOU PAY. Unsealed, Home Prayers take a cent-and-a-half. You can sign your name, and also write a formal greeting, like "Merry Christmas." If you write anything more personal than that, you pay the first-class three-cent rate; and some parishes do this regularly, and feel the extra expense well justified. Other parishes send out the services by first-class mail only occasionally, thus economizing.

HOW TO ORDER HOME PRAYERS. Just write to Rev. Allen W. Clark, 44 Cherry Street, Danvers, Mass., and tell him how many copies a week you desire. (Home Prayers are printed from early October until the end of June.) You will receive your copies a week or two in advance of the time you need to send them out.

FINANCES. Home Prayers are not a commercial venture. Therefore, there is no subscription-rate, or stated charge; and no bills are sent out. Twice a year we "pass the plate" by mail to the "Associates" (those who use Home Prayers for their people), and the Associates make their voluntary contributions, just as in a church service. The cost of producing and mailing Home Prayers comes to about two cents a copy. Many Associates simply multiply the total number of copies received to date by two cents—and thus settle the amount of their gift. Some give more, some less. In twenty years our budget has always balanced.

PASS THE PLATE YOURSELF. After a while you can "pass the plate" yourself to those who receive Home Prayers from you. Invite your people to send gifts to you, to cover the expense of their Home Prayers. Most self-respecting people want to pay something for what they receive. In the course of time their gifts should take care of your expense for Home Prayers.

HOME PRAYERS ARE NOT COMMERCIAL. The material is not copyrighted. It may be used by any one, for any purpose. You will find Home Prayers being used for the worship service in Sunday Schools, summer camps, by lay people conducting a church service. Many ministers use the illustrations and ideas in their sermons. Other ministries-by-mail utilize Home Prayers for the services they send out. The one purpose of this venture is to be used as widely as possible in the Kingdom of God, and its steady growth shows that ministers and people find Home Prayers practical and effective. They will work for you and your people. Write the Rev. Allen W. Clark, 44 Cherry Street, Danvers, Massachusetts.

V. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (From the Summary of the Law, page 69.)

But how must one love oneself? Not selfishly, but sensibly. Taking care of one's needs as they arise, for food, for clothing, for shelter, for attention in sickness, for guidance in perplexity, for mental and cultural nourishment, for sufficient labor and recreation. So does one love one's neighbor. Because of God's love for us all, we desire to accept His command to love another as one with love for self, certainly so far as meeting needs is concerned. Is that not the teaching of the Good Samaritan story? The lesson given is easily repeated: "Go and do thou likewise." Sacrificial giving, and the dedication of lives to the service of mankind without thought of reward, is evidence of obedience to this command.

But too often we separate persons into groups—one group we acknowledge as neighbors, the other group we accept no responsibility for. Jesus made it clear—who is thy neighbor? Anyone who has need of thee. Anyone! There are no exceptions. Whoever comes within the touch of your concern is your neighbor and your responsibility—"As much as lieth in you".

We begin wherever we are, keeping our eyes open, sensitive to the needs of others. There is glory in such a way and great joy, and God walks with us as we go.

J. W. KENNEDY.

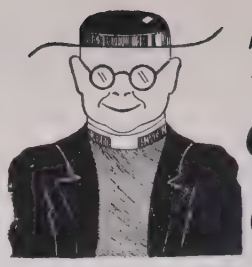
FOR THE UNITED NATIONS

Almighty God, from Whom all thoughts of truth and peace proceed; Guide, we pray Thee, with Thy strong and peaceful wisdom, those who take counsel for the nations of the earth in the United Nations Organization. And that we may worthily support them, deliver all Thy people from selfishness and false ambitions. Grant that we may prepare our minds through study, our hearts through compassion and our souls through prayer and sacrament for a new world in which justice shall be assured to all and in which peace shall be enduring, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.



The Curate's Column

THEY WOULDN'T WISH IT

We have been out of action for a week, and it looks as though another week will pass before we are back on our feet again. Those bugs which give us colds and flu have laid us low and landed us in our bed. It is bad enough for me, but it is harder knowing that a lot of our people are in the same case. Some of them are far less able to stand it than we are—and we don't like that. As soon as we can get around, we are going to see some of them.

We know where those bugs got the best of all of us. It was in a cemetery. You see, an old friend had finished his work here, and we wanted to render him the last service we could. We did our best. A lot of his other friends felt the same way, and they were there, too. Unfortunately, we had to bury him on a cold day, in a freezing rain. Our friend wouldn't have wished it, but we stood, as convention demanded, bareheaded to the weather. It was considered necessary to do that in order to show our respect for our friend and our God. As a result, some of us are sick, and we shall probably have to conduct another funeral in a few days.

Can we possibly think that our God, or any child of His, would want anyone to suffer, or to die, in order to show respect for him? Is human sacrifice the only way of showing our devotion?

We can't help thinking it would be a far better token of our affection to rid ourselves of these stupid conventions. No one who loves us could want us to suffer when it serves no useful purpose. For our part, we are sure we can show our love far better by keeping ourselves in condition to carry on the work they have passed on to us.

National Council Meets

The February meeting of the National Council was largely routine, other than the outstanding report of the Department of Christian Education, presented by Dr. Heuss, the new executive of that department.

Acceptances by the dioceses for 1948 unfortunately did not meet the full budget, and necessitated a cut in the proposed budget. Though the cut was not a large one, it suggests that we would do well to lay careful plans for our fall promotion. The deficit in acceptances led to the dubious procedure of using undesignated legacies to balance the budget. This is bad financing. It involves using what should be capital funds for current expenses. General Convention ought to prohibit this practice.

The Council received a resolution from the American Church Institute for Negroes asking Council to hold up payment of the money allocated the Bishop Payne Divinity School from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. Council fortunately realized that the Bishop Payne School has a Board of Trustees, and that the National Council in essence was a transmitting agency in this matter. There obviously exists a deep moral obligation to give to the Bishop Payne School funds that were given for it. Council passed a resolution suggesting to the Board of Bishop Payne that it permit the Council to hold this fund for the present, giving the income to the school. We suspect this will be quite agreeable to the Board of Bishop Payne, as long as the principle is established that this money belongs to Bishop Payne. Building conditions being what they are, plus the undecided mind of the Church as to the training of Negro candidates for the ministry, make it wise to delay actual construction in Petersburg. It is incidentally clear that the whole structure and program of the American Church Institute for Negroes needs evaluation and fresh consideration.

The thoughtful report of Dr. Heuss and the Department of Christian Education was undoubtedly the highspot of the meeting. It faced all the difficulties involved in the problem of Christian education in our Church. It recognized the lack of home cooperation, the dearth of trained teachers, the paucity of curriculum material up to modern standards, the limited program of the small Sunday School. Wise steps are already being taken and there is courageous planning in progress for the future. The implementation of the planning will require money and personnel. The cost will be nearly $200,000 for new staff members alone. We believe the Church will gladly give that amount for Christian Education leadership if the Department continues to work as wisely as these first steps indicated. This was a fine report of sound work in progress.

High Church "Cooperation"

A sarcastic editorial entitled "Cooperative Churches" in "The Living Church" of February 15th snipes bitterly at the Division of Domestic Missions of our Church, and more particularly at the Rev. Dr. George Wieland and the Rev. Clifford Samuelson of that department, because of an interdenominational pamphlet with this title, some copies of which were inscribed with the name of the Division. This is of a piece with smear criticism of the Federal Council of Churches on the basis of material issued by it simply for study. "The Living Church" sets up a straw man by assuming that everything in this interdenominational pamphlet represents the official position of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In shrill and ill-mannered tones it then enquires, "How about it, Bishop Sherrill and members of the National Council, since this pamphlet bears the imprint of "281"? Are these your sentiments?"

Such methods would not be worthy of reply except when one considers the fundamental reason for this furore. This is all over a matter of cooperation with our Protestant brethren. This editorial thus gives away the true High Church position. The High Churchman speaks frequently of Christian reunion and of cooperation with other Churches, but he has no true desire for it with his Protestant brethren on any basis other than that of assimilation. Anglo-Catholicism is isolationist and uncooperative towards Protestantism. The sooner our Church understands this the sooner we will be able to assay at true value the comments and tactics of the High Churchman in respect to any plan of Church union which our Church may consider in the future. The sad part of this pamphlet is that because of such attitudes within our Church, we are listed among "non-cooperating Churches" in the company of Pentecostal groups and the Mormons!

Part of the pamphlet so bitterly condemned speaks of the allocation of certain fields to a single denomination. When there are thousands of counties without any Church in them; when over 50 per cent of America is pagan; when rural America is relapsing into heathenism at an alarming rate; and, when all our Churches are limited in funds and in manpower, this seems a most sensible and Christian procedure. It has long been followed in the foreign missionary fields. Even the Roman Church has tacitly accepted it in certain areas. There is more work than any of us or all of us can do. Therefore we should not waste our efforts in needless competition, but try in a spirit of Christian brotherhood to alleviate some of the cost of our sin of disunity by such methods as the allocation of fields.

But "The Living Church" will have none of this. This is "surrender to interdenominationalism." Better to have a tiny Episcopal Church with services once a month by a minister who has seven other Churches and whose salary comes in large measure from missionary funds than to agree to the allocation of fields with other Churches so that each field can have a full time minister and an adequate program of Christian worship and life.

There ought to be a show-down on such matters by those who give the majority of our missionary funds, and that happens to be not the High Churchmen, but the evangelicals, or Low Churchmen. We ought to insist on Christian cooperation to the fullest and reject appropriations for competitive Churches in missionary fields.

Or the other solution is for High Church parishes and dioceses to begin to give not the quotas they have never met, but ten times these quotas so that we Episcopalians can meet the total Christian need of America. For if we and we alone are "The Holy Catholic Church," then we must go into every town and village of America. But if, as some of us suspect, we are only a part of Christ's Holy Catholic Church, then perhaps we ought to be willing to cooperate with our brethren. "By their fruits ye shall know them!" They have the fruits!

A Review Of An Important Book

By THE VERY REV. ALEXANDER ZABRISKIE

Dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary

"Virginia's Mother Church and the Political Conditions Under Which It Grew," by George Maclaren Brydon, D. D. Published by the Virginia Historical Society, Richmond. $1.50.

By the Very Rev. Alexander Zabriskie, Dean, Virginia Theological Seminary

Ordinarily a "review" of a book outlines its contents and then appraises it in detail. This particular volume is so crammed with information that such a critique would require another volume. An alternative type of "review" is a record of the major impressions the work under discussion made upon the reviewer. This article is of the latter type.

The first impression is that Dr. Brydon has written the history of the Church in the right way; that is to say, in relation to its environment. He never for a moment forgot that the people who composed it were planters and farmers; that their fortunes were at the mercy of a one crop economy and that the value of tobacco fluctuated constantly, that some of them were in conflict with royal governors and struggling to protect and develop local self-government; that in the back of their minds were the dangers of Indian attacks and uprisings of the slaves; that means of communication were bad and slow. The people who make up the church in any age and determine its action and development as a sociological institution are always immersed in other affairs—political, economic, social and the like—and inevitably bring to their activities as churchmen thought-patterns and ideals and prejudices inculcated by these other concerns, as well as bringing to their political and economic functions a perspective and standards cultivated in the Church. The great fault of much Church history—including some otherwise quite good histories of our own Church—is that they are written as though Church people could be detached from their total culture and the Church's development be understood apart from this environment. Dr. Brydon never makes this error. For more than most historians he tells the story of the Church in relation to the total life of the colony and of its English background. Some people will fault him for devoting so much space to political and economic affairs on both sides of the ocean. In my judgment it is one of the best features of the book. His discussion of the relatively slight effect of the English Toleration Act of 1689 on Virginia is one of the best refutations I have ever seen of the charge that the established Church in Virginia was intolerant and persecuted dissenters; and his description of tobacco as the medium of exchange, and the result of its fluctuating value, helps us understand better the difficulties of both clergy and vestries. My chief regret is that he did not show us even more clearly just how events in the "secular" sphere affected happenings in the Church. The connection is not always clear.

One result of Dr. Brydon's telling the story of the Church in relation to its total environment is that he enables the reader to appreciate more adequately than other writers in this field the nature and extent of the influence exerted by Virginia's Mother Church on the life of the colony.

A second impression made by the book is its massive learning. Dr. Brydon has studied sources previously unused. He has pored over vestry-books and letters, as well as official reports sent back to England and the proceedings of the legislature. He knows the best secondary sources. I certainly cannot claim to be a scholar in the field of colonial history, but I am positive that there is no book on the colonial Church in Virginia which is based on anything like the same amount of factual information. Scholars can learn much from it; the rest of us who claim only a certain amount of previous reading in the field can learn much more. The source materials printed in the appendices are of especial value.

This information has been digested and correlated, so that Dr. Brydon presents us not an encyclopedia of unrelated facts but an ordered narrative. At times he permits himself to generalize or to draw a moral: but always on the basis of knowledge. Occasionally he indulges in speculation; and whether or not one agrees with his speculations, one has to admit that they are as well-informed as such speculations can be in view of available evidence.

A third impression is Dr. Brydon's appreciation of the part played in history by individuals. He has brought out more clearly than I, at least, have ever seen brought out before the importance of Sir Edwyn Sandys (and this is one of the very significant revaluations of this book), and also of Bishops Compton and Gibson, of London, the strength and weaknesses of Commissary Blair (to whom, I must confess, I think he devotes a disproportionate amount of space), the real stature of Governors Andros and Spottswood. God works out His purpose through many forces—political developments and reverses, economic factors, social arrangements, Church councils; but certainly He works through individuals (by guiding them, empowering them, overruling them and

THE RIGHT USE OF LENT

By the Rev. G. Paul T. Sargent, D. D.

Rector, St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City

Lent is a season which, rightly used, will be of the utmost value in man's search for a victorious faith.

The growing complexity of life increasingly presses upon us all. Probing scientists are resolving the natural world more and more into its competing elements. Governmental and industrial problems are multiplying. Social demands have become more intensive, and men are confused and distracted.

How can a Christian find his way through this confusing welter of competitions, demands and worries, so that he may lead a simple, undeviating life in a complex age?

We cannot accomplish this result by reducing the modern world to its former outer simplicity but by acquiring and maintaining within ourselves the simplicity of mind and heart that will help us to choose certain fundamental values and center our love, faith and hope upon these. We must, like Enoch, walk with God, while around us surge the distracted multitudes.

This Lent we can determine to lessen the number of distractions, social events, and vain pursuits which render so much of our life superficial and disappointing. We can choose between those things which enervate life and the possession of the cardinal virtues taught and revealed in the life of Jesus. Through walking with Jesus, let our Lenten quest to learn that "godliness with contentment is our greatest gain." —From the Episcopal Church Times.

EASTER EUCHARIST

So now we come! The strong, the frail,
To kneel before the altar rail—
The blessed Sacrament to take,
And this we do for Thy dear sake!

So now we come! Teach us to pray,
Renewing courage day by day—
Teach our hearts to patient grow—
Our hearts so bowed with grief below!

So now we come! Oh! Risen Lord!
We feel the healing through Thy Word—
The Blessed Life you gave for us,
We feel to be a sacred trust!

So now we come!

MARY BELLE WALKER.

WE ALL LISTEN

In reading a current issue of one of the Christian Educational Journals I came across an interesting article on the "Radio". It suggested that we make our radio a center of listening for the family. There is no greater joy than sharing music, a story hour or drama with someone else.

In a recent study it was revealed that the average American child spends more than fourteen hours every week in front of the loud speaker. Mr. Beals' comment was, "Our children actually spend more time listening to the radio than they do at any other single occupation except sleeping!"

This does behoove us to check up on the things our youngsters are hearing daily. I realize that the radio is a great help between the hours of five and six for busy mothers. It means that during this hard hour of the day she is spared from many questions and children milling around while hungry and tired. But is it not important to check on what comes into their growing experience?

Most families have more than one radio and different members tune in on their favorite programs. They do not share with each other and therefore are not bothered about what other members of the family are interested in.

It is a good idea "to know what is on the air". Here are some suggestions. There is the "Guide to Radio Programs of Special Value" selected by the Federal Radio Education Committee and published monthly in the "Scholastic Magazine", which will be found in most high school libraries. A more complete guide is published by the Joint Radio Committee, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, called "The Best in Radio Listening". All four of the major networks issue monthly or quarterly bulletins describing their regular program features. They will be glad to put your name on their mailing list if you request it. Another source is the "Service Bulletin" of the Federal Radio Education Committee, U. S. Office of Education, Washington 25, D. C.

But let us listen together. Let us select our programs and then discuss them afterwards. We are a hearing public but we do not really digest all we hear. Unless we hear and think and discuss, it results in a lot of confusing ideas floating around our minds.

Church On The Air can be a wonderful experience for a sick child. They can listen to the hymns and prayers and join in with the fellowship.

Here is another way to weld the family together. Let us take time to find out good programs and plan our times together. You will learn what your boys and girls are thinking, their sense of values and what they are being taught in school. Do you know?

CXXV

THE RUBRICS—In the revision of 1928 the rubrics here were enlarged from four to six. However only one was added, since the first one was separated into two parts. The instruction that was put in in 1928 provides that ". . . the Priest may ask the secret intercessions of the Congregation for any who have desired the prayers of the Church." This does not necessarily mean entirely prayers for those who are sick physically, but can include persons who are upset mentally or emotionally. A prayer for the sick said by the minister after the Gloria in Excelsis is a very good way to bring people to their knees for the benediction, although there is no rubrical provision for it at that place. In either case a prayer for the sick and suffering is very appropriate and gives the congregation an opportunity to send a message of prayer to any of their loved ones who may be in need of it, and such prayers are undoubtedly more effective than we realize.

The Prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church—The title of this prayer was changed in the revision of 1928 by the omission of the word "militant". This is due partly to an additional petition included in the last clause of the prayer, which we shall comment upon later.

The church is frequently referred to as "militant", meaning those who are still fighting in the flesh and in this world, and "triumphant" referring to those who "having finished their course in faith" are now removed to their spiritual bodies in the other life.

This marks the general movement of modern times, and in religious thought toward the recognition that the experience of life that we call death is merely a transition from one life to another.

This new and better attitude is more evident in the burial service where it will be discussed at greater length.

THE RICHMOND PREACHING MISSION

A Very Real Revival

Richmond, Va.—This city and vicinity experienced a very real revival February 1-8, in spite of some of the most inclement weather ever recorded here. Protestant forces united under sponsorship of the Richmond Ministerial Union, and over 51,000 attendants were noted during the eight-day meeting.

Under the direction of Dr. William E. Hudson, creator and manager of the well known Massanetta Bible Conferences in the Valley of Virginia, the mission brought to the city 18 nationally noted speakers. There were both men and women, and a number were not ordained clergymen.

They made a combined effect upon the community which will be felt for a long time to come, if results to date are an indication.

Effective rededication was made by a large number of clergymen and lay people, when Dr. Roy L. Smith, editor of the Christian Advocate, invited persons desiring to so indicate by standing. Dr. Smith also spoke intimately to the clergy in a special morning session, as did the Rev. Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

A large number of cards were signed, indicating a desire to make profession of faith, rededication of one's life, or transfer to a local church connection.

There was every indication that another such combined spiritual offensive would be made here, patterned on this first unique attempt.

The meetings were held each afternoon, except Saturday, and each evening, for the eight days in the Mosque, Richmond's largest auditorium. There was an overflow congregation in Grace and Holy Trinity Episcopal Church next door on the closing night, and many had to be turned away altogether.

Noonday services were also held daily except Saturday and Sunday at four major centers in the city, and Monday through Saturday at Centenary Methodist Church for the downtown area.

The entire list of speakers from outside, in addition to those named above, included: Congressman Walter H. Judd, of Minnesota; Dr. Peter Marshall, chaplain of the United States Senate; Bishop Clinton S. Quin, of the Episcopal Diocese of Texas; Dr. Raymond L. Linquist, of First Presbyterian Church, Orange, N. J.; Dr. Bernard C. Clausen, of Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio; Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of the Methodist Church; Judge Camille Kelley, of the Juvenile Court, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. Harper Sibley, of Rochester, N. Y., head of the United Council of Church Women; Dr. Hazen G. Werner, of Drew Theological Seminary; Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, of Marble Collegiate Church, New York City; Miss Muriel Lester, of Kingsley Hall, London, England; Dr. Clovis G. Chappell, of First Methodist Church, Charlotte, N. C.; Dr. Frederick H. Olert, of First Presbyterian Church, Detroit; Dr. Allen E. Claxton, of Broadway Temple, New York City; Dr. Sankey L. Blanton, dean of School of Religion, Wake Forest College, and Dr. Frank Crossley Morgan, of Concord, N. C.

THE EPISCOPAL WAYSIDE MISSION, A STUDENT ACTIVITY

Berkeley, Cal.—The students of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific and St. Margaret's House, Berkeley, have organized a program of open-air preaching which is called "The Episcopal Wayside Mission." This program of evangelism was organized by Mr. Tod Ewald, a senior student of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, and has received valuable guidance from the Rev. J. Henry Thomas, rector of St. Clement's Episcopal Church, Berkeley.

Plans were laid for the project early in the fall. After a period of study and prayer, open-air street meetings were undertaken in downtown Berkeley.

Following a brief service in the nearby Church of the Good Shepherd, the group assembles around a portable organ where a service of singing, preaching, and prayer is held. Short sermons are delivered by local clergy and students of the seminary. The order of service and location are varied in order to determine better the effectiveness of the work.

The prayers of the church are requested that God may use this work and that His Kingdom be set forward.

NATION-WIDE ENROLLMENT ACHIEVED FOR NATIONAL ROLL OF HONOR

Washington, D. C.—With more than 10,000 names of servicemen and women who offered themselves in our country's wars, recent and past, already entered on Washington Cathedral's National Roll of Honor, progress toward full participation by every diocese seems assured. Every state in the Union now is represented, with enrollments also from Alaska, Hawaii and the Canal Zone.

First in the entire church to approximate complete enrollment was Christ Church, Glendale, Diocese of Southern Ohio. Except for a few no longer resident in that section, every serviceman and woman who went forth from the parish was entered on the roster. Tireless enthusiasm on the part of the Rev. James E. Clarke, rector, and the honor roll chairman for the parish, Miss Mary E. Johnston, who is also diocesan chairman of the National Cathedral Association, accomplished this praiseworthy result.

Practically 100 per cent results were attained at St. Paul's Church, Corunna, Diocese of Michigan, with the Rev. George W. Moore, vicar, submitting enrollments from 23 out of the original 24 who entered the armed forces from this parish, and the expectancy of obtaining the twenty-fourth veteran's name upon his later return to his home town. Thanks to the vicar's promotion, veterans in the near by parishes of St. John's, Chesaning, and St. John's, Durand, also enrolled, while from Christ Church, Owosso, the Rev. William D. Davis, rector, came additional honor rolls.

Other 100 per cent scores were made by St. Paul's Parish, Brookline, Mass., the Rev. Frederic C. Lawrence, D. D., rector; All Saints Church, Methuen, also in the Massachusetts Diocese, the Rev. W. Ashley Hawley, STD., rector; and St. James Church, Lancaster, Diocese of Harrisburg, the Rev. Robert C. Batchelder, rector.

Excellent ratings were made by the Church of the Redeemer, Hyde Park, Cincinnati, Diocese of Southern Ohio, the Rev. Maxwell D. Long, D. D., rector; Grace Church, Providence, Diocese of Rhole Island, the Rev. C. H. Horner, D. D., rector; St. Mark's, Carteret, Diocese of New Jersey, the Rev. Kenneth MacDonald, Ph. D., rector; Christ Church, Milford, Diocese of Deleware, the Rev. Joseph S. Hinks, rector; and St. Stephen's, Beckley, Diocese of West Virginia. Here the Rev. Andrew B. Jones, rector, and William E. Watts, leader of the Adult Bible Class, enlisted aid of local newspapers and canvassed the entire community. From the Missionary District of Utah came 60 enrollments, all assembled in St. Paul's Church, Salt Lake City, the Rev. Mortimer Chester, rector, with promise of more.

In some sections parishes cooperated with other local groups, as at Sauk Centre, Diocese of Minnesota. With consent of Bishop Keeler, the Rev. John F. McPartland, rector of the Church of the Good Samaritan and the Church of St. Stephen's, Paynesville, accepted joint sponsorship with the American Legion Post obtaining valuable publicity from the local press, and many enrollees.

Personal leadership has been a prime factor in extending understanding of the scope and purpose of this, the only permanent National Roll of Honor known. In the mission church of St. Andrew's, Cedaredge, Diocese of Colorado, Mrs. E. E. Grubb, parish secretary, is working zealously toward this end. In Erie Diocese, Pennsylvania, the Rev. William A. Chamberlain, Jr., is spreading interest in the honor roll among the eligibles of his three Valley parishes; St. Saviour's, Gearhartville; Holy Trinity, Houtzdale; and St. Laurence's, Oscola Mills. In Columbus, Diocese of Southern Ohio, the personal efforts of Mrs. Charles T. Lewis rounded up 50 enrollments from St. Paul's Parish, with expectation of doubling that total.

Thus the response of clergy and laity throughout the United States is daily increasing, bringing in each week honored names not only of the two generations who saw service in World Wars I and II, but also of those veterans of earlier conflicts whose patriotic devotion bought for us the freedom and independence which are the foundations of our American way of life.

Washington Cathedral authorities hope that all parishes will make a special effort to enroll the names of those who died, and to submit these enrollments before Memorial Day.

POLICIES OF LAYMAN'S COMMITTEE

New York. N. Y.—In his report to the National Council, the Rev. Arnold M. Lewis, director of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, made a clear and concise statement of the policies of the Laymen's Committee. Statement in full follows:

Our work is constantly tied in with any program of the general Church in which laymen may have a part. An example of this is the February 2 broadcast of the Presiding Bishop. Our laymen have offered their services to the clergy in the mechanical installations necessary for the reception of the broadcast. In addition, they are making a concerted effort for as large an attendance as possible on that day. This is but a sample of the manner in which the manpower of the Church can be approached. The men are constantly asking for things to do and this offers the Church a workable body that has the interest and the initiative to get things done.

The Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work has no desire to centralize its activities to the point where it will become dictatorial. Our whole policy has been and, I hope, will continue to be that of permitting each diocese to undertake whatever program or organization it deems advisable. Our desire is to assist where possible and to suggest plans and programs. Every major church body has a laymen's program. After studying their approach to the problem of creating the interest of men, I am convinced, more than ever, that our plan is basically sound and in line with the organization of the Episcopal Church.

ROSEBUD'S 21 MISSIONS LISTEN IN

Rosebud, N. D.—Here in the Rosebud Reservation, there was full cooperation with the National Council in its plans for the broadcast of Presiding Bishop Sherrill's address on behalf of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

The Rev. Edward O. Moore, one of the three clergy in charge of the Rosebud Mission with its 21 stations, said a few days before the broadcast:

"We are planning to listen to Bishop Sherrill on February 29. Every chapel that I have been to recently has reported that there is a radio somewhere in the community, and that they will have it in church. When Bishop Sherrill gets through, if it is necessary, an interpreter will get up and tell what he said. I don't expect to get much of an offering from my chapel here in Rosebud because our Christmas Offering went to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. We didn't do badly either, $51.64. Missions also gave to the Presiding Bishop's Fund, but the other chapels gave their Christmas offering to the Navajoes through the American Friends Service Committee."

VIRGINIA SEMINARY TO BE PRESENTED ON COAST-TO-COAST BROADCAST

Alexandria, Va.—As the second in a series of events looking forward to the 125th anniversary next June of the founding of the Virginia Theological Seminary, the Columbia Broadcasting System, on Sunday, March 14, from 10:30 to 11:00 A. M., EST, presents the Seminary on their regular weekly coast-to-coast feature, the Church of the Air.

The preacher for the occasion will be the Rev. Dr. Stanley Brown-Serman, professor of New Testament Language and Literature at the Virginia Seminary, who will speak on the passion theme, "The Cross, the Measure of the Word." The Seminary Chorus, which recently completed a series of programs over a local Alexandria station, will provide the musical background. The chorus, under the direction of the Rev. Kenneth Heim of the Church Music Department, will sing "Lord Christ, when first Thou cam'st to men," the words of which were written by alumnus Walter Russel Bowie; "My God, how wonderful Thou art," by F. W. Faber; and "When I Survey the Wonderous Cross," from the pen of Isaac Watts. Charles Price, a student will be at the organ.

This program will originate in the studios of station WTOP, CBS, Washington outlet, and will be heard over most of the stations of the Columbia network at the time of origin. A few of the stations will air the broadcast the following Sunday, March 21, at 10:00-11:30 A. M., EST by transcription. Check your local CBS station for the time of local release.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S ADDRESS REACHES WIDE AREA

New York, N. Y.—The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief was presented over a wide geographic area, on Sunday, February 29, according to reports reaching the National Council. At the request of the Rt. Rev. J. I. Blair Larned, in charge of American churches in Europe, all churches "gave some attention that Sunday morning to the need for funds for relief and rehabilitation." In the Pro-Cathedral in Paris, the Rev. A. Stanley Trickett, administrative secretary of the Department of Reconstruction and Inter-Church Aid of the World Council of Churches, presented the needs and told of the Presiding Bishop's Fund.

In Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands, the Presiding Bishop's address was heard by radio in many of the churches. The low-wave Station W-R-U-L, Boston, beamed the address to Europe, Asia and Latin America. This was done by transcription on Sunday afternoon.

W-R-U-L is operated by the World Wide Radio Foundation, a non-profit corporation, and the broadcast was made as a public service.

This low-wave presentation assured that Bishop Sherrill's address was heard throughout by far the greater part of the world.

MR. FISHBURNE HONORED

Roanoke, Va.—The Rev. Charles C. Fishburne, Jr., rector of Christ Church, Martinsville, was chosen as "Martinsville's first citizen of the year" at the annual banquet of the Optimist Club on the evening of February 12th. Especially noted were Mr. Fishburne's value in young people's activities and charitable organizations and his work among various lay groups in the city. The award was made on behalf of the Optimists by the Rev. W. M. Normant, Jr., pastor of the Broad Street Christian Church.

Mr. Fishburne is a native of South Carolina, a graduate of the University of South Carolina (M. A.) and Virginia Seminary (B. D.), was ordained Deacon in 1930 and Priest in 1931. He served at Winnsboro, Chester and Great Falls, South Carolina, before coming to Martinsville in June, 1935. During the war he served as a Chaplain in the Navy, being stationed in North Africa. He was married in 1935 to Miss Eirene Mayers and they have two children.

REVIVAL PREACHING IN ST. PAUL'S

Jesup, Ga.—The Rev. Archer Torrey, Episcopal minister connected with the People's Institute of Applied Religion, began revival preaching services in St. Paul's Church, Jesup, February 22. The service was well attended by Episcopalians and visitors.

Opening the first of a series of six sermons on the subject, "The Holy Bible, the Basis For Abundant Living," Mr. Torrey emphasized the Biblical experience that the Creator gives man: food, peace and self-respect, but that man turns these into famine, war and self-despair. Man's obedience to the laws of God will bring man abundant life which, the preacher said, was the purpose of the coming of the Founder of Christianity.

The next five nights the Rev. Mr. Torrey will preach on the following topics: "The Abomination of Desolation, Abundant Life for the People and the Country"; "An Adulterous Generation, Abundant Life for the Family"; "All That Thou Hast To Do, Abundant Life for My Fellow Citizen"; "A Den of Thieves, Abundant Life and Money"; "Ye are Witnesses, Abundant Life in One World."

PREPARING DRAFT FOR NEW OHIO STATE CONSTITUTION

Gambier, O.—Ohio professors of the social sciences are doing some spadework on a very practical problem this week-end in Gambier, where a committee is preparing a draft of a new state constitution for Ohio.

They are the Committee on Constitutional Revision of the Social Science Section of the Ohio College Association who were chosen by the Association, to suggest revisions in the fundamental law of the state. According to the present constitution, the voters of Ohio will decide in 1952 whether a constitutional convention should be called to amend the present constitution or whether the document should be completely revised. If such a convention is held, the political scientists, economists, and sociologists of Ohio's colleges and universities will have their suggestions ready to submit.

The meeting which is being held at Kenyon College in Gambier is under the chairmanship of Professor Harvey Walker of Ohio State University. Its members are: Professors Lloyd Helms, Bowling Green; David King, University of Akron; Warren Cunningham, Miami University; Percy Fenn, Oberlin, and Paul Palmer, Kenyon.

Professor Stuart McGowen, of Kenyon College, is president of the Social Sceince Section of the Ohio College Association.

TEACHERS STAYING ON IN INDIA

New York, N. Y.—Acknowledging a contribution of $2,500 from the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, Bishop Anthony B. Elliott, of Dornakal, India, said that a part of it was spent "for grain for our hard pressed teachers which saw them over the worst months of the year. They could have hardly got through otherwise, and they are most grateful for this help. The money is being used in the Singareni Mission which is steadily growing and has now 11,000 Christians, and for the adjacent part of Khammamett Church Council area with which the Singareni Mission is already linked.

"Owing to political upheaval our teachers have the additional trial of threats and even violence from both sides; but they are nearly all carrying on bravely and staying with their people. All this makes your help more timely."

DIOCESE MAKES GOOD ROCORD

Roanoke, Va.—The churches in Southwestern Virginia made an enviable record with regard to their obligations to the diocese for the year 1947. Of 61 Diocesan Expense Assessments, to a total of $15,749, only one of $35 was not paid and that was nearly offset by a payment of $25 by one small church which had no assessment.

In the Field Department (Program expectations resulting from the Every Member Canvass) the total of pledges were $39,076 and the total of payments was $40,827.43. Only three small churches failed to pay their pledges in full, the total of these shortages being $68.32 and, as is seen, this was far more than offset by a number of overpayments on the part of other churches.

FIRE DESTROYS CHURCH AND PARISH HOUSE

Danville, Pa.—Christ Church and parish house, Danville, were completely destroyed by fire which raged for several hours, February 13. The 66 year old beautiful Gothic structure, a landmark in the community, collapsed as more than 200 firemen from Danville and seven neighboring towns fought the flames in sub-freezing temperatures, hampered by a sleet storm and broken water main.

The steeple crashed into the courtyard, almost hitting the rectory which was partially damaged. It was reported that the rector, the Rev. Squire B. Schofield, lost nearly all his furniture and possessions. Total damage to the property and furnishings was estimated at $775,000.

The church was built in 1882 at a cost of $240,000 as a memorial to Peter Baldy, senior warden, and his wife, and was one of the most beautiful and largest Episcopal churches in Pennsylvania.

C. D. S. P. NOTES

Berkeley, Cal.—During February, members of the faculty filled various speaking engagements. Dr. Randolph C. Miller was in the east attending meetings of the curriculum commission and child division, and spoke at Christ Church, Philadelphia, and in Detroit and Chicago. Dr. Pierson Parker was the noon-day Lenten preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral in Los Angeles. Professor Charles F. Whiston conducted a School of Prayer at All Saints' Church, Beverley Hills.

The Pastoral Conference brought many famous speakers to the adjoining campus of the Pacific School of Religion, including Dr. Nels F. S. Ferre, of Andover-Newton Seminary; President emeritus Henry Sloane Coffin, of Union Seminary; Dr. Seward Hiltner, of the Federal Council of Churches, and Dr. Elmer Stone Freeman (C. D. S. P., '22) of the Committee on Evangelism and Devotional Life of the Congregational-Christian Churches.

The second quarter will end on March 25, and the third term will begin March 29, with several new students in residence. The enrollment this year is an all-time high in the 55 years of the school's existence.

BISHOP MELCHER CONFIRMS CLASS BEFORE SAILING

Columbia, S. C.—A unique Confirmation Service took place in Trinity Church at 5 o'clock the afternoon of Sunday, February 22, when a class of thirteen adults and four young people, prepared by himself as rector of Trinity Church before his Consecration on February 5, was confirmed by the Rt. Rev. Louis C. Melcher, bishop coadjutor of the Missionary District of Southern Brazil. A former rector of Trinity Church, the Rt. Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., bishop of Southwestern Virginia, read the service, while the bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. John J. Gravatt, D. D., presented the class to Bishop Melcher. It was Bishop Melcher's first Confirmation Service, and his last service in Trinity Church before sailing from New York for Rio de Janeiro on February 27 to take up his duties in Southern Brazil.

Earlier that day at the 11:30 morning service, an over-flow congregation heard Bishop Melcher preach his final sermon in the church of which he had been rector for eight and a half years.

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH LEADER VISITS U. S.

New York City—Miss Jean M. Fraser, secretary of the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches, arrived in the United States aboard the Queen Mary.

Miss Fraser, an internationally known youth leader, will spend six weeks in the United States studying American youth work and making preparations for the youth activities of the first assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held at Amsterdam, Holland, in August of this year.

Miss Fraser has had wide experience in international youth work and took a leading role in the great world conferences of Christian youth held at Amsterdam in 1939 and Oslo in 1947.

DALLAS CLERICUS MEETS

McKenney, Texas.—The Clericus of the Diocese of Dallas met in St. Barnabas Church, Denton, February 16. Two leaflets from the Diocese of Milwaukee, which in turn had been prepared from material from the Diocese of Delaware were submitted on the subjects of Funerals and Marriages. These leaflets set forth the Canonical regulations and also made some recommendations with reference to customs and direction. Among other items it was proposed to bar all Sunday weddings and funerals and also to urge the non use of Holy Days for such services. The use of a Nuptial Eucharist and a Memorial was also urged. A rewrite adapted to the diocese is to be undertaken by a committee appointed. The Bishop, who was not able to be present sent an inspirational message regarding the centennial of the Diocese to be observed in 1952 and the five year plan of ten new missions each year and at least 1,000 confirmations each year until that time. About 32 clergy attended.

REVIEW OF AN IMPORTANT BOOK

turning their evil to good account). In the face of a strong tendency in historical writing to minimize the importance of key individuals and to concentrate on great popular movements or the actions of corporate bodies, it is refreshing to find a book in which all these factors are taken into account.

A fourth impression is the militant glee with which Dr. Brydon attacks misinterpretations of the Church based on inadequate information, misreading of the facts, ecclesiastical animus or the vagaries of imaginations unrestrained by facts. One can almost see the light of battle in his eye as he penned some of the pasages. He has rendered genuine service alike to historical accuracy and the Church's reputation by refuting some of the imputations of previous authors that the Virginia clergy in the 17th century as a whole were disreputable, lazy, avaricious, not only by quoting previous authors like Dr. Bruce but by showing specifically what the parsons did, against how few of them proceedings were pressed or serious complaints sustained by the authorities, how many of them served long terms to the evident satisfaction and edification of their parishioners.

This book deals with the years 1607 to 1727, the period throughout which "the Church of England was the only organized and continuing form of religion which ministered throughout the whole colony all the time" (p. vii). This period was also the formative one in which were begun some of the unique characteristics developed by Virginia developed by Virginia Anglicanism, particularly the vestry system. The parish as a geographical unit was brought over from England; but the vestry, a continuing group of elected laymen (though often a self-perpetuating group) who governed the temporal affairs of the Church within the parish and called the rector, was something new, something evoked by the peculiar conditions of life in colonial Virginia where no Bishop exercised discipline over the clergy and no patron built the Church edifice and controlled the advowson, something of inestimable importance in preserving and developing local self-government in every sphere of activity. This period was also the one in which, to make good in some degree the manifold defects caused the Anglican Church by the complete absence of a Bishop, the office of Commissary was instituted, in which the earliest missionary ventures were undertaken and the Church's most significant educational contribution (the College of William and Mary) was made. It was indeed the formative period. Dr. Brydon's account of it makes us await eagerly his volumes on the succeeding periods, the one which covers the period of the Great Awakening and the end of the colonial era, and the one dealing with the Church from the consecration of Bishop Moore to the present.

It is impossible to summarize this book. It is so crammed with facts that it is hard plodding in places, that one can profitably read it several times, and that it is of great value for reference. One might criticize this or that detail, but in view of its value as a whole that would be ungrateful. I, for one, feel deeply indebted to Dr. Brydon and hope that his book will be read widely by those who would understand the early period of Virginia and the first era of its Mother Church. Without question it is the standard book on its subject.

ORDINATION

Deacon

The Rev. Henry Haskell Rightor, Jr., was ordained deacon at the Chapel, Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va., on Jan. 28, 1948, by the Rt. Rev. Donald B. Aldrich, D. D., retired bishop of Michigan, and dean of Religious Education at Princeton University, for the Rt. Rev. John Moore Walker, D. D., bishop of Atlanta. The Very Rev. A. C. Zabriskie, S. T. D., dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, presented the candidate, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Washington, D. C. Mr. Rightor will be assistant rector of All Saints' Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Rightor was born September 1, 1910, at Helena, Arkansas. He received his B. A. Degree from Princeton University and his LL. B. from Harvard Law School in 1935.

From 1935 to 1942 he practiced general civil and criminal law in Helena. In 1942 he enlisted in the Army Air Forces and was honorably discharged with the rank of Captain and holds this rank in the Air Corps Reserve. He is a member of the Arkansas and American Bar Associations, and the American Legion.

He was graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary, with the B. D. degree, was ordered deacon on January 28, 1948, and assumed his new duties as assistant rector of All Saints' Church, Atlanta, Ga., on February 1.

A Masterpiece of Beauty and Color

The beautiful rose window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a work of infinite beauty and splendor, is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known.

Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

REV. EDWARD WILSON AVERILL

Funeral services for the Rev. Edward Wilson Averill, D. D., who died Monday, February 2, were held in Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, Arizona. Death followed an emergency appendectomy the previous Saturday morning.

The retired Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Fond du Lac, he had been an Honorary Canon of Trinity Cathedral for several years and, more recently Canon-in-Charge of St. Paul's Mission, Phoenix, because of the dearth of active clergymen.

Canon Averill was one of the leaders in the Anglo-Catholic movement within the Protestant Episcopal Church prior to taking up his residence in Arizona. Here he was greatly beloved for his spiritual dignity and his quiet, but keen, sense of humor.

Born in Elkhart, Ind., March 13, 1870, the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Martin V. B. Averill, Canon Averill was a graduate of Western Theological Seminary. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1894 by the Rt. Rev. W. E. McLaren, bishop of Chicago. His entire ministry, prior to his retirement was spent in the same dioceses in which his father had ministered. He had been rector of Trinity Church, Peru, Ind., and of Trinity Church, Fort Wayne, Ind. From 1923 until his retirement he was Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Fond du Lac.

Canon Averill was the author of several books and pamphlets on the Prayer Book, Church History, and other subjects in the field of religion.

Officiants at the funeral Memorial Communion service were the Rt. Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, 2nd, D. D., bishop of Arizona, the Very Rev. J. W. F. Carman, dean of Trinity Cathedral, his assistant, the Rev. Morton T. Kelsey, and the Rev. Canon Charles A. Dowdell, who was the Celebrant.

A POWERFUL FORCE FOR EVANGELISM

Dear Sir: May I appeal through your columns to the clergy and laity of the Church who live in communities where there is a public library, to further the Presiding Bishop's program of Evangelism in one specific way: namely, to find out if their public library possesses a copy of the Authorized Version of the Holy Bible with Apocrypha, and a copy of the Book of Common Prayer (chancel edition with large type). If the library does not possess these basic volumes, they could be purchased inexpensively and given to the library which would welcome them. These two books taken singly or together are a powerful force for Evangelism in these days.

(THE VERY REV.) E. R. WELLES,
President, Anglican Society
(American Branch).

SAN JUAN INDIAN MISSION
Farmington, New Mexico

Sir: A few days ago a Navajo man and wife with their desperately sick child drove over 125 miles to reach the San Juan Mission Hospital. It was too late. Despite modern medical science and expert nursing care, the child died last night. These grief stricken parents are English speaking and are fully cognizant of the fact that everything possible was done to save the life of their child. They are deeply appreciative and have expresed their gratitude. Amid Christian surroundings, with the ministrations of a clergyman and the administration of the sacrament of Holy Baptism, these people were helped in their sorrow and bereavement. You probably wonder why I begin this brief message on a seeming note of failure. It is to point out the all important fact that the whole work of this Mission is inseparably bound up with the most fundamental problems of Navajo life. Above all it exists not only to save human life, to restore Navajos to health, and to help them in the most trying period of their history, but to TEACH them spiritually, intellectually, and physically to find that enduring Way of Life which is found only in the Christian faith. There is scarcely a facet of Navajo life which is not touched in one form or another by the San Juan Mission.

The year 1947 was the most successful and fruitful in the entire history of the Mission. A total of 581 patients were admitted to the hospital—by far the largest number ever cared for in our small hospital. There were 6,605 hospital days, which means an average of full capacity throughout the year. Of course, many times patients were placed on cots in the hall or in the recreation room, or such an average could not have been maintained; still we had to turn away many patients. Among the 581 patients admitted was Leo Jones, whose home is far out on the desert. Two major abdominal operations, blood plasma, massive doses of penicillin, other expensive medicines, good nursing care and several months in the hospital were necessary to restore this child to health. But Leo, now perfectly well, is in the government school at Carson's Trading Post, where we have our field station—St. Luke's in the Desert—and is one of the brightest children out there. He is one of 125 Navojo children who receive their religious instruction under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in this area. These children are enrolled in schools at Carson's Trading Post, Fruitland, and Shiprock. In addition to these children there are 15 others at the Albuquerque Indian School. They attend St. John's Cathedral. Our children are also in schools at Ignacio, Colorado, Phoenix, Arizona, and Riverside, California.

There were 80 obstetrical cases, 1,116 special medical and surgical treatments and 33 major operations. Lorene Begis, a premature baby, weighed 2 pounds, 14 ounces at birth. She was placed in an incubator for over two months and is now a healthy, normal baby. Other cases equally interesting could be cited.

A total of 513 religious services of various types were held, with an attendance of over 10,000. There were 146 baptisms, 27 confirmations and 48 burials. These figures do not mean so much unless one has an understanding of the conditions under which this work is done. For instance, a burial here means a great deal of time and work. It involves long drawn out consultations with the relatives, procuring grave diggers from the nearby town of Farmington, having a box made and bringing it to the Mission, assisting in the preparation of the body, carrying it in our truck to the cemetery and finally officiating at the service. Navajos come here from long distances to have their loved ones interred in our cemetery, and this is one of the most important phases of our work. They are exceedingly superstitious about anything pertaining to death, but we are gradually teaching these primitive people the Christian approach to the mysteries of life and death.

Teaching mothers the proper care and feeding of their children, immunization of children in certain contagious diseases, numerous tests which were taken here and sent to the State Health Department for analysis, and other services such as the distribution of clothes to the needy, were rendered the Indians.

A CORRECTION

By an unhappy typographical error in the last issue, in the review of Dr. G. M. Brydon's book, "Virginia's Mother Church and the Political Conditions Under Which It Grew," the price was stated to be $1.50. The price should have been quoted as $7.50. We regret the error should have occurred.—Editor.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

Shall We Give The Ants A Chance?

By HENRY SMITH LEIPER
Associate General Secretary World Council of Churches

A friend of mine once asked the well known playwright, Eugene O'Neill, for a brief summary of his philosophy of life. This, as reported in LIFE magazine about a year ago, was his reply: "If the human race is so damned stupid, that in 2,000 years it hasn't had brains enough to appreciate that the secret of happiness is contained in one simple sentence (which you'd think any school kid could understand and apply) then it's time we dumped it down the nearest drain and let the ants have a chance. That simple sentence is: 'For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' "

In this time of debate throughout America as to whether we shall have a "Marshall Plan" or a "martial plan" in Europe, one is tempted to rephrase the Master's question thus: "What shall it profit the American Nation if it gain material, scientific and economic supremacy and lose its own soul?"

If the wrong answer is given to that question, it will not be wholly because of the "wolfishness of the wolves, but rather because of the sheepishness of the sheep"—as the young pastor, Rev. William M. Thompson, Jr., of a church in Edgartown, Mass., put it in a recent thoughtful sermon.

The soul of a nation is a composite thing, obviously, and in its general complexion it reflects the characteristics which predominate in the men and women who compose it.

Looked at from a broader perspective, the problem exists on the world scale; and it has been well stated by the French aviator poet, Exupery, whose kit contained a letter to an American friend found after his death in an air battle during the late war. Here are his dramatic words: "Look, my American friends, something new is in formation in our planet. The material progress of modern times has indeed linked mankind by a sort of nervous system. The contacts are innumerable, the communications are instantaneous. We are materially bound together like cells in the same body. But this body does not have a soul. This organism has not grown conscious of itself."

The work of the Christian Church is related to the need not only for wholesouled individuals ("healthy" is a word which comes from "wholth" or "wholeness") but for health or wholeness of soul in nations and in the world of which all the nations are a part. But not even nations now seem to be conscious of the existence of a "soul" within their highly integrated organism—let alone the world. Churches that are aware of the peculiar task of Christianity in our time are seeking to grow a soul for the modern world organism—national and international.

What, in that context, does the world "soul" mean? Just as we have no way to study the soul of a person except by observing how that person acts and reacts in contact with other persons, so we are compelled to observe how human groups, large or small, act and react if we wish to understand how much or how little soul-force they possess. We must seek, therefore, to assess spiritual attitudes, loyalties, relationships, standards of right and wrong, laws of conduct, habits of mind—if we are to come to any understanding of the state of national or international health today, and with such things, either for the person or for the community, Christianity is rightly—indeed inevitably—concerned, else it is a mockery for Christians to pray: "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

From the point of view of one who has long pondered the problem of a world now a physical neighborhood but not yet a spiritual community, the task of the Church is to grow a soul for the one world which will either learn to realize its oneness in the purpose of God or will inevitably destroy itself with its new-found atomic powers.

Wholeness of soul is found where all the aspects of personality are centered round the conscious personality—the "I"—and religious experience shows that the healthiest "I" is that one whose individuality is purposefully oriented toward the will of God—by commitment freely made and consistently maintained.

The chief instrumentality of the modern Church for the development of a world soul is the ecumenical movement: in it is stressed the intention of God that His children should feel themselves to have a place in the common household of the world. (Incidentally, "ecumenical" which is a word no longer then "economical" and which derives from the same Greek word meaning "house," ought to be a household word among Christians, particularly since it means household!)

This movement, as William Temple pointed out five years ago, is "the great fact of our time." But the "sheepishness of the sheep" in the Church's fold is nowhere more in evidence than when it comes to their failure to see its relevance to the very situations which fill the sheep with vague foreboding. The "wolfishness of the wolves" would be far less of a menace to our modern world if the sheep would listen to the voice of their one shepherd who calls them to a new and dynamic "togetherness" as a kind of living soul for the distracted and divided world.

Lacomte du Nouy reminds us in his tremendously prophetic book, "Human Destiny," that only a very small percentage of the people—he says about one percent—really help to determine the climate and dimension of society. The growth in effectiveness and outreach of the ecumenical movement—the emphasis upon familyhood in the Christian Church throughout the world—would be enormously accelerated if many more persons were to take it seriously and make their own efforts to interpret and propagate its ideas.

The people of the churches should not be regarded as the servants of the movement but as its friends. The movement is their collective servant! But to serve effectively it needs to become a part of their religious thinking, praying and acting. It may sound like a bromide to say it again: but there is profound truth in the observation of the Frenchman who said: "Nothing is real until it is local."

Christians have a unique opportunity now—du Nouy says the greatest in 2,000 years of their history—"to give the world guidance and comfort." They can do it through helping America to develop a soul that is sensitive and consciously oriented towards the larger world neighborhood of which America is so important a part. They can do it by strengthening the demonstration of Christian togetherness which is already going forward in the two great arms of the ecumenical movement—the International Missionary Council and the World Council of Churches—demonstrations both of a growing Christian world soul.

They can come to grips with the ideas underlying this whole process by acquainting themselves with the literature of the ecumenical movement—and in particular with the publications setting forth the facts which will engage the attention of the first World Assembly of the World Council at Amsterdam next summer. They can do it by availing themselves of the presence in America of many students from Christian Churches of other parts of the world. They can do it by persistently identifying themselves with the concept of world citizenship: learning to say not only my town, my country, but my world: not only my church, my denomination, but my world-wide Christian fellowship! Those who persist in saying "the" world, and "the world-wide" Christian fellowship are identifying themselves with that sheepishness of the sheep which is bound to bring world conflict and world catastrophe if it is not corrected in time to thwart the wolfishness of the wolves!

Women In The World Church

By DR. DOUGLAS HORTON

Chairman Of the American Committee For the World Council of Churches

The growth of competing faiths both secular and religious in our world in this critical era has made each faith search frantically for all possible leadership. Hence we find the growth of large and active women's organizations in Europe and America. Yet Protestants are just beginning to understand the importance of the work which Protestant women have been doing for their churches for many years. No one has assessed the strength of Protestant women's work since the Reformation. No one has taken measure of the weakness and dissatisfaction of women in the Church.

Now for the first time, The World Council of Churches has undertaken an international study of women's work in the Church throughout the Christian world.

In presenting the study over two years ago under the authority of the Study Department of the World Council, the introductory statement declared that "in a day of social and political chaos such as these fundamental questions are being raised concerning all the available resources of leadership in rebuilding a better social order," and it was considered an open question whether "women are making their fullest possible contribution to the common life." Hence the results of the inquiry are to give "some indication as to whether or not the abilities of church women are now being strategically deployed in strengthening the Church and the Christian community. The inquiry should give attention to the prevailing psychological temper of church women toward their opportunities for life and work in the chruch."

Under the leadership of Mrs. Samuel McCrea Cavert who has served as the volunteer director of the investigation, an eight page questionaire was sent out to women correspondents in sixty countries throughout the world. These correspondents have served as chairmen of interdenominational committees in each country which carried on investigations. Among these chairmen are Mrs. Geoffrey Fisher, wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Miss C. M. van Asch van Wijk, recently President of the World Y. W. C. A., and Miss Rhoda McCulloch, former editor of the "Women's Press" in America.

The questionnaires asked for summaries of the basic facts in various countries about the professional activities of women in the Church, as clergy, pastor's assistants and church workers, chaplain's assistants and women in religious orders and missions. The questionnaire asked for material on the activity of church women in various voluntary organizations and women in the governing bodies of the Churches. Finally it tackled a series of thorny "general considerations" relating the world of women in the churches to their work as mothers, wives, and members of secular society.

The women had plenty to say. One report, from the women of the Orthodox Church in Greece runs to over a hundred single spaced typewritten pages. The American report of one hundred and twenty-five pages gathers up data from about 20,000 shorter questionnaires distributed nationally. Out of the sixty countries to which questionnaires were sent, fifty-three have so far returned their answers. The response was so pronounced, and the issues raised so complex that the World Council has put a new member on its staff in Geneva to help in analyzing the memoranda and preparing the reports. The special staff member is Miss Olive Wyon from the University of Cambridge, England, where she carried on religious work among the women students of Girton College. A scholar of considerable reputation, she has translated several volumes of the theology of Emil Brunner into English and is the author of several books on religious subjects.

The study—"Women in the Church"—like the World Council itself—is in the process of formation. Regional gatherings of women church leaders are going to be meeting from now until the Amsterdam assembly in August to see what the "next steps" should be in the light of submitted data. American, Oriental, Canadian, and Latin American church women leaders are meeting in this country in March to discuss this subject. European women will be meeting in Geneva in May. There will also be a meeting of women in Amsterdam, Holland, before the World Assembly. A short report of progress will be presented to the Assembly and after the Assembly—probably some time in 1949, a full length book will be published by the World Council.

Final conclusion of the report will have to wait for its publication but even at this preliminary stage, the tenor of the reports show certain trends and developments which will bear consideration by Christians the world over.

The very fact of the response, unprecedented in length, number of countries and women involved, indicates grave concern, and in many instances deep dissatisfaction with the status of women in the Church. Christian women—while not rampant suffragettes, feel that they have a contribution to make to the church and should be given a larger opportunity to make it. Governing boards of church organizations are too often dominated or made up wholly of men. While reports indicate that women carry on much of the work of the churches, there are many indications that the result of their experience and judgment are not brought to bear on questions of policy. We of the older churches may well be concerned to realize that it is the younger churches of Asia which are making great use of the abilities of outstanding women in the development of their church organization.

Immense interest has been expressed by women in various countries concerning the theological biblical and traditional aspects of the status of women. Some eminent theologians, both men and women, including Karl Barth, have given attention to these questions.

Finally, there is evidence of a great immaturity of relationship between the sexes within the context of Christian church organizations. All Christians, men and women, may well ponder this statement made by a churchwoman of long experience— "I have never heard quite so much talk along the line of 'all men are really little boys and must not be frightened by too much participation of women' and 'women's place is in the Christian home' and 'women's gifts are for practical matters and not for philosophical and theological consideration,' as I have among men and women leaders in the Church. I believe that it will take some rather profound analysis of the nature of the 'ignorance' which each has about the other to do anything really helpful in making possible a new maturity and mutuality."

Christians, men and women, should not be surprised to find that constructive action among women in the church, as in practically any other field, begins within ourselves. The World Council's study when it is finally published will only be a guidepost for each of us in making those changes of attitude. It may be one of the most affective guideposts we have ever had for ourselves and for our churches.

Youth And The World Council

By MISS JEAN FRASER

Secretary Youth Department of World Council of Churches,

All over the world young people at the present time are looking back upon the Oslo Conference of last summer. At the youth department offices we hear reports of how the spark that was kindled at Oslo has touched so many others. "Since Oslo," writes one youth leader, "I have talked to more than fifty groups of young people about the world-wide Christian family we saw there." "Since Oslo," writes another, "we have got a group of Orthodox young people together and hope to keep in touch with the Youth Department." Or from Australia, "We want all the news of other countries you can send us."

Oslo in fact gave the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches a flying start, for the 500 church youth delegates went home not only to tell the story of an individual experience at the World Conference of Christian Youth but also to take into all corners of the world the news that there is a Youth Department of the World Council of Churches by which young people throughout the world can keep in touch with one another and know that they belong together to one of the most inspiring movements in the world—the ecumenical movement in the Christian churches.

Oslo was only a start. The youth department must continue to enhance and extend those first bonds of understanding which were established last summer.

Through international conferences of youth continuing under the auspices of the World Council we hope that the youth of all countries will grow more familiar with the ways of worship of other Protestant and Orthodox churches, and be able to see beneath all these variations the common Christian unity.

Oslo showed us what great vitality of leadership can be found among the young churches of Asia and Africa. Dr. Visser 't Hooft risking generalizations about the characteristics of Oslo said that broadly speaking the Europeans were tired, the Americans were puzzled, but it was the Asians and Africans who were confident about the progress of the Christian faith and full of vitality. We must bend every effort to see that these leaders are supported in their day of opportunity among their own people by volunteers from the West who will work alongside them as fellow-servants of one Lord.

The World Council's Youth Department is in touch with Christian youth on both sides of the gap which widens between Eastern and Western Europe. On neither side does the issue present itself as a clear choice between Communism and Christianity. The political system under which many people live may be no longer a matter of choice and neither in East or West would many Christians find themselves at ease under the present political order or disorder but they are not discouraged. Some indeed would say that at last age long abuses have been abolished and new possibilities presented for Christian activity.

For the youth in Western Europe and indeed throughout all Europe, there is a struggle with disillusionment following on the heels of war and occupation. This disillusionment leads many young people dangerously close to total nihilism. Yet actually, there are today fewer alternatives in Europe to the basic Christian Gospel and the people of Europe and particularly the young people are confronted with three fundamental choices: a political faith; a Christian faith discounting politics; or a Christian faith seeking redemption for the whole of life.

The Youth Department of the World Council is doing all in its power to fortify the youth of Europe in a Christian faith that affects every phase of their life, political as well as narrowly religious. Since Oslo many Christian young people have gone back to their countries in Europe with the conviction that they are pioneers and the advance guard of an encompassing Christian community. Because they have had their own world conference they appreciate deeply the importance of that community and its reflection in the first assembly of the World Council of Churches being held in Amsterdam this year. Because they are perhaps the best organized section of Christianity beyond the clergy they can make known the fact and significance of "Amsterdam 1948" among the Christians of all countries on either side of the European cleavage. Because they will have 100 observers at Amsterdam, they can help carry on the work which Amsterdam will begin.

But fundamentally the Youth Department does not exist to create more efficiency in Christian work or international contact among Christians, nor as an agency for relief. The Youth Department is rather the practical consequence of the conviction that the Christian Gospel is good news for the world, in every sphere of interest as well as in every geographical area. It is a measure of the present obedience we can offer to God in spite of our divisions. May it be also a token of the dedication of young people to the world-wide task of the Universal Church—proclaiming to all men that Jesus Christ is Lord and living in obedience to Him.

RHODE ISLAND'S REPORT

Providence, R. I.—Rhode Island received for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief on Leap Year Sunday just about $18,000. And there is more to come within the next few weeks. Almost 100 per cent of the Church here carried out the plan for hearing Bishop Sherrill at 11:30. It was a fine address, and was admired and accepted as "Gospel Truth." The cash receipts for the day amounted to 64 per cent of the Diocesan quota.

Nunc Dimittis

As the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden look unto the hand of her mistress, so did the eyes of Simeon and Anna wait upon the Lord God. Those waiting eyes of Psalm 123, were as Simeon's, as he read in Micah 7:7, and in Isaiah 30:18, "I will wait for the God of my salvation. Blessed are all they that wait for him." And, as they waited, those two elderly saints of Luke 2:25 and 37, their days were largely occupied with prayer, accompanied by fastings. In all this, and in his coming into the temple, in his Song, in everything, the Holy Ghost was upon Simeon.

Great days were those, but this present period of the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, offers still greater things. The Holy Spirit was upon Simeon, environing him, leading him—but some better things have been reserved for us. The Scriptures have declared, and experience has confirmed the Word, that in the mysterious life of the God-head, the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father and from the Son; that the work of the Lord Jesus Christ (since His ascension), and that of the Holy Spirit, are one; that there is no union of the Christian with his Lord, in which the Spirit is not the Agent.

The Holy Spirit is the spirit of Christ, and He takes the things of Christ and shows them to enquiring minds (1 Pet. 1:10, 11; Jn. 16:14). Together, they indwell the Believer, directing, teaching, giving a knowledge of God's will, communicating the joy and peace, bringing to ripeness the fruits of righteousness. (See Rom. 8:11, 14; Jno. 16:13; I Cor. 2:13; Col. 1:9; Rom. 15:13; Phil. 1:11.)

The great third chapter of Ephesians closes with the astounding request that the Christian, enjoying the indwelling of Christ, may be filled with all the fullness of God. Yet that request is not for some of the children of God, but for all (Acts 2:39). Revival would not tarry; if all were living up to such privileges. Some progress is being made. Our nature He is lifting up, filling us with a glorious hope; so are we becoming more fit to sing our final Nunc dimittis.

* * * * *

But we must not be receivers only; a giving out is required of us, and it is well to read John 7:37-39 again. There must be an outlet or we stagnate. The abundant life within must be channelled out to others, and the greatest of all outlets for service is that of PRAYER, and that, whether we be elderly servants of our Church, or eager younger folk. In this, as in all else, it is the great Indweller who works, and the following passages should be lingered over—I Cor. 12:;6, 11; Eph. 3:20; Phil. 2:13; Rom. 8:26, 27.

Waiters! What form shall our prayers take? Returning to the Simeon story, and reading between the lines, it may be noted that through many years, it had been his custom to withdraw into Quietness, where, above the noise and din of human striving, he found a Presence, and a holy hush, and in that Silence he found the leading of his God. Such a method of devotion is the parent of all other expressions of prayer and intercession. "Who among you will hearken and hear?" enquires Isaiah 42:23, and our response should be in words similar to those of Psalm 85:8—"I will hear what God the Lord will speak."

Such periods of Quietness require thoughtful planning; they cannot be rushed into. Our morning rising hour may have to be changed, but this present writer can bear humble testimony to the great value of such Hours, in the silence of which a Voice of stillness is heard (Job 4:16).

Withdrawal from the pressure of the daily round of duty is imperative if deterioration and backsliding are to be avoided. In the Silent Place, direction for the day's activities may be looked for, and spiritual power, power through peace, is assured. In his Quiet, Simeon learned to love, not only his brethren of Israel, but he also found that Salvation is prepared for all people, for heathen Gentiles, and for the unchurched. For ourselves, when deeply in the Presence of God, our thought, our love, our prayer moves out in constantly widening circles, and that we call intercessory prayer. Prominent in such prayers will be our own folk and friends; then our neighbors and people whose lives we touch each day; and our clergy and the organizations of our parish. We are becoming intercessors, and the mind of Christ is finding practical expression through our fellowship with Him (I Cor. 2:16; Jn. 10:16). Few of us can compass all these things in any one period of intercession, and it becomes necessary to have some system, and so we compile our own prayer-calendar. On Saturday we shall probably remember the Church School and its teachers, and our rector and the ministers in the various other churches where we reside. On Sunday it may be our relatives whom we have on our hearts. On Monday—for that day a list will be made, and one for Tuesday and others for the remaining days. A loose-leaf notebook would seem to be needed, for, as we continue to grow in Christ, our private intercessions will become a big thing, reaching out to much of the missionary work of the Church. The light that shines farthest, shines brightest at home.

Suitable literature must come to our table. The Scriptures will have a larger place; the whole Bible in our reading, the whole world in our prayers. Many of the Prayer Book Collects will take on new meaning. Parish and diocesan publications will be carefully read; and the wider work of the Church as reported in The Southern Churchman will be noted. Forth will keep us informed as to other missionary activities at home and overseas. From the office of The Forward Movement in Cincinnati, Ohio, secure such booklets as Proving Prayer and We Can Pray.

* * * * *

Does such a programme frighten us? It need not. If, out of our experience of a life in union with God, we give ourselves to the Prayer of Silence, the wider aspects of prayer will develop naturally.

And then, this further thing. From these growing prayer-habits, there will come an added quality of spirit that will help enrich our common worship with the parish congregation.

It is those people who know their God face to face in prayer who are most ready for Nunc dimittis.

RESOLUTION DISAPPROVING GAMBLING DEVICES

Detroit, Mich.—At a recent meeting of the Executive Council of the Diocese of Michigan, the following resolution was adopted:

That the Executive Council of the Diocese of Michigan disapproves of bingo and other gambling games and devices for the support of religious and charitable purposes, and expresses the hope that the public authorities will impartially enforce the laws against them.

The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, bishop of the diocese, who has been ill for some weeks, was not present at the meeting when the resolution was passed. The vice-president of the Council is the Rt. Rev. Richard E. Emrich, bishop coadjutor elect of the diocese, who issued the foregoing statement.

In accordance with the terms of the resolution, copies were sent by the Rev. Gordon Matthews, secretary of the Council, to Governor Kim Sigler, Prosecuting Attorney James W. McNally, Judge Gerald W. Groat and Commissioner Harry S. Toy of the Police Department. The members of the Executive Council felt that the adoption of such a resolution was necessary in view of the present campaign against games of chance, etc., now going on in Detroit and Michigan.

Editorial . . .

The First World Assembly Of Churches!

Something new and thrilling will happen in Christendom in the summer of 1948! At Amsterdam, Holland, in August, perhaps one hundred and twenty Protestant and Orthodox Communions will come together to put their hearts and minds to organize an official, continuously functioning World Council of Churches. Christian Communions around the world, from the oldest to the youngest, will have a new voice with which to speak unitedly. It will not be a voice to command, or to legislate, but to speak to the world the mighty faith we hold in common.

The central theme of the Assembly will be "Man's Disorder and God's Design." In preparation, Study Commissions and other groups in many countries are giving their best thought to the themes the Assembly will consider: "The Universal Church in God's Design"—the unity, the function, and the character of the Church; "God's Design and Man's Witness"—interpreting the gospel to our own age; "The Church and the Disorder of Society"—a Christian diagnosis of our ills; and, "The Church and International Affairs"—or the Christian contribution to world order and peace.

These are basic themes that go to the root of our modern chaos. What will the Assembly do and say? We cannot know now. We do know that the Assembly will formally inaugurate the "World Council of Churches," planned even before the war and existing even now on a provisional basis. Beyond this, the Assembly will look at our world with honest eyes and open all doors and hearts to the Spirit of the Living Christ.

Our Episcopal Church is a participating Church. Official delegates have already been appointed. But if the World Council is to be the instrument it should be, it will need not only official representation, but the prayers and thought and study of all of us. Parish groups might well write to The American Committee for the World Council of Churches, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York City, for study material.

Clergy Vacations

As Lent winds to its busy climax in Passiontide and Holy Week, parish clergy think of a time of brief respite after Easter Sunday, and even more longingly of the summer holidays, still far over the horizon. But the summer vacation presents a very real financial problem to many of the clergy in these days of high prices. Younger clergy with children find it especially difficult to manage a vacation on a parson's income. One solution is an exchange of Churches, often with the use of the rectory included. While this is perhaps not ideal, it does offer a change of environment that invites rest and relaxation.

But here the problem is to bring together those who wish clerical help in the summer and those who wish to do such supply work. In this, The Southern Churchman offers its services gratis to the clergy. We will print without any charge requests for summer aid, or offers of service for these months. These advertisements must be limited simply to the name and address of the clergyman to whom correspondence should be directed, with perhaps a brief word of the type of place offered or desired. The Southern Churchman assumes no responsibility in doing this, nor can it undertake any correspondence. Clergy may simply send their requests to our office. If there is sufficient response, publication of these lists will begin early in April, and will continue as long as seems necessary.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

THE HOLY SPIRIT IN THE LIFE OF TODAY. By F. W. Dillistone. Philadelphia, Westminster Press, 1947. 126 pp. $1.50.

This little book deals with the third person of the Trinity in modern language and with modern applications in a way that makes the Christian doctrine of the Holy Spirit mean something to a thoughtful man. While the author is widely read, and indeed makes too many quotations, the value of the book lies in its ideas rather than in technical scholarship, and it needs no critical preparation for reading. It will make the reader feel that the Holy Spirit has a real connection with his own life, and with modern civilization, stressing the activity of God, rather than His nature.

The opening chapter analyzes the various modern uses of the term spirit, and of how the Holy Spirit can be connected with such usage. The next summarizes the biblical use of the phrase, showing that it could only have come from the Bible. The concluding chapter is the best in the book, and could be read with profit by any clergyman. It bristles with such remarks as that the Holy Spirit may be a very uncomfortable companion, and that we should be quite sure that we really want Him as such before we invite Him. Between the second and the seventh chapters are discussions of the connection of the Spirit with life, power, order and with art, or "glory." The section on "Glory" is the weakest in the volume, for the author thinks of art in terms of the fine arts only, missing the point of art, which consists in loving a task for its own sake, rather than for some extraneous reward.

The author is a clergyman of the Church of England, educated at Oxford, and at present, Vice-Principal of the London College of Divinity. Like most Englishmen, he writes simply but well. There are exact references for quotations, and an index, but no other scholarly apparatus.

"COMMUNITY HELP ON PASTORAL PROBLEMS." 25c.

A report dealing wtih concrete ways in which ministers in both urban and rural communities may make more effective use of health and welfare resources in their communities to help meet the particular needs of parishioners, has been published by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The 48-page booklet, written by John L. Mixon and Seward Hiltner, and published jointly by the Council's Department of Pastoral Services and the Department of Christian Social Relations, will be useful to health and welfare leaders in the community, as well as to the clergy.

A number of social workers, leaders in welfare programs and ministers of local churches were consulted in the preparation of the pamphlet.

AND THE GREEKS. By Allan Ross Macdougall. The Near East Foundation Reprints Greek Cookbook. $1.50.

After being out of print for some time the handsomely edited book of Hellenic recipes and culinary lore has just been reprinted by Near East Foundation. Titled "And the Greeks," this fascinating "more-than-just-a-cookbook," was written as a labor of love by the well-known Philhellene, traveler and writer on gastronomy, Allan Ross Macdougall. Its format, typography, and low price ($1.50 a copy) all go to make the volume an excellent Easter gift. For those who love good food as well as those having an interest in Greece, ancient or modern, this book is a "must." All the author's royalties and the profits from the sale of the volume will go to help the Foundation carry on its good work among the children of sore-pressed Greece. The book may be obtained directly from the Near East Foundation office, 54 East 64th Street, New York 21, N. Y.

The Real Self Behind Our Acts

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

When we judge a friend or foe, particularly a foe, for actions which we do not approve, we assume that the wrong action was not due merely to ignorance or to temptation. If we are charitable we may try to understand this wrong act in terms of the temptations which preceded it; but we will not wholly condone it.

We may, if we are understanding, forgive a theft by a hungry man; but we do not conclude that every thief is bound to commit the crime of which he is guilty. In daily practice we assume that men are responsible and that they could have acted other than they did.

Yet in most of our modern interpretations of social evil we follow assumptions which are at complete variance from these almost instinctive ascriptions of wrong motives to evil acts. According to an analysis of race prejudice which has just come to my attention, racial bigotry stems from the illusion that there is such a thing as race.

We are told to speak of "ethnic groups", but not of races. That would presumably cure us of race prejudice. It is perfectly true, of course, that there are no pure races and that ethnic distinctions are never purely biological. But to know does not cure us of prejudice.

Even the scientific knowledge that there are no inferior or superior races, biologically speaking, does not prevent men from ascribing basic inferiority to their competitors. There is a mystery of a corrupted will at the basis of an evil act or attitude which can never be explained away by either the social pressure which tempted the evildoer or by the ignorance which seemed to have betrayed him.

In a recent analysis of sexual misconduct, the scientific writer expresses the opinion that if all men knew how widely prevalent their variations from the accepted norm of sexual behavior are, they would be relieved of an uneasy conscience.

Undoubtedly some moral standards are "conventions" which have no absolute validity. Therefore, the degree of uneasiness we feel about violating them depends upon the opinions about us.

But some moral standards are not conventions. They represent the standards of our essential humanity. We feel uneasy if we defy our essential humanity, no matter how many other people have fallen into the same sin. Does anyone believe that we could commit murder with an easy conscience merely because we are told that many more people are murderers than we had assumed?

Something of a real self and not merely the conventions of society is involved in our desire to do right. And something of a real self, and not merely the pressures of society, is involved in inclination to do wrong. We never really forget that fact in judging either ourself or our fellows. But we write a lot of nonsense which tries to obscure the real and the responsible self behind the facade of social convention and social temptation.

CHILDREN'S CHAPEL

St. Louis, Mo.—SS. Michael and George Church has opened a chapel for children. The Rev. C. George Widdifield, rector, explained that he hopes the chapel, erected in the parish house, will be the means whereby instruction of children in Christianity and worship will be simplified and made more realistic for the little ones.

ITS POWER

The power of the Cross of Christ
Over the heart and will
Has often proved itself unpriced.
It has that power still.

God's love, man's sin, are there revealed,
So fair; so black and foul.
Nothing more potent e'er appealed
To move and cleans the soul.

"Father, forgive them!" Never word
More tender, fraught with grace.
Hear it and feel it, looking toward
That soiled and pitying Face.

O men disturbed by lust, hate, greed and tempted to despair,
Turn in your hour of deepest need
Behold what happened there.

When Jesus died upon the Cross
(All Christians hold it true)
He saved mankind, redeemed our loss.
'Tis personal to you.

A mystery men try in vain
To open and unseal;
But while no mind can e'er explain
Each humble heart can FEEL

SAYING OUR PRAYERS

A number of years ago, in the course of my travels, I met an old Scottish lady. During our conversation she quoted from memory the following poem, which she had learned by heart in her girlhood days:

I often say my prayers,
But do I ever pray?
Or do the wishes of my heart
Dictate the words I say?

'Tis useless to implore,
Unless I feel my need;
Unless 'tis from a sense of want
That all my prayers proceed.

I may as well bow down
And worship gods of stone,
As offer to the living God
A prayer of words alone.

For words without the heart,
The Lord will never hear,
Nor will He e'er that child regard
Whose prayer is insincere.

What a picture of a person who is continually seeking God for pardon and peace, but never obtains; and we fear the number is legion.

The reason for this failure is that the prayer comes from the head, and not from the heart. Surely such a prayer is little better than that which the poor ignorant heathen offers, as he bows down to his gods of wood and stone. The God of Heaven does not hear or answer either prayer.

God is interested in our hearts. How can the stony heart be melted so that an effectual, fervent prayer can be offered which will reach the ear of God?

When we become transparently honest with ourselves with God, open our hearts to His all-searching eye and let Him show us our sins as He sees them; when we deal with those sins as God directs—then will our hearts become tender and broken, and cry out in prayer to God for deliverance. God is patiently waiting to hear and answer such prayers.

LOOKING AHEAD

The season of Lent is fast disappearing towards the great Holy Week. It would be a truly wonderful thing if all our homes could think each day a little about this week.

Let us see if we can spend more time together so that as we draw near to Easter we can feel the greatness of it. Too often we spend time sewing and shopping for the Easter outfit. A lovely Easter outfit without a deep sense of peace which comes with this season is an empty thing.

The newness of spring which comes to us each year is wonderful. The stirring of the dormant plant to rebirth. To turn brown stocks into green ones topped with bright flowers is to us each year a miracle. It is the resurrection again and again. With flowers we adorn our altars.

If somehow we could recapture the same feeling we have for spring for ourselves and our children, our Easter would mean much to us. Each year we have the Lenten season of quiet and meditation ending in the glorious bloom of Easter.

What do you teach your boys and girls about Good Friday and Easter? I hope that you do not tell your little wee ones the heartrending story of Good Friday. I heard this done the other day. One little child was very upset because she could not see why they would crucify the Baby Jesus. Let us take care how we present this story. It is one that we must wait to tell as they grow older, so that they can understand the real meaning of it.

One mother confronted with questions told her child many facts. She ended with the fact that Jesus was dead. At Sunday School her little six-year-old stated (when the teacher started to tell a story about Jesus Christ) why waste time talking about that man, He is dead. You see how important it is to know your child and to see what impressions are being left on them.

Let us try to spend more time together as a family during Holy Week. Let us know the events leading up to the Glory of Easter.

Prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church

At the very beginning of this all inclusive prayer we have one of those striking references to the Bible that we find so frequently in the Book of Common Prayer to remind us that its entire background is in the Scripture.

In this case the reference is to St. Paul's letter to Timothy (1 Tim. 2:1).

We hear St. Paul admonishing his "Son in the Gospel" that " . . . first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men"; and the prayer then proceeds to do this very thing, for none are omitted from its supplications.

It begins with a petition to accept our "alms and oblations," and this word makes us pause to consider its meaning. It is almost synonymous with "alms" except it has a more sacred meaning, only being applied to gifts made in the church, and in the most solemn service of the church. By putting the words "alms and oblations" in brackets it gives an opportunity to omit them when no collection is being taken, as is often the case at an early celebration, and, of course, there is never a collection at a private Communion.

The request to "inspire the universal church with the spirit of truth, unity and concord" impresses us with the word "universal" instead of Catholic. One could wish that the same substitution had been made in the translation of the Creed, since it would save considerable explanation.

Another thought that comes to us here is that on almost every occasion where there is a prayer for the whole church it nearly always includes the thought of unity and concord. No doubt this is due to the fact that from the very beginning there have been such differences of opinion in the church and about its doctrines as to cause continual divisions. We find the beginning of this in the book of Acts of the Apostles where it required a church council to decide the very live question as to whether Gentiles could be admitted to the Christian church without first becoming members of the Jewish church.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

STEP BY STEP

He does not lead me year by year,
Nor even day by day,
But step by step my path unfolds;
My Lord directs my way.

Tomorrow's plans I do not know,
I only know this minute;
But He will say, "This is the way,
By faith, now walk ye in it."

And I am glad that it is so,
Today's enough to bear;
And when tomorrow comes, His grace
Shall far exceed its care.

What need to worry then, or fret?
The God who gave His Son
Holds all my moments in His hand
And gives them, one by one.

INTENSE INTEREST SHOWN IN PRESIDING BISHOP'S BROADCAST

Incomplete But Encouraging Reports

Bulletin

Richmond, Va.—The diocesan office of Bishop Goodwin reported returns for the World Relief Fund up to Tuesday morning, March 9, to be a total of $30,-686.29, on a minimum quota of $16,-000 for the Diocese of Virginia.

New York, N. Y.—If straws show which way the wind blows, the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief for 1948 will be in a healthy condition when all the returns are in.

In spite of heavy snows in several areas, reports indicate great congregations in all the churches, with intense interest in Presiding Bishop Sherrill's broadcast, and a real desire to aid the needy overseas, for whom the Presiding Bishop appealed.

Some little time must elapse before every diocese and missionary district can be heard from. The diocese of Maine, for example, telegraphed National Council that it has $4,700, but that on account of a heavy snow storm, it had not been possible to communicate with a number of the parishes and missions, which will undoubtedly swell the total.

Telegrams started coming to Church Missions House early Monday. One of the early ones was from Southern Ohio, which gave the assurance that the diocesan goal, $35,000, had been reached. Rhode Island reported $14,527 "to date," Vermont $3,266, Central New York $17,666. Nearly all the telegrams intimated that money is still coming in and that another report will show a still greater response.

From Pittsburgh comes a report of a total of $18,639. Kentucky has $7,057, Lexington $2,557, South Florida, with a goal of $11,494, wired "We are over the top."

Most amazing of all reports thus far is that from Upper South Carolina. The quota or goal was set at $3,952, and Bishop John J. Gravatt telegraphed that the total on Tuesday, March 3, was $10,-056!

Eau Claire received $1,007 on February 29, Northern Indiana, $3,000, Wyoming $1,267, Arkansas $3,528, which is $400 more than the objective they had fixed. Olympia reported $5,-000, Sacramento "Over the top" with an objective of $2,471; and Spokane reported $6,100 with an objective of $4,-445.

Most reports indicate "Christmas and Easter congregations," also that the Presiding Bishop was heard clearly, that people were deeply impressed with his statement, and that congregations were enthusiastic about the national network arrangement which made possible the broadcast directly to the people.

"Congratulations on thorough and perfect planning," wired one Bishop. Said another, "Entire plan worked out well. Reception good. Appreciated by those we persuaded to expose themselves to the opportunity. Believe value of this will reach beyond immediate objective. Beg to express gratitude to Presiding Bishop and assistants." Still another bishop in reporting that his diocese had revised its expectation upwards, concluded with, "Much enthusiasm here."

From the incomplete returns available at the time this is written, it seems evident that where parishes and missions followed the plan suggested by the National Council, the whole plan was a success, whether reaching or passing the predetermined goal. Some of the variations of the plan seem successful too, and of course there are a number of areas in which the Presiding Bishop's Fund is placed in parish and diocesan budgets.

Robert D. Jordan announced that he hopes to be able to release a complete report by about March 10.

REPRESENTATIVES CHOSEN FOR AMSTERDAM MEETING

New York City.—Selection of 137 representatives by 20 American Protestant denominations for the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held in Amsterdam, Holland, August 22 to September 5 was announced yesterday by Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Associate General Secretary of the Council.

Mr. John Foster Dulles, former U. S. delegate to the United Nations, will serve as consultant to the Assembly. Included among the delegates and alternates who will represent 23 million American Protestants are Prof. Reinhold Niebuhr, of Union Theological Seminary; Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, of The Methodist Church; the Honorable Walter H. Judd, Congressman from Minnesota; Dr. John R. Mott, a president of the Provisional Committee for the World Council of Churches, and Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council of Churches.

In announcing the list of delegates, Dr. Leiper stated that "these representatives include the best leadership and most capable spokesmen American Protestantism has to offer."

"It is significant also that of the 137 delegates 36 of them are laymen. It is apparent that Protestant denominations here made their selection in order to insure an adequate representation of church laity at the Amsterdam meeting."

Churches appointing delegates include the Methodist Church, the Northern Baptist Convention (USA), the Congregational Christian Churches, the Disciples of Christ, the Protestant Episcopal Church, the United Lutheran Church in America, and the Presbyterian Church (USA).

Dr. Leiper noted that American Orthodox bodies will send official delegates through their confessional groups to the Amsterdam Assembly.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FACULTY EPISCOPALIANS FORMED

Greenwich, Conn.—Members of college and university faculties who are Episcopalians,—two of them from each Province,—met at Seabury House and formed an organization to be known as The National Association of Faculty Episcopalians.

They conferred for three days on such topics as: The Christian professor in the classroom; Responsibilities of the Christian professor in his relationship with students outside the classroom; the relationship of the Christian professor with his colleagues; the purpose and work of the Guild of Scholars; the spiritual and moral needs of faculty Churchmen.

Presiding Bishop Sherrill made the opening address on the meaning of the world-wide mission of the Church, and the final session was led by the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell.

The general purpose of the Conference was stated as being the consideration of ways in which faculty Churchmen might play a larger part in the presentation of the Christian religion to students and faculties of our colleges and universities.

Temporary officers of the new Association are: Dr. Virgil Hancher, Iowa University, president; Dr. Virginia Harrington, Barnard College (Columbia), vice-president; Dr. Edward McCrady, University of the South, and Dr. Elliott Van Diller, Mills College, regional representatives; the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, Division of College Work of the National Council, secretary.

A selected group of faculty Churchmen will be invited to become charter members of the Association, including members of the present Guild of Scholars, to which this Association will be a complementary body. General invitations to join the Association will be sent out before May to all Episcopal members of faculties and administrative offices.

The National Commission on College Work and the Division of College Work of the National Council have expressed the opinion that this new Association will be of great importance in the Church's work on the campuses and will prove to be of significance to the members of the Association and to the Church's mission to the world of our time.

The activities of the Association are to be directed towards four basic purposes drawn up by members of the Conference. These are:

1. To promote a sense of companionship among those engaged in scholarly pursuits who have a common realization of loyalty to Christ and a common appreciation of the beliefs and practices of the Episcopal Church.

2. To encourage one another to make plain within the academic framework our faith in the centrality of God in human thinking and action; and our common concern that this centrality be recognized in education.

3. Through publications and conferences mutually to enlarge our knowledge of the Christian religion and of its relevance to the whole field of intellectual and moral affairs.

4. To deepen our own devotional lives; to make them honest, mature and consonant with modern knowledge.

JOINT COMMISSION ON EASTERN ASIA HELD FIRST MEETING

New York City.—A significant development of Christianity in the Orient took place last month at Manila when the International Missionary Council, together with the World Council of Churches, held the first meeting of the Joint Commission on Eastern Asia. Delegates from India, the Philippines, China and Korea were in attendance as well as observers from Siam and Indonesia. The desired delegate from Japan was unable to attend, owing to government restrictions on travel.

The International Missionary Council here interprets the establishment of the Joint Commission as another natural outgrowth of a process started with the establishment of National Christian Councils of Churches in many Oriental countries..

The Council points out that the idea of a Joint Commission for Eastern Asia grew out of a realization by the participating countries that mutual and specialized problems could best be approached on a regional basis.

For example, it was pointed out here that India and the Philippines have recently inherited a common set of problems growing out of their independence, and that China, Korea, and Japan are confronted with mutual regional problems, based not only on their geographic proximity, but in their relation to the western world.

The Missionary Council also refuted early press reports that the Joint Commission was expected to open an office in Manila. It said that consultations to determine the role of the Joint Commission in the existing church structure in the Orient would be held this summer in Holland, when the first World Assembly of Churches met in Amsterdam. A further series of discussions are expected to take place in Hangchow, China, in October, 1949. The final establishment of an office for the Joint Commission will not take place until January, 1950, and is to be conducted on an experimental three year basis.

The Missionary Council said that these conference discussions are expected to center around the role of the Joint Commission in assisting the church in Eastern Asia to take part in ecumenical church life, and to discover the best means of organizing churches for a more effective contribution to the cause of world order and peace.

An indication of what the Joint Commission might accomplish in the future was indicated by the action taken at the Manila Meeting in reference to the pending Japanese treaty. The Joint Commission urged the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs to take immediate steps toward insuring "a just and honorable peace treaty for the Japanese people."

It also urged that "every just means be used to secure the attendance of a Japanese representative" at the various ecumenical gatherings to be held in 1948, including the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam.

Representatives taking part in the first meeting of the Joint Commission included Dr. Gumersindo Garcia, of the Philippine Federation of Evangelical Churches, with Bishop Cipriano Navarro as alternate; Dr. K .S. Kim, of the National Christian Council of Korea; Dr. S. C. Leung, of the National Christian Council of China; Dr. Rajah B. Manikam, of the National Christian Council of India; and Dr. John W. Decker, New York secretary of the International Missionary Council.

Officers of the Manila meeting were: Chairman, Dr. Garcia; Vice Chairman, Dr. Leung; Secretary, Dr. Decker.

OVERSEAS APPOINTMENT

New York, N. Y.—Miss Kathryn E. Bryan of Memphis, Tenn., has been appointed religious education worker for the Missionary District of Haiti, according to announcement by the Overseas Department of the National Council.

Miss Bryan is a member of Emmanuel Parish, Memphis. She is a graduate of LeMoyne College, and is now finishing work for her Master's degree in Religious Education at Teachers' College, Columbia University. She is living at Windham House.

She has done volunteer work in religious education at Emmanuel Church; at St. Monica's House and St. Simon's Church, Lakeland, Cincinnati, Ohio. She has had experience as a worker with young people at St. Philip's Church, New York City, and in institutional and religious education work at Good Shepherd Mission, Fort Defiance, Arizona.

FORCES ARE NEEDED

Providence, R. I.—The Rev. Clarence H. Horner, D. D., rector of Grace Church in Providence, has stirred up at least a lot of dust in his efforts to "clean up" parts of Providence near his church. He calls it "filth and pollution," and he means more than just physical dirt and ugliness. But he says that forces are needed that are much stronger and more wide-spread than one parish church, and he calls on both people and politics in Providence to join in the clean-up work.

DR. CADIGAN RESIGNS

Entering Field Of Industrial Relations

Bloomfield Hills, Mich.—The resignation of the Rev. Charles H. Cadigan, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Cranbrook, effective during the summer, was announced to parishioners in a letter a few days ago.

Dr. Cadigan, who has been rector of the Cranbrock Parish since 1939, said that he is planning to enter the field of industrial relations. He expects to enter an industrial plant "to work with management and labor in formulating policies."

Expressing the belief that industrial relations is one of the most important areas of social tension today, Dr. Cadigan stated that he has been interested in the subject for several years, and feels he can make a contribution toward improved relationships.

Friends recalled that Dr. Cadigan's predecessor at Cranbrook, the Rev. Samuel S. Marquis, D. D., now rector emeritus, left the deanship of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, a generation ago to establish the first social service department in a major Detroit industry for the late Henry Ford.

Dr. Cadigan said that his plans are not yet complete. He has announced his resignation at this time in order to give the parish ample time to select his successor.

DEGREE CONFERRED ON BISHOP BARTON

Gambier, O.—The Rt. Rev. Lane Wickham Barton, bishop of Eastern Oregon, received an honorary Doctor of Divinity degree from Bexley Hall, the Divinity School of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, at a special Honors Day Convocation February 27. Bishop Barton was graduated from Kenyon College in 1923 and received his bachelor of divinity degree from Bexley Hall the following year.

In awarding the degree, President Gordon Keith Chalmers said: "Your early promise, acknowledged by your contemporaries and instructors in the college and the seminary, has been fulfilled in the strong, human, and constructive work, full of good humor and inspiring confidence, which has characterized your ministry here and in the Diocese of New Jersey. That you left the attractions of a large and flourishing suburban parish for the strenuous tasks of a missionary bishop in the far west is characteristic of your energetic service of the church."

Bishop Barton has been Bishop of the Missionary District of Eastern Oregon since 1946.

UNFORTUNATE OCCURRENCE

Chicago.—Chicago was the only place in the United States which did not receive the Presiding Bishop's broadcast on February 29. All arrangements had been made to have Columbia station WBBM carry the program, and it had been checked by a number of the Chicago clergy as late as Saturday afternon. When time came for the broadcast WBBM went on with its regular schedule.

The following letter, signed by Fred Faulkner, Station Manager of WBBM, was sent to Chicago newspapers, and has already appeared in most of them.

"WBBM greatly regrets the unfortunate occurrence resulting in the failure to broadcast the address of the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the interest of world relief. Offers to Bishop Conkling the use of the same broadcast period for such purpose as he deems desirable."

BISHOP EMRICH TO SUCCEED BISHOP CREIGHTON MARCH 31

Detroit, Mich.—The Rev. James G. Widdifield, president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Michigan, has notified the Ecclesiastical Authorities of the dioceses and missionary districts of the Church that concurrence in the election of the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., to be Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese, and express consents thereto, have been received from a majority of the Bishops and Standing Committees of the Church.

This therefore complies with the Canons of the General Church, and Bishop Emrich accordingly becomes Bishop Coadjutor of Michigan. He will hold this title until March 31, when, in accordance with action previously taken, he will succeed the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese, upon the latter's retirement.

SEABURY HOUSE BY NO MEANS VACANT

Greenwich, Conn.—Between its opening date, October 4, 1947, and March 1, Seabury House has been used for twenty-two gatherings of various Church groups. The opening day saw a picnic of Church Missions House staff. There have been meetings of the Department of Christian Education, and of its Curriculum Development Committee, and its Visual Education Commission. The Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work has met there, and the college faculty group brought together by Mr. Barrett. The Presiding Bishop has had conferences at Seabury House with various groups and individuals. The National Council had two meetings within the period, as did the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary. Domestic Missions held its Student Field Service meeting there. The Commission on Approaches to Unity, and the Commission on Social Reconstruction, both of the General Convention, met at Seabury House, as did the Department of Christian Social Relations of the United Council of Church Women.

March will not be such a busy month, on account of Lent, but four conferences are scheduled. April has already six conferences, four are on the calendar for May, and there are reservations in already for groups who want to use the House in June, September, October, December, and January, 1949.

Seabury House has been by no means vacant, since its acquisition by the Church.

HISTORICAL EXHIBIT

Philadelphia, Pa.—In the Print Room of the Philadelphia Free Library an exhibition of historical material of the Episcopal Church was on display from March 1 to 12. A formal opening of the Exhibit was held with a large attendance of clergy and lay people on March 1, with Bishop Hart officiating. The speaker was the Rev. Canon Cyril Hudson, M. A., of St. Albans, England, who is a special lecturer at the Philadelphia Divinity School this year. Many Church School and other organized parish groups have made pilgrimages to this exhibit, because of its educational value. Early and recent issues of all Church periodicals were included in the exhibit, as well as ancient and original documents of diocesan and general church history, unique editions of bibles and prayer books, pictures of bishops, historic churches, and curios of various kinds.

COLLEGE CONFERENCE AT VIRGINIA SEMINARY

Alexandria, Va.—The Virginia Seminary Committee for College Work finished on Febrary 8 the first annual college conference on the theme: "What is the Ministry?" Forty-seven students from fourteen eastern and mid-western colleges were in attendance during the three-day conference.

The Rev. Albert T. Mollegen, Professor of Christian Ethics, opened the conference with an address on "Christianity in a Day of Crisis." Saturday morning the visitors heard an address on "The Rural Ministry" by Bishop Goodwin fo Virginia and a parallel talk on "The Urban Ministry" by the Rev. Charles Sheerin of Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C. A panel discussion on "The Ministry: Preaching, Pastoral and Priestly," was led by the Rev. T. H. Evans, St. Paul's Church, Charlottesville, Va.; the Rev. Reuel L. Howe, Professor of Pastoral Theology at the Virginia Seminary, and the Rev. A. J. DuBois, St. Agnes Church, Washington, D. C.

Following an afternoon reception given by the Dean and Mrs. Zabriskie, the Dean addressed the group on "Seminary Preparation For the Ministry." On Sunday morning, following a corporate communion service, the Rev. Jesse M. Trotter, Professor of Apologetics, conducted an informal summary discussion in Bohlen Hall.

College Chaplains were in attendance with student delegations from William and Mary, Penn State, North Carolina, and Virginia. Other colleges represented at the conference were Haverford, Wesleyan, Trinity, Michigan, Pittsburgh, V. M. I., Washington and Lee, Pennsylvania, Marshall, and Princeton.

RUSSIAN CHURCH HONORS DR. SCAIFE

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, S. T. D., rector of Calvary Church was honored at a special service Sunday night recently, conducted in Calvary Church by the Russian Orthodox Church. The Council of Bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church has bestowed the Sobor Cross on Dr. Scaife and it was presented to him at this service.

The presentation was made by Archbishop Leonty of Chicago as the representative of His Eminence, Metropolitan Theophilus, and the other North American bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church. These bishops are now being tried, in absentia, in Moscow because of their refusal to be governed by the Communist-dominated Mother Church in Russia in matters other than spiritual. They continue to recognize the Patriarch of Moscow as titular head of the Church, but do not feel that he and the other Russian bishops should have complete control of the Russian Orthodox Church in this country.

The service on Sunday night was conducted by the local Russian Orothodox Bishop, Dionysius, assisted by the choirs of St. Michael's Cathedral, St. Gregory's Church, Homestead and St. Mary's Church, Carnegie. Also taking part were Bishop Nikon of Philadelphia, Archdeacon Vsevolod of Brooklyn and other Russian clergy, as well as the clergy of other Orthodox Churches in this district. The Episcopal clergy present were headed by the Rt. Rev. Austin Pardue, bishop of Pittsburgh.

The Cross was awarded to Dr. Scaife in appreciation of his long standing interest in and his constant assistance to the Russian Orothodox Church in this country. For many years Dr. Scaife has kept in close touch with the affairs of all the Orthodox Churches and his counsel has, in many cases, been invaluable.

DR. FRANKS SPEAKER AT UNIVERSITY

Charlottesville, Va. — Dr. Vincent Franks, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Miss., will be religious emphasis speaker at the University of Virginia on March 16, 17 and 18.

Informal discussions will be led by University professors and Charlottesville ministers in fraternity houses and dormitories during the religious emphasis period which is held under sponsorship of the religious activities committee of the University YMCA.

All classes will be dismissed for the talks in Cabell Hall by Dr. Franks, who is a native Canadian and the son of a missionary to the Cree Indians.

E. E. F. TO RAISE FUND FOR INDIA

Episcopalians who believe in the United Church of South India as the greatest step forward in church unity in modern times will be asked to demonstrate their faith and their support by contributing to the Thanksgiving Fund for the United Church.

Plans for a church-wide appeal, both to raise money for the working capital of the new Church and also to give American Episcopalians the opportunity to place themselves on record behind the new Church have been made by the executive board of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. A general appeal will be sent out in March, after the completion of the raising of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

Orphaned by the war, these European children need help and they need it NOW. Millions of such children overseas are striving for survival. The Episcopal Church is making a nationwide effort to raise a million dollars for World Relief through its Presiding Bishop's Fund. By means of a nationwide radio hookup, the administrative head of the Church, Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, spoke to his entire membership in their churches at exactly 11:32½ A. M., Sunday, February 29.

The Rev. Gardiner M. Day, Rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass., has been named general chairman of the campaign. Miss Elsie C. Hutton, of New York, national treasurer of the EEF, will be general treasurer, and will receive contributions to pass them on to the general collecting agent in America, Harold Belcher of the American Board of Foreign Missions (Congregational). Regional chairmen have been named in each of the Eight Provinces of the Episcopal Church.

In voting to place the Evangelical Fellowship behind the drive to raise money for the United Church of South India Thanksgiving Board, the executive committee of the EEF were unanimous in the opinion that sympathy and support must be more than verbal. It is hoped that every parish, where there is sympathy with the United Church, will receive an offering in some manner for this purpose, and that interested individuals will likewise add their support.

RESULTS TO DATE OF SEWANEE'S DRIVE

Sewanee, Tenn.—At the end of its first year, the Campaign for $5,000,000 being conducted by the University of the South has received cash and pledges totalling $957,047.74, according to figures announced by Dr. Alexander Guerry, vice chancellor and president, in the college Alumni News dated Feb. 15.

Tennessee leads all other states with $343,271.80, the report stated, while Nashville is the number one city with $131,169.38.

These totals, Dr. Guerry pointed out, do not include any part of the grant of $300,000 promised by the General Education Board of New York. Neither do the totals include the Alumni Fund or the annual support of the Episcopal Church, both of which are separate from the Campaign and both of which constitute income for annual operating costs.

Three cities are vying for first place, the report stated, Jacksonville, Florida, with $129,435.00 being less than $2,000 behind Nashville. Memphis is in third place with $111,459.75. Other city totals in order are Chattanooga with $68,545.00, Houston, Texas, with $61,-184.25, and Birmingham, Alabama, with $50,482.50. Florida, Texas, and South Carolina are in second, third, and fourth places after Tennessee.

The Sewanee Campaign has attained wide geographical interest, with seventeen states and Puerto Rico having sent in $1,000 or more. A little more than two-thirds of the total has come from friends who did not attend the Sewanee Military Academy, the college or the theological school.

All in all, the report stated, there is optimism at Sewanee over the results to date. The total compares with the best figures achieved by schools of comparative size and there seems to be no doubt that the drive, the largest ever begun by a school of Sewanee's size, will succeed.

RELINQUISH GRANTS

The Diocese of Florida and Southern Virginia have relinquished their grants from National Council for Negro work, and for a worker at Dabney House, respectively, thus placing themselves in the list of dioceses wholly unaided by the National Council.

South Florida has relinquished half its appropriation for Negro work this year, and will relinquish the other half in 1949.

DIOCESE OF ALABAMA

117th Annual Convention

Mobile, Ala.—The Oldest Episcopal Church in Alabama, Christ Church, founded in 1825, was host to the Dioceasan Convention Jan. 27-29. At the opening Evening Prayer Service, clergy of Mobile took part; the combined choirs sang two compositions of Christ Church's accomplished organist, J. Clarendon McClure; "Hosanna in the Highest" from his Mass in G, and Cardinal Newman's evening prayer: "Lord, support us all the day long", both of which were well received by the large congregation. The great gold Chalice, studded with over 100 diamonds, many pearls and fire opals, was used at the Communion Services.

The Alabama Churchman, diocesan monthly, surprised everyone by handing out copies of its February issue containing the Bishop's Annual Address, immediately after its delivery.

The Convention was broken up into four committees, to consider matters from the Bishop's address and other items referred from the floor. A resulting highlight was the decision of Convention to accept a resolution from the Committee on the State of the Church, for the diocese to endeavor to raise $260,000 to complete Camp McDowell for occupancy this summer, to build a Chapel at Tuskegee Institute, to erect a Church at Montevallo (Ala. College for Women) and a Student Center with Chapel at the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa.

The name of the Church Home near Mobile was changed to "Wilmer Hall" in honor of Richard Hooker Wilmer, Bishop, 1862-1900, under whom the institution was founded originally for orphans of Confederate soldiers.

Mr. Robert H. Cochrane of Tuscaloosa retired as treasurer of the diocese after 48 years of continuous service. He was presented a suitably engraved piece of silver, and elected treasurer emeritus. His successor is Mr. Alfred Rose, of Birmingham. For the second successive year the Rev. Clyde Perry, only Negro priest serving the diocese, was elected delegate to the Provincial Synod.

The Rev. John Huess, chairman of the Department of Christian Education of the National Council, was the headline speaker at the banquet. Colored slides of progress at Camp McDowell were shown. Mr. Prime Osborn of Spring Hill was toastmaster.

The 1949 Convention will be held in St. Mary's Church, Birmingham.

CHINESE CLERGY ON VISIT TO UNITED STATES

On January 30, Bishop N. V. Halward, assistant bishop of Hong Kong and South China, with six Chinese priests and one deaconess, arrived in San Francisco on what is probably a unique visit. They are visiting a number of dioceses in the United States, with a view to observing various aspects of the work of the Episcopal Church to enable them to receive spiritual, mental and physical refreshment. The group is not making any appeals for funds, nor will they be speaking much about China in public.

Five of the group, the Revs. Kong Chi Wing, Chung Yan Laap, Roland Koh, Cheung Lok Heung and Deaconess Lei Tim Oi, are from the Diocese of Hong Kong and South China. In addition there are the Rev. Ytu from the Diocese of Fukien and the Rev. Jordan C. L. Liu, who has been assisting Bishop Y. Y. Tsu at the Central Office of the Chung Hua Shing Kung Hui in Nanking.

All members of the group went through a hard time during the war, some of them in territory occupied by the Japanese, and others in free China.

The group earnestly desires the prayers of the Church for God's blessing upon their tour in the United States so that they may return to China with fresh inspiration, enthusiasm, and knowledge.

Bishop Halward is most grateful to the various dioceses of the Episcopal Church who are cooperating and making this visit possible.

WESTERN MICHIGAN DIOCESAN CONVENTION

Grand Rapids, Mich.—"Evangelism" was stressed throughout the Convention of the Diocese of Western Michigan which met in St. Mark's Cathedral, January 27 and 28.

In his opening remarks of his annual message, Bishop Whittemore said "Any message to the Church today must have the background of the world situation in mind. No one can deny the seriousness of the situation, it is worse than we in America realize". Later he said: "If there is any action which our people can take at this time which they will be least likely to regret in the future, it will be their contribution on February 29 to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. Like the friendship train, it goes from heart to heart."

Bishop Whittemore spoke briefly on the Stratton Bill for the entry of a certain number of displaced persons into this country, and urged that it be passed, also he urged the support of the so-called Marshall plan. He stated that Senator Vandenberg whose home is in Grand Rapids, should know that the Diocese of Western Michigan is behind him in his efforts.

Bishop Whittemore outlined a plan for visitation during the pre-Lenten period and a program for Lent for the extension of Christ's Kingdom through His Church. In speaking of the department of Christian Education and the need for the training of leaders, Bishop Whittemore told the delegates of the need for an all-year-round conference center in the diocese.

In the business sessions, the announcement that the missionary pledges of the parishes in the diocese amounted to $36,585.00 met with enthusiastic applause. This is an increase of $9,000 over the pledges of the previous year.

Captain Ernest St. Andrew, recently commissioned Captain in the Church Army, was presented, as Bishop Whittemore announced that he would take over the work at St. Francis' Mission in Orangeville. This mission was started in 1941 by the Women of the Church, and was directed by Bernice K. Jansen, now serving with Bishop Binsted in the Philippines.

SEABURY HOUSE

About $80,000 is needed for Seabury House, to cover repairs and maintenance up to the next General Convention. The Presiding Bishop suggests the erection on the property of a number of dwelling houses to be occupied by members of the National Council staff. These would increase the income of Seabury House from rentals, and the houses could be given as memorials by dioceses, groups, or individuals.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—With the thermometer resigstering 20 degrees below zero, over 100 persons were in attendance at a Parish Callers' Dinner in the Parish Rooms of Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, South Dakota. This dinner started the work on the Evangelism program in the parish.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Francis Reynolds, of St. Margaret's Church, Brighton, Mass., will succeed the Rev. Daniel C. Osborn, Jr., at St. Philip's, West Warwick, R. I. The Rev. Mr. Osborn is the new rector of St. John's, Newport, R. I.

The Rev. Joseph Rogers, formerly of Keene, N. H., is to be the new vicar of St. Paul's and St. Andrew's Churches, in Providence, R. I.

The Rev. Charles W. Sydnor, Jr., rector of St. Paul's Church, Petersburg, Va., has resigned to become rector of St. Paul's Church in Waco, Texas. The resignation to become effective April 15.

The Rev. Mr. Sydnor is a native of Pocahontas, Va., and came to Petersburg in 1940. He was rector of St. Stephen's Church, Beckley, W. Va., for four years.

The Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, rector of St. Mark's Church, Richmond, Va., and editor of The Southern Churchman, was the preacher at the noon-day services in the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Ala., the week of March 1-5.

Bishop George Purnell Gunn, recently consecrated coadjutor of Southern Virginia, was active in diocesan and community affairs. At the time of his Consecration he held 32 offices, ranging from director of a Rotary Club to chairman of the diocesan Field and Publicity Departments.

Harper Sibley, noted civic leader, agriculturist, former member of the National Council, has been re-elected president of Church World Service. His election was unanimous. Mr. Sibley has headed Church World Service since it was organized in 1946. Prior to that time he was director of Church Committee for Overseas Relief and chairman of Church Committee for Relief in Asia.

CHANGE OF ADDRESSES

The Rev. A. Appleton Packard, O. H. C., who for over three years has been located at the Holy Cross Mission, Bolahun, Liberia, is now back in the United States. Address, Holy Cross Monastery, West Park, N. Y.

The Rev. Robert Loren Zell, formerly curate in the Free Church of the Ascension, Troy, N. Y., should now be addressed at the Society of the Sacred Mission, Kelham, Newark (Nottinghamshire), England.

to stay overnight in our missions. These people were not fed. They brought their own food, but they needed a place to stay while visiting sick relatives or were here to attend a funeral or to come to Church. All of these are vital functions in ministering to these desert people who have placed such great confidence in the San Juan Mission.

Recently Mr. Sam Ahkeath, chairman of the Navajo Tribal Council, who has frequently brought members of his family to the San Juan Mission Hospital, in an address to the Farmington Rotary Club said: "The Navajos are confused. They don't know what to think about a lot of these problems and plans. Once, when a man asked me about Indian life, I simply said: 'It's tough to be an Indian.'" Too often have the Navajos been caught between the Scylla of weird, infantile, "this is good for you" approach and the Charybdis of conflicting governmental policies, pressure groups and naive idealistic nonsense. The tendency among groups who sincerely desire to help the Navajos in the solution of perplexing problems has been to proceed too hastily, without first establishing a solid basis of mutual respect.

One of the fundamental policies of this Mission is to teach responsibility along with all services rendered. Last year the Navajos, out of their meagre resources, contributed over $1,200.00 for medicines and in offerings. Some gave wood and others did various types of work to help out. This is highly significant. ROBERT Y. DAVIS.

Read Jerusalem Compassed by Armies in Forth for March

THE need this year is more urgent than ever, reports the Church's Chaplain in Jerusalem. Multiplied responsibilities, insoluble problems confront Christian leaders in the distraught land where once Christ walked. Congregations fluctuate; schools have been damaged and more severe havoc lies ahead; hospitals face appalling deficits. Your gifts this Good Friday not only will relieve a desperate financial situation but will bring courage and hope to the Bishop in Jerusalem, his helpers, and all those committed to their care.

NOT IMPRESSED

Sirs: Your card about renewal came today. I will renew my subscription, but I am not very much impressed with the magazine. I like to keep up with what is going in the Episcopal Church and I like strong articles, inspirational articles, suggestions for personal development along spiritual lines. I think this magazine lacks much along such lines.

For instance, the Story of the Church of South India could have been written in a more readable way. It was entirely too long and went into unnecessary detail. Reinhold Niebuhr says practically nothing one can't get in the newspapers. The movie descriptions are a bore and out of place, because descriptions can be gotten in so-called secular magazines. The News of the Church in the different parts of the country is almost always the same and so staid. So much reads like tiresome reports. The magazine seems so tame and prosaic, and lacks fire and zeal, which this chaotic world certainly needs. Big issues of today are scarcely mentioned or touched on. I think the magazine needs a general going over and renovation.

AMAZING EFFICIENCY

Sir: Hats off to the Church Missions House and the Department of Promotion and Publicity for the magnificent job done in putting over the Presiding Bishop's radio broadcast!

The task was carried through down to the very last detail, done promptly, and with amazing efficiency.

COMPLAINT LODGED ON USE OF CLERGY CERTIFICATE

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Dr. C. Rankin Barnes, Secretary of the National Council and Manager of the Transportation Bureau, calls attention to a misuse of clergy certificates by some holders of clergy books, in the West and Southwest particularly.

The Passenger Associations have complained that some holders of clergy certificates have allowed other persons to use their certificates. A part of the contract implied by the rules on the inside cover of the certificate is this statement: "This certificate and clergy tickets are not transferable, and if presented by any persons other than to whom the certificate is issued, it will be forfeited, taken up and cancelled."

It is to be hoped that no one will in future, jeopardize the existing valuable arrangement with the Passenger Associations, which provides for clergy rates.

Meditations In His Presence

VI. "By whom all things were made"
(From the Nicene Creed, page 71.)

We give God the praise for all creation. "This Created World" is His and He made it. All that has life gained that life from Him whether some "flower in a crannied wall" or a high official of Church or State. We acknowledge this truth first of all in the summary of the Apostle's Creed: "I believe in God the Father, who hath made me, and all the world." His life has become our life and therefore we possess nothing apart from Him. It is so essential for us to believe this; and to live life as if it belonged to God to be lived according to His plan for it.

If God is life, if He is the giver and sustainer of my life, then my chief task is to seek His will for His life in me.

God is life, and life is ever growing, ever at work responding to the environment He made for it. Is that not the reason for man's desire to reach out for more of life's abundance, like the roots of a plant, reaching down into the richness of the earth?

Whatever makes life grow is His will for us. Whatever would kill life, or stunt its growth, is wholly apart from God in an existence out of keeping with His intent for man.

"All things" includes me, and I would add my thanks to the prayers of thanksgiving throughout the ages, to the "By whom" of all creation.

J. W. KENNEDY.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

The Lambeth Conference and Unity

By The RT. REV. EDWARD PARSONS, RETIRED BISHOP OF CALIFORNIA, PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY, CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC

The first Conference (1867) was concerned about unity. Every Conference since then has been concerned about it, but only three stand out as having made any considerable contribution to the cause. In 1888 the Conference adopted as its own the proposals of our General Convention of 1886. In those proposals we stated our readiness to confer with other Christian bodies concerning unity on the basis of four fundamentals. They were in brief: 1. The acceptance of the Scriptures as the ultimate standard of faith. 2. The Apostles' and Nicene Creeds. 3. The two Sacraments ordained by Christ, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, and (4) the Historic Episcopate locally adapted. These four were presented by the American bishops as "the substantial deposit of Christian Faith and Order committed by Christ and His apostles to the Church unto the end of the world and therefore incapable of compromise or surrender."

It was obvious that such a statement was anything but self-explanatory. Many of the Evangelical bishops who accepted it also accepted the efficacy of the sacraments of non-Episcopal Churches. But when the Lambeth Conference of 1888 adopted this statement, since then called in Dr. Wm. R. Huntington's phrase The Quadrilateral, it did so as a "basis on which approach may be made" to unity. The point which this phrasing raised was whether or not the Episcopate is part of the Faith of the Church. Does it stand on the same basis as the creeds or the Scriptures or is it what the word historic implied, the order or structural character of the Church which had grown up during the first centuries? It is precisely at that point that our most essential difficulties in reunion proposals with non-Episcopal Churches has arisen. To those difficulties we shall come shortly but first some word about the Conference and the Churches which possess the Episcopate.

In 1888 the study of the ecclesiastical situation in the Scandinavian Churches was taken up seriously and closer relations with the Church of Sweden have gradually been brought about, a practical inter-communion. The Old Catholics having accepted our orders (1925), the 1930 Conference asked for further discussions and since then inter-Communion has been brought about officially. With the Orthodox Churches of the East there had been for many years discussions concerning inter-communion. In 1922 the Ecumenical Patriarch and Synod (Istanbul) accepted Anglican Orders. In 1930 an important delegation of the Orthodox Churches came to the Lambeth Conference and agreement was reached that there was sufficient unity of doctrine and discipline to anticipate favorable action on inter-communion when an authoritative Synod of the Orthodox Churches should meet. That has not as yet occurred; but as everyone knows there has been a real cooperation in many ways and some informal inter-communion.

The full significance of these approaches is not always noted. The Anglican Communion is "reformed." It has officially rid itself of much medieval doctrine and although today many of its clergy seem bent on by-passing the Reformation we are still a reformed Church. Orthodox theology, for example, is vastly different from ours. Why then do we all (Evangelicals as well as Anglo-Catholics) welcome these approaches to the orthodox and include them in our prayers and our work for unity. Obviously some of us because it seems to help us to move in the "Catholic" direction: some of us because with a kind of lip-service faith that unity is God's will, we can get to inter-Communion of this kind without being bothered by any real disturbance of our own traditional ways. But surely back of all that lies an unformulated faith on the part of Anglicans that unity comes in religion not in theology; in other words that the thing for us to do in all these efforts is to live together, worship together and work together. If we do that some of the doctrinal differences will disappear and the rest will gradually get into right perspective.

And that is quite clearly the underlying principle which has motivated the action of the Lambeth Conference in its relations with non-Episcopal Churches. In 1888 it accepted the Quadrilateral but spoke of it as a "basis upon which approach may be made." It spoke of Church government and "the ancient Church Order." In 1897 and 1908 there is some discussion of possibilities in connection with the Presbyterian or other non-Episcopal Churches and a statement that the Anglican Churches have neither the desire or the duty to "pronounce negatively upon the value in God's sight of the ministry of other Communions." There is also what becomes most important later on, a resolution welcoming "cooperation between members of different Communions in all matters pertaining to social and moral welfare."

In 1920 Unity comes to the center of the picture. The Conference issued "An Appeal to all Christian People" and in that it changed the 4th article of the Quadrilateral to read "a ministry acknowledged by every part of the Church as possessing not only the inward call of the spirit but also the commission of Christ and the authority of the whole body," and then offered the Episcopate as best meeting that need. The Appeal led to many fruitful inter-Church discussions but it was not until 1930 that any case came before the Conference. The famous and now happily completed project for union in South India of Anglican, Methodist and United Churches was presented to the Conference by the bishops from India. The Conference urged that "the venture should be made" when the negotiations were completed; and the Committee on Unity in its report carried further the principle enunciated in the 1920 Appeal. It based its claim for the Episcopate on historical grounds, emphasizing especially the functions of the bishop. It said we do not require "any one particular theory or interpretation of the Episcopate as a condition of union." It was on the basis of that principle that approval was given to the South India Plan.

Since 1930 there has been no meeting of the Conference and no plan of union which has gone as far the South

India had in 1930; but it is safe to say that wherever in the Anglican Communion projects concerning unity have been underwritten this principle has been assumed. That has certainly been the case in our negotiations with the Presbyterians here in America. The Basic Principles of 1943 and the Proposed Basis of Union of 1946 are in substance the South India plan adapted to American conditions.

In the 1946 Proposals other factors helped to the somewhat hysterical way in which we dealt with them in General Convention; but the key point of the opposition had nothing whatever to do with the Prayer Book or the nature of the General Assembly (Convention) or any other details. It went back to the question of recognizing the acceptance of the Episcopate on historic and functional grounds without requiring "any one particular theory or interpretation." The opposition refused to accept that. It claimed that such a position was "repugnant to the mind of Christ."

The serious, by all odds the most serious question which faces the Conference of 1948 is this question. A determined effort is being made to force the Conference to change its position. The resolution adopted by our General Convention in 1946 asking our Commission to prepare a statement in harmony with the Quadrilateral and present it to the Lambeth Conference for counsel of course only raised this same question. The Commission has not as yet made public its report on this matter; but the recommendations of the American Church Union presented at the Commission's open meeting last October made clear the views of the Union. In Dr. Haselmayer's "Lambeth and Unity" which has just appeared (for the American Church Union) it is summed up admirably. "We cannot ask," says the author, "Christians to accept the Catholic ministry merely as a means of Church government. We can only ask them to accept the Catholic ministry because it is a sacramental life-giving organism, safeguarding and reproducing in successive generations the reality of Catholic doctrine, discipline and worship." Now no intelligent Evangelical holds the Catholic ministry as "merely a matter of government." But let that go. It is not only the American Church Union which is sponsoring this reversal of the Lambeth Conference position. Powerful groups in England and throughout the Communion who have opposed the South India plan are aiming at the same goal.

The seriousness of this effort must, I say, be recognized. It asks not only the reversal of the Lambeth Conference position. It asks the reversal of the position of the Anglican Communion since the Reformation. Since that time with varying success but fairly consistently the "High Church" and the "Evangelical" positions have been accepted as legitimate within this Church. A declaration by the Lambeth Conference such as that quoted above would say to many bishops, thousands of priests and hundreds of thousands of laity that they have no place in the Church. This matter of the ministry is of course not the only question which is at issue; but it is the key question, and it is important that we should understand its seriousness. This article is not however the place to argue the question. It is dealing only with the kind of questions which face the Conference as it deals with unity.

And one may close with a more cheerful note; for both Anglo-Catholics and Evangelicals are behind the Conference in its approval of cooperation with other Churches on the "Life and Work" level. We are now members of the Federal Council; and the whole Anglican Communion is backing the World Council of Churches. We have had much to do with its formation. Archbishop Temple, the greatest Christian leader of his day, was its head until his lamented death. And that kind of cooperation is all part of the good Anglican principle already noted that if we can work together, pray together and in a measure live together, many differences will gradually disappear and what remain will get into the right perspective.

The World Situation

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Only the most robust optimist can live in such a time as this without the gravest fears for the future. The tensions of the world community are increasing.

Recent developments in Czechoslovakia give one the unhappy feeling that he is seeing the same reel which was run off just a decade ago. In Palestine no solution which will bring real peace between Arab and Jew is in sight. These two points of friction need not lead to war; but they do make it quite clear that we are not in possession of the things that belongs to our peace.

The destruction of the democratic government in Czechoslovakia and the establishment of a Communist government are particularly discouraging. I have had occasion to speak with Czech delegations in three recent international conferences in Geneva, Oslo, and London. In each case I was assured by the Czechs that they had a secure democracy.

They declared that they had not made the mistake of other eastern nations or challenging Russian foreign policy. They felt that they were on the Russian side of the world and that it was futile to do anything but go along with Russia on foreign policy. But they were convinced that the Russians would in turn let them alone in their domestic policy, not only because they had nothing to fear but also because the liquidation of democracy would be much too costly and would meet with a very stiff resistance.

These hopes proved to be vain. The resistance was not very stiff. The Communist party, as soon as it became apparent that it was not sure of a clear majority in the coming April elections, moved to make these elections unnecessary. It is worth adding that taking a nation over by means of a local Communist party is a much easier form of conquest than the Nazi method of the use of force from the outside.

The turn of events in Czechoslovakia will have no immediate effect upon foreign policy, but it cannot be denied that the destruction of the one remaining democracy behind the iron curtain will sharpen the tensions between east and west.

In Palestine there is little prospect of a viable solution. It is important to insist upon loyalty to the United Nations decision. The widely-held belief that the partition plan should be resubmitted to the United Nations does not take into account that it would be practically impossible for the United Nations to agree upon any alternative plan. The very existence of the United Nations would be imperiled by the confusion which would result from resubmission.

On the other hand, it is quite clear that the mere enforcement of partition by force will give us no final solution. For the two little states, Jewish and Arab, which will be carved out by partition, cannot achieve economic health if they do not develop the closest possible economic cooperation. That cooperation is made impossible by the rising animosities.

The tragic character of our contemporary scene must not lead us to either hysteria or despair; but no good purpose is served by complacency. Every resource of statesmanship and every good grace of mind and heart will be required to move through these present perils to an enduring peace.

The Issues For Amsterdam

By ROBERT S. BILHEIMER

Next summer, in August, 450 people will gather together in Amsterdam, Holland. They will represent 134 churches. Many persons who are qualified to know, feel that this meeting in Amsterdam will be one of the most important events in the history of the mighty Christian Church. Surely the bare facts of the meeting will not call for such an opinion. The meeting is small, it will not vote huge sums of money; it will make no political rearrangements; it may to many hardly seem relevant to the great issues which plague mankind. Yet the judgment is justified, for if God has His way with this first Assembly of the World Council of Churches, vast parts of the Christian Church in the world will be renewed and unified.

One of the powerful contributing factors to the effectiveness of the Assembly is the process of preparatory study which has preceded it. Thirty-seven authors have been chosen, and four volumes have been prepared, but behind these facts stands a long period of intense consultation among the leading minds of the Protestant and Orthodox churches—a consultation which has clarified issues, brought persons closer together, and prepared a solid spiritual and intellectual foundation for genuine advance at the meeting of the Assembly at Amsterdam. This process has come to be known as that of ecumenical study: a kind of international school, carried on by conferences and correspondence, in which persons from different nations and churches advance a conviction, send it out in an article for criticism, and rewrite the original on the basis of constructive comments.

The ecumenical study leading up to the Assembly of the World Council of Churches has involved exactly this process, over a period of two years. Three meetings of leading Christian thinkers, drawn from different countries and churches, have been convened. First and second drafts, and in some cases third drafts, of the different chapters have been prepared, and subjected to the most intense criticism. In America alone, 500 people have been asked to comment,—laymen, clergy, educators, theologians, church executives alike, so that a representative cross section of opinion might be gained.

The whole is thus far more than an interchange among professional theologians. It represents a genuine meeting of minds, not always in agreement, indeed sometimes in the sharpest disagreement. It is part, and a fundamental part, of the painful process by which the disunity with which we are beset in the Body of Christ is fashioned out into a recognizable unity.

Robert S. Bilheimer is the Executive Secretary of the Interseminary Movement, Secretary of the US ecumenical Study Committee for the Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council of Churches, and Minister of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Cedar Manor, New York. Last year he served as general editor of the well-known "Interseminary Series" of study books and was the author of the last volume in the series—"What Must the Church Do?"

Moreover, the process has helped greatly to clarify issues, and in some cases to locate answers, on the great themes with which the Assembly will be dealing. The general subject of the meeting is "Man's Disorder and God's Design", and the theme of each volume is as follows:

The Universal Church in God's Design.

God's Design and the Church's Witness.

The Church and the Disorder of Society.

The Church and International Affairs.

The first study—in which the participating Americans are Conrad Bergendoff, Clarence T. Craig, Bishop Angus Dun, Georgia Harkness, John A. Mackay, and H. Richard Niebuhr—goes directly to the Bible for the basis of our thinking about the Church; and though different interpretations appear, it is agreed that our unity is to be found in the Biblical message concerning the Church. Moreover, it is clear, especially through the remarkable chapter on new life in the Church, that there will be no unity without a great rebirth in the Church's life. Beyond this, the ecumenical movement, and its organization, are treated in order to show their relationship to this renewal and this unity.

In the second volume, "God's Design and the Church's Witness", the subject of the evangelistic task of the Church is viewed for the first time on a comprehensive, world-wide basis. The unequivocal position of the book is that evangelism, that is, the work of bringing the Gospel to life in the hearts of men the world over, is the first task of the Church. The Commission is a representative one, in which the Americans are Robert S. Bilheimer, Robert L. Calhoun, Walter M. Horton and Kenneth S. Latourette, and there are different views as to how this Gospel should be stated; but on the question of the evangelistic duty of the Christian there is no doubt. An impressive survey of effective evangelism is at once encouraging and disheartening: there is universal evidence of the hunger of people for faith in God, and in many places people are joining the Church by thousands. Yet there is still to be discovered a really significant "break through" by the Church into the hardened secularism of our time, nor is there evidence that the Church is able to stem the tide of spiritual disintergration in Western society which is so ably analyzed in one of the chapters.

The third study of "The Church and the Disorder of Society" is concerned almost exclusively with the prime problem of western society, namely the need to achieve a constructive balance between freedom and order or control in a society which has become almost wholly mechanized. Two brilliant analyses, one particularly indicating the consensus which exists among Christian and secular thinkers alike, states the problem clearly. How may the Christian Church contribute to the achievement of a truly responsible society, in which man is free, but in which the machine and all its benefits are controlled for the common good? A statement of the goal of Christians in this regard is followed by a statement of some of the strategies which may be followed by the church, the whole indicating the chief social issue which must continue to challenge the mind of the Church until the key answer is found. Those participating in the Commission from America are Reinhold Niebuhr, John C. Bennett, F. Ernest Johnson and Bishop William Scarlett.

The fourth study on "The Church and International Affairs" strikes at three points: the overwhelming tension between Russia and the United States; the fundamental importance of religious liberty, and the responsibility which the Church has for exerting its ministry of reconcilation within the struggle of international power politics. It is too early yet to indicate the way in which this volume will state the problem, or the recommendations which will stand out from it. More of the process of ecumenical study is needed: drafting, criticism from many nations, redrafting, before the volume is ready for publication. The forthright attack of leading lay-people and clergy—from American John Foster Dulles, O. Frederick Nolde, Reinhold Niebuhr, Bishop Ashton Oldham, Bishop G. Bromley, F. W. Rennie and Mrs. Leslie E. Swain—on this problem however, particularly in an ecumenical set-

PALM SUNDAY SPEAKER ON "CHURCH OF THE AIR"

Dr. Clarence C. Stoughton, former president of Wagner College (N. Y.) and executive director of the Lutheran Laymen's League, is the speaker on CBS' "Church of the Air" Palm Sunday, March 21. His sermon topic is "Shouting Is Easy" (CBS, 10:00-10:30 AM, EST). John Bainbridge directs the Wagner College Choir in "At Thy Feet."

GARDEN OF THE GODS EASTER SUNRISE SERVICE TO BE BROADCAST

30,000 Assemble Each Year to Hear 300-Voice Choir Proclaim the Festival

From its setting of majestic beauty —snow-capped Pikes Peak in the background; the singing of many thousands of birds that make their home in the rocks nearby—the 28th annual Easter Sunrise Service in the Garden of the Gods, near Colorado Springs, will be broadcast over the Columbia network for the fifth year, Sunday, March 28 (CBS, 8:30-9:00 AM, EST. From KVOR).

More than thirty thousand persons assemble each year in the Garden of the Gods to listen to the glorious hymns of the 300-voice a capella choir of Colorado Springs High School.

As in previous years the Garden of the Gods service will be predominantly musical. The choir, directed by Frank Gilles, is nationally famous. Their first number will be a 12th century humn, "Christ is Arisen." Then follows "Christ Our Lord Is Risen" and "Alleluia."

Tenor Bernard Vessey, who has been a soloist of the Easter Sunrise Service for more than 25 years, will sing "Open the Gates of the Temple," his traditional selection.

The Rev. Thomas Dick, Jr., pastor of the First Reformed Church, will deliver the annual Easter message, titled "Corollaries of Immortality." The Invocation will be by the Rev. Kenneth Smith, of Wesley Methodist Church. The Easter Story from the Scriptures will be read by the Rev. Leslie Bowers, Jr., assistant pastor of the First Cristian church. The Rev. F. O. Seamans, of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, will give the Benediction.

EASTER DAWN SERVICE FROM RADIO CITY TO BE BROADCAST

New York, N. Y.—The annual Easter dawn service from the auditorium of Radio City Music Hall will be broadcast under auspices of the Protestant Council of the City of New York over the NBC network on Sunday, March 28, 7:30-8:00 a. m., EST.

The Rev. Robert James McCracken, pastor of Riverside Church, New York, will deliver the sermon. The Rev. Earl Frederick Adams, executive director of the Protestant Council, will pronounce the benediction.

Music by the Rockefeller Center Choristers will include Handel's "Let Their Celestial Concerts Unite" and his "Hallelujah" Chorus.

This will be the 29th Easter dawn service sponsored by the Protestant Council, and the ninth to originate in Radio City.

TWO SPECIAL EASTER PROGRAMS ON "GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD"

New York, N. Y.—Easter observance will be marked this year by two special programs on the radio series, "The Greatest Story Ever Told." The wonderful reception given last year's Easter Trilogy, on the same program, encouraged the sponsor and the producers to make this year's Easter programs even better than before.

The first of the two Easter programs, "The Betrayal and The Crucifiion," will be broacast on Sunday, March 21, at the usual time of the broadcast, 6:30 p. m. EST, over the ABC network. The second program will be given on Easter Sunday, March 28, and will be "The Resurrection."

The first program dramatizes the Last Supper and the vigil in the Garden of Gethsemane, followed by the judgment of Christ, Peter's denial, and the crucifixion.

The Easter Sunday program dramatizes "The Resurrection," and Christ's appearance to the apostles and Thomas, the doubter.

This program is sponsored by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company as a public service program without any commercial announcements.

PASSION PLAY TO BE REPEATED EASTER SUNDAY

"The Son of Man," Archibald MacLeish's Passion Play for radio, commissioned by the Columbia Broadcasting System and presented for the first time on Easter Sunday, 1947, will be performed again this year on Easter Sunday, March 28 (CBS, 1:30-2:30 PM, EST).

"The Son of Man" was hailed by lay and clerical listeners throughout the country for its dynamic, yet poetically reverent treatment of the Story and of the Gospels in whose words it is told. Its performance this year will be offered with the original cast and producing staff virtually intact. Guy della-Cioppa will again direct the production. The chorus will be especially trained by Robert Shaw, the noted young American choral expert, with Alexander Semmler conducting the chorus and the CBS Symphony Orchestra.

Four of the five actors who constitute the entire speaking cast of the one-hour drama also will be veterans of last year's performance.

The Play embodies no original text by Mr. MacLeish, but consists of a dramatic and significant arrangement of passages from the three Synoptic gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and from the Gospel According to St. John.

Drawing at will from these four narratives to reconstruct the sequence of events leading to the Crucifixion and the Resurrection, Mr. MacLeish integrated the Play with Passion music and the B Minor Mass of Johann Sebastian Bach, allotting a unique dramtic-narrative function to the music.

In his use of the Biblical texts Mr. MacLeish also succeeded in recreating the personalities of the four Evangelists in relation to their times and their contemporary concerns.

The decision to repeat "The Son of Man" was based on the receipt of letters from almost every State in the Union and almost every walk of life. The enthusiasm of the letter writers is aptly expressed in one from the Department of Romance Languages, University of South Dakota, which said in part:

"Our profound thanks for your presentation of the vivid, life-like picture of the Passion Week. It was very moving. It should be an annual event."

The listener response, solidly confirmed by radio and literary critics, gives the 1948 broadcast of "The Son of Man" something of the nature of a popular "command" performance.

(For Palm Sunday)

"THE LORD HATH NEED."

Christ could not ride without an ass.
He could not sup without a room.
Could He have died without a cross?
His Burial demands a tomb.

The Lord had need of many a thing,
Without their aid He could not do.
He needed Paul to face a King.
Almighty! He is needing you.

The owners, then, with glad accord
Straightway sent the asked-for steed.
The precious ointment Mary poured.
Oh! gladly hear, "The Lord hath need."

Palm Sunday

Strange that so often we think of Palm Sunday as a day of partial triumph! For it was in reality grim defeat. It was the first of the tragedies of that last week, climaxed by a gallows on Calvary. The depth of that defeat is not plumbed until we assay that pitifully small band of Galilean disciples who paraded so futilely into Jerusalem with Jesus against the background of the vast population of the pilgrim swollen city. There were so few who cared, and so many who cared not at all! These were not His enemies. They did not care enough to be hostile to Him!

At root, there was the indifference of those who feel no spiritual need. They did not look for Israel's salvation nor for any spiritual salvation. They simply ate and drank and slept. They worked and played. They went to the Temple when custom and habit demanded it. But their souls were never athirst for God. The destructive defeat of Jesus on Palm Sunday was not that of running into a wall of concrete hostility. He was smothered and suffocated by the many's dull lack of spiritual awareness.

This is peculiarly true of our age. There is tremendous religious indifference. We are reaping the fruits of years of religious ignorance; of materialistic apathy to the values of the spirit; of a smug secularist philosophy of inevitable human progress that ruled out God. There is assuredly widespread fear of the future. There is a great sense of frustration. There is despair in the face of both personal and social problems that seem about to engulf us. But most people do not think of religion as being an answer to any of these matters! They have no feeling of spiritual need, only a vague sense of lostness. To suggest to the average man outside the pale of the Church that religion is the answer to his problem and the problems of the world is to face derision and scorn.

Parsons seize eagerly at statements such as that of MacArthur that the basic world problem is theological. But the man in the streets doesn't know what MacArthur meant, and would not believe it if it were explained to him.

This grim fact must influence all Christian strategy. We speak much of evangelism in the Episcopal Church today. Often there is implicit in our planning the thought that if we only will go out to the unchurched people of America, they will welcome us with wideopen arms, flocking back to the Churches. So we optimistically plan campaigns of lay visitation and roll calls and preaching missions. There is no evidence whatsoever of any great impact being made by these efforts on unchurched America. They fail in ultimate success because they begin with a basic fallacy. They assume a sense of need where there is none!

The Palm Sunday problem is the first problem the Church must face today. We must develop in the unchurched a sense of need for that which Christianity offers. In a way, the Church faces the problem of a corporation with a new and unknown product. It must not only advertise that product, but do so in a way that will develop and create a sense of need in people.

How can the Church do this? First, by positive proclamation of primary religious truth, not by playing around the periphery of narrow denominationalism, or, worse still, around the trivia of ecclesiastical life. The Church must state boldly the majestic Christian faith in God; our conception of man's sinful plight; and God's way of salvation for the world through the Incarnation.

This must then be related to man's fears and needs, not to potential Church membership. It must not be a campaign of ecclesiastical aggrandizement, but literally of evangelism, of "good news." It must say, "Here is the answer!"

Further, the cost of the answer must be made clear. Let there be no forgetting the grim facts of reality. Men have been sickened by the glib religion of the hot water bottle and the rocking chair that has masqueraded as Christianity this past generation. This is total war, this heavenly warfare, and the price is the price of total war. There will be "blood, sweat and tears!" There is no goal of earthly security in Christianity!

This proclamation of faith; this relation to need; this statement of cost, the Church must make its burning business not in sporadic campaigns of so-called evangelism, but literally forever! Business speaks of "irritation advertising," that repeats and repeats and repeats itself until it plants itself in your mind. L. S. M. F. T.! You may not smoke, but you probably know the meaning of those letters! So the Church must incessantly drive home its God-given message to a generation which has ears and cannot hear. We must develop their sense of need. We must tell and retell the Christian answer. Then we must help them to bring answer and need triumphantly together in life.

"I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me," said our blessed Lord. If the Church is the extension of His Incarnation, this is our task also. This is the Palm Sunday challenge. Its answer may well mean many a new Good Friday. But this is the only road to Easter and to God's victory. Civilizations that can no longer respond to challenge, says Arnold Toynbee, are static and dying. That is also true of Churches. God grant we may heed His call this Holy Week!

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

THE ANGLICAN CHURCH IN DELAWARE. By Nelson Waite Rightmyer, Ed. D., professor of Ecclesiastical History in the Philadelphia Divinity School. Published by the Church Historical Society, Philadelphia, pp. 217. $3.00.

This book upon the history of the Anglican Church in Delaware during the colonial period is a valuable contribution to our knowledge of the beginnings of the Episcopal Church in the United States. Delaware was one of the nine dioceses which took part in the General Convention of 1789, at which the organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church on a national scale was completed, and the first Prayer Book of the American Church completed and authorized for general use.

We are generally accustomed to think of that meeting of the General Convention as the beginning of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, without realizing that while it was the beginning of the phase of national existence it was also the culmination of a century of growth and the conjunction of the different streams of Anglican Church life which had come into existence in the several English colonies in the preceding two centuries. Inevitably and irrevocably the life of the newborn national Church of 1789 was moulded and influenced to a great extent by the experiences through which the Anglican Church has passed in its formative years of colonial life.

For that reason it is essentially important that trained research workers and students should dig down into the actual records of the colonial period, as far as they are now in existence, in order to bring to light the ways in which the Church in each of the colonies developed and grew, how each one met and solved as best it could its own peculiar problems, before the several streams came together into one.

Dr. Rightmyer has done an excellent piece of work in this book. He has done it in the only way in which such work can properly be done; by taking each county or parish as a unit and tracing as far as possible the life of each one: the mission started by the S. P. G.; the missionaries of that Society who came to each one; the financial and numerical strength growing until self-support was attained and each parish entered into independent life. The interesting fact appears that the Church in Delaware because of its connection with Pennsylvania shared with that province in the peculiar provision of Penn's charter, that the bishop of London should personally hold the advowson, or right of appointment of ministers to the several parishes. This custom continued till near the middle of the eighteenth century when the Bishop of London himself refused to continue it and both in Delaware and Pennsylvania the parishes were given the right to select their own ministers.

The matter of perhaps greatest general interest in the book is Dr. Rightmyer's account of the way in which the Swedish Lutheran churches established on the Delaware River before any English-speaking settlers came, were finally brought into the fellowship of the Anglican Communion. The old Swedes' Churches which still stand in Wilmington, Philadelphia and elsewhere are today the very precious possession of the Episcopal Church; but very few people know the details of the way by which they and their people became a part of our communion. The Swedes were among the first settlers on the Delaware River, and held their ecclesiastical allegiance to the Lutheran Church of Sweden for more than a century. The author's treatment of that story and their final merging into the Episcopal Church is most interesting and informative. His treatment also of the Methodist movement within the Anglican Church until the final separation and organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1784 is all the more interesting because Francis Asbury, the greatest of the Methodist leaders in America, and one of the few who remained in America upon the outbreak of the Revolution, made Delaware his headquarters during that conflict. Indeed, he was practically interned at the home of a friend for a part of the time because of his lack of sympathy with the American position.

The book is attractively gotten up and well printed, and should be of interest in every Church library. It is Publication No. 23 of the Church Historical Society. The Church at large owes a real debt of gratitude to that Society for its work in the publication of books and pamphlets dealing with the history of the Episcopal Church.

IT SO HAPPENED. By Muriel Lester. Harpers. $2.00.

Muriel Lester is one of those remarkable Christian wo- whose life is so interesting that this is a second volume of autobiographical sketches of her world-wide Christian activities and interest, following the general spirit of the first volume entitled "It Occurred to Me." The story begins with 1938, with her trip from the United States to Shanghai, and covering experiences in Europe, India, Palestine, the U. S. A., Latin America, and finally at home in England. It is refreshing and reassuring to find faith and friendship of this sort in the world of today.

CHRISTIAN NURTURE. By Horace Bushnell. Yale University Press. $4.00.

One hundred years after Horace Bushnell published his first chapters on Christian education finds a new edition of the full book being reprinted because of the demand. It is a book which should never be out of print, because it is the magna carta of Christian childhood. It was Bushnell who freed children from all the devils of a hellish childhood in the New England churches, and formulated the theory of "Christian nurture; that every child should grow up a Christian and never know himself as anything else." With introductory sketches by Williston Walker and Dean Luther Weigle, this reprinting satisfies the demand; and every educator should read it.

THE EAGLE AND THE CROSS. By Prince Hubertus zu Loewenstein. Macmillan. $2.75.

Here is a novel about the early Christians in Rome, in which the insights of great philosophers and theologians are woven into a dramatic and interesting story which should interest all lovers of historical novels.

OUR CHRISTIAN FAITH. By Walter Marshall Horton. Pilgrim Press. $2.50.

This is a revised edition for general consumption of a book written originally for Congregationalists. It is a Biblical and liberal interpretation of the essential meaning of Christianity. Dr. Horton has drawn from three recent bases of faith as sources for his interpretation: (1) John Bennett's statement from "Christianity—and Our World"; (2) the report on "The Faith By Which the Church Lives" from the Madras Conference of 1938; (3) the statement of faith drafted by Congregational Christians in 1943. This book is thus as modern as today and finds its roots in Christianity history. The three major sections are "God and Mankind," "The Church's Response to God," and "The Church's Mission to the World." It is written in clear and concise language which the layman will appreciate.

SKEPTIC'S SEARCH FOR GOD. By Barabara Spofford Morgan. Harpers. $3.00.

"I wish that churchgoing might be squarely faced as a duty, with the incidental shortcomings of the clergyman submerged in the common longing he represents: man's search for the unknowable." Mrs. Morgan, a Ph. D., and mother of three children, leads the reader through three basic approaches to God: the intellectual, mystic, and moral, and in a highly satisfying way finds answers to the questions of modern skeptics. THE NEGRO SPIRITUAL SPEAKS OF LIFE AND DEATH. By Howard Thurman. Harper., 1947. $1.00.

This little book of only 56 pages is the Ingersoll lecture on the Immortality of Man given at the Harvard Divinity School by the noted Negro educator and minister. The reader will gain a deeper and humbling insight into the Negro experience which lies behind the "spirituals." The simplicity and childlikeness of the style of his writing lends a note of authority to what he says. All those who love the Negro spirituals should read this book.

ADORATION

J. N. Taylor

O pure Spirit, Eternal God,
Above all time and space,
With humble, contrite hearts we approach
Thy throne of Heavenly Grace.

O Word made flesh, Incarnate Love,
The Life, the Truth, the Way,
Our hearts are one with thine by faith,
O Thou, our guide and stay.

O Holy Spirit, Celestial Flame,
Without beginning, without end,
Illume our minds, instruct our wills,
O Thou, on us descend.

O One in Three, O Three in One,
Most Blessed Trinity,
As incense sweet our prayers arise
In hushed expectancy.

We bow the head, we bend the knee,
We wait in silent joy,
In solemn rapture prostrate fall,
Thy Presence to adore.

WHEN LINCOLN PRAYED

A visitor at the White House during the Civil War left this record of Abraham Lincoln. "I had been spending three weeks at the White House with Mr. Lincoln, as his guest. One night—it was just after the battle of Bull Run—I was restless and could not sleep. It was coming near to the dawn of day when I heard low tones proceeding from a private room where the President slept. The door was partly open. Instinctively I walked in, and there I saw a sight which I shall never forget. It was the President kneeling before an open Bible. The light was turned low in the room. His back was toward me. I shall never forget the tones, so piteous and sorrowful: 'Oh thou God, who heard Solomon in the night when he prayed and cried for wisdom, hear me. I cannot lead this people, I cannot guide the affairs of this nation, without Thy help. I am poor and weak and sinful. O God, Thou didst hear Solomon when he cried for wisdom—hear me and save this nation!' "

GOOD FRIDAY
The Collect

Almighty God, we beseech Thee graciously to behold this Thy family, for which our Lord Jesus Christ was contented to be betrayed and given up into the hands of wicked men, and to suffer death upon the cross; who now liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

CHILDREN EVERYWHERE

The International Council of Religious Education is sponsoring throughout the country "Workshops on Children". We are fortunate in Virginia to have one of the centers here. The Virginia group is to meet at St. Paul's, Richmond, on April 20-21. We are to sit down with members of the various Protestant denominations to discuss our work with children.

We wish to focus our attention upon the need of children for religious training and to quicken our concern for reaching and teaching children. We hope to increase interest in awareness of national and international movements concerned with the welfare of children, such as missionary outreaches, World Church Councils, and others. We are to bring to this meeting new materials, so we can go back to meet our local needs and help intrepret our work with children.

We are trying to broaden people's outlook on their task. We are teaching children. Children are alike everywhere. As we train and teach these, our children, we are having an effect on children around the world. Sometimes when we teach our children in our homes and in class we fail to remember this. As Johnnie and Jane grow up, they are going to help make a better world or destroy it. In this way they will affect others in the world.

We have not forgotten the important subject of the "Church and the Home". We are to have a panel on this subject where we will stress the importance of the relationships between the Home and the Church, as well as the relationships in the Home. We feel that this is one of the most important areas in our work. We will have an opportunity to share with each other the experiences we have had in this field.

Books and materials will be on display so that all will be able to share their books with others from the various churches.

If you are interested in coming to this Conference, we shall be glad to write you more details. It is for parents and teachers who wish to take two days apart to discuss, pray, and work together for "Children Everywhere".

PRAYER FOR THE WHOLE STATE OF CHRIST'S CHURCH

In the petitions that follow it is natural that the next one should be a prayer for the rulers of countries, because this is a relic of the fact that most churches represented the state, both in England and Roman Catholic countries, and although this prayer does not appear in English until 1531, nevertheless it had its origin in Latin in the Book of Hours long before that.

In the prayer for "Bishops and other Ministers, that they may, both by their life and doctrine, set forth thy true and lively Word," we have a reminder that the way in which a clergyman practices is as important as what he preaches.

In some of our services and sermons no doubt the laiety often wish that the clergy would keep more in mind that they are to set forth both a true and lively word. This reminds us that the Gospel is positive and not negative, and that the condemnation pronounced upon those on "His left hand" in the twenty fifth chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel is for dolessness, for crimes of omission and not commission.

The use of the two adverbs "rightly and duly administer Thy Holy Sacraments" is an admonition that these sacred rites of the church should not only be observed in the right way, but also with sufficient frequency to make them available to all the people. In this connection it is well to emphasize the use of the Communion Service in private families, so that our people will be accustomed to the idea, and not feel that the administration of the Sacrament is only to be used in extreme cases and as an indication that death is imminent. Some pastors encourage the use of a private Communion Service to commemorate special family anniversaries, and this is an excellent method of strengthening "the Communion of Saints" and making it a real part of our church life.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

FOR THE UNITED NATIONS

Almighty God, from Whom all thoughts of truth and peace proceed; Guide, we pray Thee, with Thy strong and peaceful wisdom, those who take counsel for the nations of the earth in the United Nations Organization. And that we may worthily support them, deliver all Thy people from selfishness and false ambitions. Grant that we may prepare our minds through study, our hearts through compassion and our souls through prayer and sacrament for a new world in which justice shall be assured to all and in which peace shall be enduring, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

News of the Church

RESOLUTION PASSED

At Parish Meeting of Christ Church

Philadelphia, Pa.—A Committee of the Men of Christ Church, consisting of C. T. Begley, Charles T. Breig, Harry G. Lees and H. Durland Patterson, submited the following resolution to the Parish Meeting of Christ Church, held in the Neighborhood House on Sunday, March 7, 1948. After being read and discussed, the meeting adopted the resolution.

The congregation of Christ Church in Philadelphia, assembled at a Parish Meeting on Sunday, March 7, 1948, reaffirms their belief in the principle of the separation of Church and State as expressed in Article I of the ten original amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America. Article I states "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

We, as members of the Christ Church congregation, are proud to remember that members of this congregation, which was founded in 1695, were, through the years, active in forming and furthering the development of the Government of these United States. The founders of our country were men of real faith in God. They knew that man is not a logical being. They knew also that he could not be described, except partially, as a psychological being. They knew themselves and all others to be children of God the Father. Such faith must be ours. The relationship of each individual to God as Father, and the relationship of each individual to others as brothers is the foundation stone upon which this, or any other Government, must rest if it is to be of lasting service to mankind.

We must all be careful to preserve and further, in our day, the principle of that first Amendment. A recent Manifesto by "Protestants and Other Americans United for the Separation of Church and State" has pointed out the gravity of the present situation in an effort "to revive in the public mind a clear understanding of the constitutional basis upon which religious liberty has been guaranteed, (2) to redress the specific violations which have recently come into force, and (3) to resist further encroachments upon this constitutional principle".

All churches, be they Protestant, Jewish, or Roman Catholic enjoy religious liberty under Article I of the original ten amendments to the Constitution of the United States. It never behooves any group, in seeking to further its own aims, to ask for action on the part of Federal, State or local Government that is inimicable to the spirit of Article I referred to above.

With keen appreciation for the protection afforded to all persons under the Constitutional safeguards provided by the separation of Church and State, and in the freedom of the press, we will seek ourselves to (1) bring our lives, as individuals and as members of the State and the Church, into line with the principles of Article I of the first ten amendments to the Constitution and (2) ask that the Convention of the Diocese of Pennsylvania of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, in May, 1948, bring the gravity of the present situation before the members of the Diocese, and (3) that the newspapers within the Diocese be advised of this action.

E. FELIX KLOMAN,
Rector.

ASK STRONG U. N. SUPPORT

Richmond, Va.—Richmonders will be asked to bombard Congress with petitions requesting immediate action to strengthen the United Nations "before it is too late", under a plan announced by 25 civic, industrial, and religious leaders on March 8.

In a 450 word statement the 25 Richmonders announced the formation of the "Richmond Committee For the United Nations", which will sponsor the petition campaign in early April. Chairman of the new committee is the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D. D., former Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States.

The committee's statement described the present United Nations organization "as inadequate", called for United States action to empower the United Nations "to enforce world law against war", and outlined a plan by which Richmond citizens may influence action to bring about the protection of "all nations . . . against war", or "the non-Communist nations . . . against surprise attack".

"We believe that the United States must initiate and support action to strengthen the United Nations to prevent war among its member nations", Bishop Tucker explained. "We hope that Russia and her satellites join the remainder of the United Nations in this movement. But if they do not the rest of the world must go ahead anyway. No nation should be permitted to hamper the progress of the remainder of the world at the same time it misinforms its own people to build up an offensive war psychology."

"We believe that the American people are willing to participate in a strong world organization, of limited powers, granted by the member nations, to prevent the third world war now threatening us. As citizens, we must inform the Congress of our views in this matter, so that action can be taken promptly."

LANCASTER COUNTY TOUR APRIL 24-25

Benefit of Christ Church Parish

Somers, Va.—St. Mary's White Chapel—Church of the Ball's of Millenbeck was founded in 1669 and built on the land owned by Captain James Fox who willed 20 lbs. sterling for glazing its bricks and other uses. Chalice bears the inscription "Gift of David Fox 1669". The commandments in two frames were given in 1702 by Captain David Fox, husband of Hannah Ball. Lord's Prayer and font were bequeathed in 1718, by William Fox. Original building was rectangular, but was made cruciform in 1741. After the Revolutionary war the surrounding chancel walls in the East and gallery in the West over the door collapsed. These openings were bricked up and the church once more became rectangular with the chancel in the north. Only the south gallery remains. The church has been in continuous use.

BELLE ISLE. Land grant was made in 1650 to Rev. John Bertrand, sold in 1786 to Raleigh Downman. Present house built in early 18th century. A fine example of Georgian architecture. Present owner Mr. and Mrs. H. Lee Boatwright, Jr.

BELLE ISLE FARM Luncheon served 11 A. M. to 4 P. M.

EDDING FOREST Founded by Col.

Joseph Ball about 1690 is historic as the birthplace of Mary Ball 1707-1789 mother of Washington. Present owners Mr. and Mrs. Jas. D. Jesse.

Fox Hill Planation, known as Farmville, part of the house was built in 1761 with original dependency which might have been the old kitchen, smoke house and ice house are remaining. It came in to possession of the Seldon family through the Balls. Admission includes tea. Present owner Miss Majorie Eastwick.

COBB'S HALL the first home of the Lees of Virginia, seat of Col. Richard Lee. Present owner Mr. W. H. Harvey.

DITCHLEY—Established by Hancock Lee, named for a Lee estate in England. Present mansion built in early 18th century by Kendall Lee. Later became a Ball home. Present owner Mrs. Alfred I. duPont.

CHRIST CHURCH—Known as King Carter's Church. First mentioned in the court records 1675. Present building erected on the same site 1732. Surviving the neglect of the post war period it still stands in its stately simplicity. The only colonial church in Virginia that has not been altered. The font, wood work, pulpit high pews and communion service remain. The architecture of the church stands on part with the finest English work of the period.

The houses and churches will be open from 10 to M. to 5 P. M.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH HOME FOR MEN

Richmond, Va.—In years past the aged were cared for by their own families in their own homes, but owing to changing times and living conditions many families cannot now provide in their own homes for their loved ones who have grown old.

The Church understands the situation and recognizes the need of homes for its aged men and women. There is already one such home for women in the Diocese of Virginia, but up to the present time no such provision has been made by the Church for its men.

In order that the Church may meet the need of its aged men, an anonymous gift of a lovely old home with an ample yard in Charlottesville has been made to the diocese; and in consequence of that gift, the Council in 1945 authorized the incorporation of Episcopal Church Home For Men.

A charter has already been issued to Episcopal Church Home For Men; the present officers being Rt. Rev. W. Roy Mason, Charlottesville, president; Dean Ivey F. Lewis, University of Virginia, vice president; Mr. Thomas B. Behrendt, Charlottesville, treasurer, and Mr. John H. Herndon, Charlottesville, secretary. Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, Charlottesville, is chaplain.

BISHOP SHERRILL'S STATEMENT OVER $1,000,000 IN FOUR HOURS

New York, N. Y.—The nationwide radio appeal for world relief made by the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church on February 29, has met with unqualified success. Bishop Sherrill issued the following statement late yesterday:

"With deep gratitude to hundreds of thousands of donors, we have now passed the minimum goal of $1,000,000. However, it should be borne in mind that the need is so great that every additional gift will bring relief to many sufferers throughout the world."

Bishop Sherrill's radio address was carried into thousands of Episcopal churches as a part of their Sunday morning service. It told of needs overseas, both in Europe and the Orient, and urged members of the Episcopal Church to respond to the appeal, which was for a million dollars; this in addition to a million dollars given for the same cause in 1947. It was the first time in the history of broadcasting that such a message was taken, on a country-wide scale, directly into practically all the churches of any religious group.

The present trustees are Bishop Mason, Dean Lewis, Mr. Behrendt, and also Messrs. Archibald G. Robertson, D. McC. Thornton and Rev. Samuel B. Chilton, all of Richmond, and Dr. H. A. Latane and Mr. Albert A. Smoot, both of Alexandria.

The charter of the Home provides for the establishment of a quiet Home in the Diocese of Virginia for elderly clergy and laymen who have served their Master long and well. The Home is intended for those who are without a home of their own, so that they may live in pleasant surroundings in the company of congenial men and enjoy the atmosphere and spirit of a Christian home.

The Home will be managed by a Board of Trustees elected by the Council of the Diocese and representing the several convocations of the diocese. A local Board of Managers in Charlottesville will be in direct charge of the Home and a suitable person will be employed as head of the Home.

The Home is located on Park Street in Charlottesville within easy walking distance of Christ Church, Court House Square, the Public Library and the business section of the city with its stores, movies and bus lines.

At the outset, only such money will be spent as is actually required to make the lovely old residence on Park Street ready for use by not more than ten persons; but plans call eventually for additional buildings and in time the Home could serve all three dioceses in Virginia.

Those who come to the Home will pay a moderate charge sufficient perhaps to maintain the Home until such time when gifts, bequests, and endowment funds make the Home available at less cost to those it seeks to serve.

The immediate need of at least fifteen thousand dollars to make the necessary repairs and conversion of the house to meet the needs of the Home prompts the request that all who read this account and are in sympathy with the undertaking send their donation promptly to the treasurer or to the Bishop of the Diocese.

An attractive brochure has been prepared and will be sent upon request as well as be distributed in the near future.

FOR FURTHERANCE OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM

New York, N. Y.—In calling together the 130 Churches, from all parts of the world, that comprise the World Council of Churches, for its first Assembly in Amsterdam, Holland, in August, the Provisional Committee in charge said:

"The Council stands on faith in our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour and is a fellowship of Churches which accept that faith. It serves the Churches and in no way seeks to legislate for them or control them. It aspires after an expression of unity in which Christians and Christian Churches . . . shall in time of need give help and comfort to one another and at all times inspire and exhort one another to live worthily of their common membership in the Body of Christ. It also seeks increasingly to enable the Churches to take united action for the furtherance of Christ's Kingdom."

DR. KINSOLVING HONORED

Baltimore, Md.—The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., celebrating his 87th birthday recently, received a message of high tribute from the Mayor of Baltimore. The telegram is as follows:

February 20, 1948.

Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving:

Heartiest congratulations on reaching your eighty-seventh milestone in a life filled with Christian ministry. You have been a guide and inspiration to all our citizens, regardless of race, creed or color, and it is my heartfelt prayer that you may be blessed with many more years. You have earned the love and respect of all the people of this city and state and as Mayor of the City of Baltimore, I am happy to greet you on this occasion in behalf of our municipality.

MAYOR THOMAS D'ALESANDRO, JR.

Dr. Kinsolving served as rector of St. Paul's Parish for 36 years, leaving 1,800 communicants in St. Paul's Church and St. Paul's Chapel, and 251 boys in St. Paul's Boys' School.

"THINKER" SERIES AVAILABLE

There are almost two and a half million students now in our United States colleges and universities. How is Christianity to reach these leaders of tomorrow? They are in the very focus of today's conflicts and confusion.

The American Tract Society has 122 years' experience of the power of the printed page in scores of languages, and Lenin, a master propagandist, said: "The sharpest and most powerful weapon of the Communists is the printed page."

Convinced of the power of strong leaflets, the American Tract Society has released three more titles in its new and widely acclaimed "Thinker" series. These messages are presented mostly in the very words of leading scientists and other thinkers: "Spiritual Dynamics," based on the conclusions of Columbia's physicist, Professor Michael Pupin; "I Have Tried God" tells the celebrated U. S. Admiral A. T. Mahan's experience; and "Is the New Testament Wheat and Chaff?" is an account of a spiritual discovery by Philosopher L. P. Jacks of Oxford.

The complete set of seven booklets (ranging from 8 to 32 pages each) is edited by Dr. T. Christie Innes. They will be furnished free, so far as funds permit, to those who can usefully distribute them. Order from American Tract Society, Inc., 21 West 46th St., New York 19, N. Y.

ST. JOHN'S MAKE PAYMENT ON MORTGAGE

New York, N. Y.—St. John's Church, in Greenwich Village, has just paid $20,000 on the principal of its mortgage. On April 1, an additional $5,000, from its financial campaign, will be paid. By the end of this year, a further $4,400 will have been paid, a total of $29,400 in one year.

The rector, the Rev. Charles Howard Graf, and the vestry announce that further payments averaging $11,000 per year will be made until the mortgage has been paid. Unless the large amount had been raised and paid a foreclosure would have resulted. There will be a Service of Thanksgiving on Sunday, April 4, at 11 A. M. Bishop Littell will be the preacher, the rector will be the Celebrant, and Dr. Nutter will assist.

In addition to the usual parochial activities and services, this historic church shows its interest in this artistic community by making available its facilities to the Village Art Center, which shows the work of new artists; a Clay Club for beginners and advanced students; a College of the City of New York modeling class; the stage and auditorium are used by the American National Theater Association (ANTA) for auditions and rehearsals; a canteen for the youth of the neighborhood; and a Camera Club. The Gardens of St. John's are well known in the village.

LEADS IN SEMINARY DRIVE

Richmond, Va.—The Virginia Seminary has an excellent faculty and a wonderful student body of 116 men, 93 of whom were in the armed forces. Its equipment is badly in need of repair and new dormitories must be built. The Seminary turned to the Church for assistance.

A committee of laymen was appointed for the city with two of St. James' men as members, Robert H. Carter as one of the co-chairmen and Braxton Valentine. Then a committee was appointed for the parish, John B. Mordecai, Barbour Thornton and Richard Florence. The men turned to our "Men of St. James" and an opportunity was given to contribute. The result was a gift of $23,855.24 from this congregation.

Dr. Gibson, rector, is a member of the Seminary Board and has been sent from meeting to meeting to bolster the campaign by telling how St. James' did it.

SOCIAL RELATIONS SECRETARY MAKES FIELD TRIP

Attends Conference—Visits Southern States

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. J. Arnold Purdie, assistant secretary of the National Council's Department of Christian Social Relations, has just returned from a field trip which included Cincinnati, New Orleans, Mobile, Alabama and Macon, Georgia.

He reports that the first National Conference of Protestant Homes for the Aged was a most successful venture. It was held in Cincinnati under the sponsorship of the Federal Council of Churches. Of a total registration of 133 from 15 denominations, there were 16 representatives of Episcopal dioceses and homes for the aged. The papers and discussions were concerned with three major topics: social trends and their implications for homes for the aged; problems homes now face; and new frontiers in care of the aged. Among those who presented papers were Dr. D. F. Smiley of the American Medical Association, Miss Rose McHugh of the Social Security Administration, Dr. Robert L. Lang, superintendent of the National Lutheran Home for the Aged in Washington, D. C., Dr. Edward J. Stieglitz of the Suburban Hospital, Bethesda, Md., Miss Mary Wagner, executive director of the Benjamin Rose Institute in Cleveland, and Mr. Purdie.

Questions receiving serious attention included the following: Should chronically ill persons be cared for in homes for the aged? Can a mentally ill resident be maintained in a home? To whom should a home appeal for funds? Should homes accept public funds? What is the place of Church homes? Can these homes be rehabilitation centers for the chronically ill?

In addition to attending the regular sessions of the Conference the Episcopal delegates met together for one session and continued their discussion at a dinner. Those who attended seemed to be thoroughly agreed that the Conference had been worthwhile. As one Episcopal delegate said, "I thought our home was doing very well, but now I see I must go home and get to work."

In the diocese of Louisiana, Mr. Purdie consulted with the Bishop, the chairman of the Department of Christian Social Relations, and others on the basis of which he made recommendations concerning the Department's developing program. The Bishop and the Department are eager to move forward and develop a program which will increase the influence of the Church in the field of Christian Social relations within the Diocese and State of Louisiana.

The Episcopal Church Home (for Children) in Mobile, Ala., has recently changed its name to Wilmer Hall in honor of Bishop Wilmer. While in Mobile Mr. Purdie visited the home and met with the board, and also with the Rev. Francis B. Wakefield, Jr., chairman of the Department of Christian Social Relations. Wilmer Hall has been undergoing considerable reorganization in the past year or two, and under the leadership of Miss Mildred Davis, superintendent, and Mrs. C. P. Armbrecht, president of the Board, the home is making great strides forward in developing a program which will be to the benefit of the children.

A several days' visit at the Appleton Church Home in Macon, Ga., demonstrated that the home had moved steadily forward since its reorganization approximately five years ago. The board is now involved in a re-evaluation of its standards which were set up in written form some years ago and revised in 1944. In connection with this they are evaluating the function of their case work committee. The board is well aware of the fact that the function of the case committee has changed now that the case work is performed by the superintendent. The case work committee is seeking to determine how it can be most helpful to the board and to the home. The children at Appleton are all adolescent girls and every effort is made to relate them to the community.

In Macon, Mr. Purdie also had an opportunity to have one or two brief conferences with the Rev. Stewart Matthews, chairman of the Department, regarding the diocesan program.

Mr. Purdie reports that he returned from the trip with the feeling that the three dioceses he visited are developing a fuller and richer program in the field of Christian Social Relations.

ST. JOHN'S, WYTHEVILLE

Wytheville, Va.—The Rector made an address on the History of the Diocese and especially the Robert E. Lee Memorial Church, Lexington, to the Laymen's League of Rockbridge County in Lexington on March 2.

Our Y. P. S. L. has sent a box of old hymnals to the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs and two boxes filled with various articles to the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Md. Members of the League gave a program on the U. T. O. at the general meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, March 8.

Our Church School has set a goal of $251.00 for its Lenten Mite Box Offering.

Services for children and members of the Church School are held every Friday afternoon and each child is asked to recite a verse from the Bible, giving the reference.

Our choir is in a flourishing condition under Mrs. Everett Hankla's leadership. We have more men than women in the choir at present.

DR. ZIMMERMANN WRITES FROM AUSTRIA

New York, N. Y.,—The Rev. Dr. Bernhard Zimmermann, writing from Gratz, Austria, thanks the Episcopal Church for 20 bundles of clothing, "tokens of your brotherly love which acts according to our Lord's commandment to give also to those not able to repay."

Dr. Zimmermann explains that his congregation, started in 1899, has more than 4,000 souls, scattered over an area of about 40 square miles. The church building was erected in 1914, and was bombed in 1945. The congregation, according to its pastor, "is a growing one, and we have services in four preaching stations beside our own church.

"The task of renovating our church was very difficult. Thanks to God we have accomplished a great deal of it. Before us are a number of other tasks. In the vicinity of our congregation we have to start at least at one place a new parish house. This is a very urgent need, because there live now hundreds of refugees driven out from their homes by the dictators behind the iron curtain. Here is an almost indescribable poverty. But even so strong as the material needs of these poorest of the poor are their spiritual depressions. I am sure nobody of you can imagine really how great the joy of these unhappy people is, when we come to them with token of your Christian love."

EMPLOYER LAYMEN ORDAINED

Albuquerque, N. M.—The recent ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. Edward A. Heffner, M. D., in Belen, N. M., marked the first ordination of a priest by Bishop Stoney and completion of the first step in a program under way in New Mexico and Southwest Texas for provision for a localized ministry in smaller towns and rural areas.

Dr. Heffner, a practicing physician in Belen, revived an inactive congregation there two years ago as a lay reader, and was ordained deacon last May. Under his leadership the congregation has grown to over forty communicants and over seventy baptized persons. His interest in the Church started with his confirmation when he was stationed in England with a medical unit during the war. He plans to continue the practice of medicine in Belen.

Four other men have been ordained deacons within the past year, and others are seeking Holy Orders under this plan. Because of the size and the scattered population of the district, it is expected that the ordination of employed laymen will provide oversight for many areas which cannot support a full time resident clergyman.

COMMITTEES OF POLISH CATHOLIC AND EPISCOPAL CHURCHES MEET

Buffalo, N. Y.—The second joint meeting of the Committees on Intercommunion of the Polish National Catholic Church and of the Protestant Episcopal Church was held on January 14 in the Episcopal Residence of Bishop Jasinski, Buffalo. The first topic was a review of official relations between the Churches. The following resolution was adopted:

We note with gratification that already on two occasions since the establishment of intercommunion between our Churches, Bishops of the Polish National Catholic Church of America have taken part in the consecration of a Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A., and we express the hope that this practice which is in accordance with the historic custom of the Catholic Church may be continued with increasing frequency.

No instances of inter-celebration at the altar were reported. The question was raised, whether the rule of the P. N. C. Church requiring its members to attend a special service of confession before receiving the Sacrament would prove an impediment to members of that Church communicating at a celebration according to the Anglican rite. It was pointed out that in the Anglican rite the confession forms an integral part of every celebration, being placed just before the Sanctus and Prayer of Consecration, rather than in a separate service preceding the celebration. The members of the P. N. C. Committee agreed that this sufficiently met their Church's requirement.

Questions of discipline were next considered. In the matter of marriages between members of the two Churches it was agreed to clarify the recommendation to the previous joint meeting that "the conditions required by both Churches shall be observed," by adding to that sentence the following clause:

"and the priest who is asked to officiate shall notify the pastor of the other party to the marriage and await his reply before proceeding with arrangements."

No transfer of members was reported to the meeting. In one instance where a transfer was suggested, all had agreed that the person concerned, a layman of the P. N. C. Church, should receive full sacramental privileges from the Episcopal Church in the town where he was temporarily resident without giving up his official membership in his home parish of the P. N. C. Church.

It was agreed to clarify the 8th point by adding the following sentence:

"But occasional receiving of Holy Communion in the other Church by a member of either Church in good standing may be permitted as a token of our intercommunion."

Information on the following points was asked by Bishop Jasinski. The answer given is recorded in each case as follows:

What is the status of the Lambeth Conference? Answer: It is not a Synod, but simply a conference of the Bishops holding jurisdiction in Churches of the Anglican Communion.

What is the authority of its resolutions? Answer: None, until adopted by Provincial authority.

Is the Catholic interpretation of the XXXIX Articles the official interpretation? Answer: The Lambeth Conference has stated, and it has been accepted by the Convocations of the Church of England, that "the meaning of the XXXIX Articles must be interpreted in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer."

With what Churches is the Episcopal Church already in intercommunion?

Answer: Only with the other Churches of the Anglican Communion and with the Old Catholic Churches.

Questions concerning doctrinal statements of the P. N. C. Church were asked by members of the Episcopal Church's Committee, and explanations given. A question whether the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception is taught by a petition in the litany on page 232 of the devotional manual Let Us Pray, brought to light the fact that by some error this English version has retained this petition from the litany as used in the Roman Church, but the petition has been deliberately omitted from the official Polish text in The Church Ritual. It is therefore clear that the P. N. C. Church rejects this late Roman doctrine. It was agreed that the next joint meeting should be held the coming October in Pittsburgh, on the kind invitation of Bishop Pardue.

WORLD EXHIBITS

Sacramento, Cal.—Reported highly successful were "Christ for the World" exhibits, in Sacramento and other towns in that diocese. There were exhibits of photographs, textiles, artifacts, native products and handcraft, from Alaska, China, Cuba, the Hawaiian Islands, Japan, Mexico, Panama, the Philippines. Maps portrayed the Church's missionary activities, and appropriately costumed people were on hand to explain the exhibits and distribute literature. Speakers talked on visual aids in Christian education, Evangelism, throughout the world, and in accordance with the Presiding Bishop's suggestions for Lent, religious books for children and parents.

Attendance included clergy and lay people, who had informal conferences with the various speakers during the afternoon and evening periods. Speakers included Miss Charlotte C. Tompkins, Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, Mrs. V. O. Ward. Bishop Noel Porter participated in the devotional services, and Bishop William F. Lewis of Nevada, preached at a missionary service.

APOLOGIES TO BISHOP CONKLING

Chicago, Ill.—After further investigation of the cause of the failure of radio station WBBM, Chicago, to carry Presiding Bishop Sherrill's address on February 29, the station has assumed all responsibility for the failure, in a letter sent to Bishop Wallace E. Conkling of Chicago, dated March 4, and signed by F. B. Falkner, Assistant Manager, Western Office, Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

The letter follows:

"We wish to express our sincere regret for the unfortunate error, made by one of our departments, which resulted in WBBM not broadcasting the Episcopal service at 11:30 A. M. on Sunday, February 29th.

The error was committed by the failure of one of those supposedly "foolproof" systems which has worked perfectly for years, but in this case failed completely.

We hope that you will feel free to avail yourself of a comparable period of time on WBBM at some later date convenient to you and to your Church."

ACCEPTS ALASKAN APPOINTMENT

New York, N. Y.,—The Rev. Samuel A. McPhetres, with Mrs. McPhetres and their three sons, have sailed for Alaska where he will be in charge of the work at Holy Trinity Church, Juneau.

Mr. McPhetres is a graduate of St. John's Theological School, Greeley, Colo. He studied also at Colorado State Teachers College. He served for four years in a missionary territory in the southwest part of Colorado, as large as the State of Massachusetts. He then became rector of the Church of the Covenant, Junction City, Kans., where he has worked until his acceptance of appointment to Alaska. In the diocese of Kansas Mr. McPhetres was chairman of the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Relations, and was a member of the Executive Council. During the war he developed a successful parish program for the benefit of service men stationed at nearby Fort Riley.

TRINITY CHURCH, BOSTON, LARGEST OFFERING

New York, N. Y.—The report of the offering for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief from Trinity Church, Boston, is the largest in amount received from a single parish by the National Council up to March 9. To that date, Trinity's figure was $15,569 with "more coming in."

Presiding Bishop Sherrill was a curate at Trinity before he went overseas as a Chaplain in World War I, and after the war he was made rector, remaining at Trinity from 1923 to 1930 when he became Bishop of Massachusetts. The Rev. Theodore P. Ferris is the present rector of Trinity, having gone there in 1942.

New York, N. Y.—he National Council has word from Bishop J. I. Blair Larned, in charge of American Churches in Europe, and cooperating in Geneva with the World Council of Churches, indicating tha the will leave February 12 for visitions.

Bishop Larned plans to go to Italy and visit the American churches in Florence and Rome, returning to Geneva in March.

Personal Notes

Rev. G. Clayton Melling, rector of St. Mark's Church, Mauch Chunk, Pa., becomes rector of All Saints' Church, Johnson City, N. Y., April 1.

Rev. Bernard C. Newman, rector of St. Peter's Church, Uniontown, Pa., becomes vicar of Trinity Church, New York City, April 1.

Rev. Charles F. Rehkopf, rector of St. John's Church, St. Louis, is serving also as secretary of the Diocese of Missouri, of the Convention and of the Diocesan Council. He may be addressed at 1210 Locust St., St. Louis 3, Mo.

Rev. Aldred D. Snively, formerly in charge of St. John's Church, Athol, Mass., is now associate minister of Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, Mass.

The Ven. Robert S. Snyder, executive secretary of the district of New Mexico and Southwest Texas, is now archdeacon for missions in the district, in addition to his secretarial position.

RESOLUTION
MRS. LORENZO LEWIS

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church, Berryville, wish to express their deep sense of loss, and sincere sorrow in the passing of their beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. Lorenzo Lewis. She was a faithful and devoted member of Grace Church and of the Woman's Auxiliary for many years, deeply interested especially in the missionary work of the church, the missionaries and their work in the Blue Ridge Mountains. She was a personal friend of the missionaries, and one of her greatest joys was the packing and sending of boxes of food, gifts and clothing to help them with their work. She took great interest in the Leper work and in raising money each year for their relief; also she was an interested member of the King's Daughters.

She was the former Miss Rose McCormick, daughter of Col. Francis McCormick and Rosanna Elsey McCormick. She was born at Frankford, Clarke County, and would have been ninety-three years old in July. She was the widow of the late Lorenzo Lewis of Audley, Clarke County.

Her kindly interest and loving ministrations to those she loved made for her a wide circle of friends, who loved and admired her and who will miss her sadly and feel keenly her passing from their midst. One of her greatest pleasures was to have her friends with her in her hospitable home.

Truly, it may be said of her, she "hath fought a good fight, (she) hath finished her course, (she) hath kept the faith—henceforth there hath been laid up for her a crown of Righteousness."

We wish that a copy of these resolutions, expressing our love and appreciation be sent to her family, the Clarke Courier, the Virginia Churchman and the Southern Churchman.

DEATHS

REV. ALEXANDER R. DEWITT

The Rev. Alexander Renshaw DeWitt, rector emeritus of St. James' Church, Muncy, Penn., venerable scholar, columnist and tutor, died in the Muncy Valley Hospital, February 16, at the age of 81.

A lifelong student of languages, Mr. DeWitt read nearly a dozen different ones including many obscure middle-eastern tongues. He was also interested in medicine and mathematics. Graduating from the University of Pennsylvania, he practiced law in Philadelphia before studying for the ministry at the Philadelphia Divinity School.

His first church was Trinity, Antrim, Penn., after which he became rector of St. James Church, Muncy, in 1894, retiring after 29 years in 1923. For many years he wrote a column called The Hermitage. He leaves one son and three grandchildren.

The burial service was read in St. James Church, Muncy, February 18, by Bishop John Thomas Heistand, the Rev. Frederick V. Holmes, rector of St. James, and the Rev. Squire B. Schofield, former rector.

MRS. NELSON PAGE DAME

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Nimmo Walker Dame, 92, widow of the Rev. Dr. Nelson Page Dame, who died Saturday in New York City, were to be held on March 1 at noon in St. Mark's Church, Richmond, Va., with burial in the cemetery of Emanuel Church, Brook Hill.

Mrs. Dame who was born in Richmond, was a daughter of the Rev. Dr. Cornelius Walker, for many years dean of the Virginia Theological Seminary, and Mrs. Margaret Nimmo Walker. During the War Between the States her father was the rector of Emanuel Church, Brook Hill.

Mrs. Dame's husband, who died here in 1945, had been for more than half a century widely known. He had served as the rector of churches in Virginia, Maryland and in New York; he was for more than 25 years general missioner for the Diocese of Virginia.

Mrs. Dame is survived by one daughter, Miss Lelia Dame, of New York City, and by a number of grandchildren.

ting, is a source of strong encouragement.

Even this cursory account of some of the major issues which have raised themselves in the total study, indicate that the recurring theme throughout the four books is the renewal and unity of the Church. In each book there is a vigorous criticism of the present thought and life of the Church; in each also repeated demand for radical renewal. This is undoubtedly the overarching question which the preparatory study will present to the Assembly: can that happen which will bring to the Church the new and vigorous life which God is ready to give us?

Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here; for He is risen, as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.—St. Matthew 28: 5, 6.

Good News of Eastertide

BY THE RT. REV. HENRY KNOX SHERRILL, D. D.

Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church

Dean Inge has rightly told us that the Gospel is not first of all Good Advice but Good News. The first disciples proclaimed an event of the greatest significance. "He is risen." In the entire history of mankind there is no news to compare with this —for here is a fact which has to do with God, eternal life and the destiny of every child of God. To be sure we have known this all our lives. It is a story which is almost two thousand years old and therefore may be presumed to have no news value today. But there is such a thing as having ears and yet not hearing. Sometimes a familiar truth comes to have immediate and vital significance. Death is as old as life, yet when death touches our own, it is a new experience. Sin is venerable but when we are gripped by temptation, it is a battle to be fought and won. So it is with the Good News of Eastertide. If we could only grasp its meaning for our world and for ourselves, all things would be made new. Selfishness would give way, the burden of sorrow and of despair would be lifted. Men would live as the children of God. Here then is Good News. The Lord is risen. He is risen indeed!

Meditations In His Presence

VII. "And Was Incarnate."

(From the Nicene Creed, page 71.)

Or as John has it, "And was made man." This is the central Christian fact. This is the beginning of the Christian revelation. This is the essential Christian belief.

God found man unresponsive, disobedient, separated by a wide chasm, a chasm rifted by man's rebellion, against God's authority and law. Man looked across, yearned across, but was afraid to attempt the leap. Man recognized his own helplessness and frailty, but continued blindly on his own, until God knew His creatures would die of their own contriving unless He crossed the great divide, healed "the great divorce," showed man the way as man.

The greatest game of follow the leader ever played, began the moment God stepped into the womb of a woman and emerged as a man. Jesus was God's manhood. Jesus was man's Godhood. So was God's way fully revealed. God's way became Jesus' way. God's word became Jesus' word. God was indeed in man reconciling the world to Himself. God was man dwelling among men, keeping before them the end result of their becoming, holding out to them the truth about God, the ultimate expectation of God for human life —oneness at last with Himself.

And men, one by one, beheld His glory in Jesus. So Jesus, a man, became for man Christ, a Saviour. But the inward yearning of men for restoration to completeness of life—life within the near presence of God—was not satisfied until they were stopped by Him, listened to His voice, recognized His authority and surrendered in complete love to all they saw of God in Him revealed.

And God became man so that man could become God-like.

J. W. KENNEDY.

GETHSEMANE

In the dark and silent garden,
Prays the Master all alone;
Lost in sleep are His disciples,
Peter, James, beloved John.

Now the prayer and vigil ended,
Goes the Saviour forth again;
Strong to bear the coming trial,
Strong to suffer grief and pain.

So, then on Life's pilgrim journey
I would rest my troubled soul
In the night of deep temptation,
Or when sorrow's billows roll—

Should my dearest hopes forsake me
And the Star of Faith grow dim,
Let us seek the "Man of Sorrows,"
Let us rest and trust in Him.

Jesus, in the hour of anguish
May we always come to Thee;
When the shadows lengthen 'round us
In Life's dark Gethsemane!

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

He Is Risen

By G. MACLAREN BRYDON

The celebration of the Easter festival and season is the high point of the Christian year, the ultimate expression of the conviction upon which Christian faith is based: that God rules; He loves, forgives, restores; and is the rightful Lord of all mankind. It is noteworthy that while the Church takes one supreme day to commemorate the crucifixion and death of the Saviour of mankind it gives a season of forty days to exploring all the meanings of His resurrection.

It goes without saying that to the individual Christian, conscious of the sin and evil of his own life, and his need of forgiveness, the crucifixion and the resurrection are together the full and complete assurance of God's desire and His power to pardon and forgive all who turn to Him. From that point of view Easter is the assurance of the final victory of good over evil; and carries also the confident belief that life goes on through and beyond the incident of death into a fuller and richer experience beyond the veil.

But even from that standpoint, of meaning to the Christian in its relationship to himself and his own faith, the Easter celebration must mean more than can be included under the category of sin forgiven and the gateway opened into life eternal. It must affect and influence his own life here on earth, making it reach out more and more into the joyous realization of the wideness and richness of a life based upon the acceptance of God's guiding and teaching presence. The Christian is not to live in the recollections of past sins forgiven and dead works left behind, nor yet in too eager anticipation of entrance into the life beyond the grave. There is a present earthly life to be lived and a work to be done; a message of faith to be preached to a world that has not yet found its Saviour.

But the message of Easter can never be confined to its meaning in an individual's life. It is God's message to the whole world of men. Just as Advent and Christmas proclaim the coming and birth of the Prince of Peace and Messenger of God's great Plan of salvation, so Easter is the announcement and revelation of the triumphant victory of that Prince and Messenger over the combined and concentrated power of evil. Like His own illustration of the grain of corn that fell into the ground and died, the Jesus who came back from the Cross and tomb came triumphant as conquering and able to conquer all the evil in the world's life.

The essential fact in our faith is that because He has conquered sin He has become the leader of the world of men into a new conception of human life and growth, a conception in which Love reigns and Brotherhood is taught as the end and aim of all human relationships. The Septuagint translation of the Name given to the promised Child in Isaiah's prophecy, (Chapter IX) "His Name shall be called the Messenger of a Great Plan", takes on greater richness of meaning as we rejoice in the presence of the Risen Christ. For God's great Plan of Salvation includes the salvation of all mankind, the breaking of all chains that enslave, whether they be chains of ignorance or disease or sin; and the opening of blinded eyes and unstopping of deafened ears, wherever they are found, by the light of a new and more glorious way of life.

The Resurrection is our authorization for every effort at amelioration of human suffering, the feeding of the hungry and ministering to the needy, "and him that hath no helper". It is also our assurance that our efforts are not in vain. "Ye have done it unto Me", He said.

We look back from the Mount of Resurrection and find that every word which Jesus uttered in His teaching glows with a new light and new power, as we see them fitting into the pattern of a Life which revealed one consistent purpose from its beginning to its end. They are messages to us which have a definite bearing upon the experiences through which our own lives must go. Whether we listen or not, the word of help is there for every time of need. We learn in our own lives to look to Him for the particular things we need, whether restoration to health in illness, or protection of those we love, or forgiveness, or for strength to meet and carry on in face of disaster or loss.

Each recurring Easter season should bring its own particular message to the world of its day, dependent always upon the experiences through which the world is passing at the time. Surely He has a particular message to the world today, and to every believer. We are in the midst of life that is filled with confusion, anxiety and fear. There are so many storms of one kind or another in its every phase, and men's hearts are failing them through terror as they magnify the dangers and forecast the outcome of their fears. It would seem that the message we need today is that which He spoke to the crew in the little boat tossed and floundering in the waves caused by the storm on their little lake: "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

A HYMN

God in Heaven, with love enduring,
Guard and guide our earthly life!
May Thy grace, our strength securing,
Save us in our strenuous strife.

Earth brings ever constant striving.
Earth brings never placid peace.
Let us then, Thy grace deriving,
Fight, fight on 'till life shall cease.

Far away, Thine eyes behold us:
Close at hand, Thy hands reach out.
The mantle of Thy love enfolds us,
By grace we put all foes to rout.

With love and grace of God sustaining,
We rise to hope and confidence;
We consecrate our days remaining;
Accept, O Lord, our penitence!

ROBERT W. BARNWELL, SR.

The Pilgrim Christ

By The REV. FREDERICK WARD KATES

Rector of Christ Church, Oswego, N. Y.

When Cleopas and his unnamed companion and their unrecognized Comrade of the Emmaus road arrived at the village whither they were going, the two disciples almost forcibly compelled Jesus to stay with them. But, the account tells us, "he made as though he would have gone further."

The way it was then is the way it is now. Humanity, if left to itself, would keep the Pilgrim Christ in a cottage, would halt the Pilgrim Christ in His onward progress. But that cannot be, though He will linger for an hour and break and bless the bread of fellowship.

The Great Adventurer is ever on the march, moving forward into new lands, new times, new circumstances. He moves on alone, if His companions lack courage and faith sufficient to follow, but onward He goes. All through the years we can trace His footsteps. The history of Christianity is the story of His adventurings and His pilgrimage down through the years.

Today this same Pilgrim Christ, whom the disciples wanted to detain on His way at Emmaus, is beckoning a laggard, faithless Church to follow His lead. Today, as in other times, the Pilgrim Christ is trying to lead a timid, fearful Church into a new age of adventure and enterprise in His name; but it holds back afraid, and always, we regret to say, it has been so.

The inertia of the Church and its desire to stay where its last leaders left it—isn't this why the Church is void of radiant power in our day?

What is true for the Church at large is true for the Church in its smaller units, the parishes. The leaders of any parish soon become keenly aware of the mountainous task that is theirs in seeking to awaken and to fire a congregation to new endeavors, new enterprises, new methods, new ways of witnessing God's love for man as shown forth in Christ.

The same thing is true for individuals. "Don't disturb me!" people seem to say, when they are challenged to grow in knowledge and in stature and in Christian discipleship. "I've got all the religion I want," they seem to say. "Don't stir me up and make me think and make me enlarge and deepen my faith. I'm all set just the way I am—let well enough alone!"

If trying to wear down such apathy and indifference, such smugness and complacency, is discouraging to those leaders who would lead the Church a step forward, it must be heart-rending to the Christ who is a pilgrim, always on the march, always striding down the road toward the horizon, beckoning those who profess to be His followers to follow His lead.

The danger about a complacent Church, you see, is that the Church will get into a rut—and a rut is nothing but a coffin with the ends knocked-out. It is the job of the leaders of Christ's Cause (God's Purpose), it is the never-ending task of the Pilgrim Christ Himself, to shake us out of the ruts in which we have been traveling for years and years and to set our feet on the high road that heads into the sun. The blunt truth is that a Church which is in a rut is a Church which has lost its heart, and the Church's heart is faith and The Faith.

The hearts of men are sore-troubled these days. You know it as well as I. Men are conscious, vividly, of their lack —God, but they are not turning to the churches to find Him. This is a terrifying fact, for it would seem to indicate that the faith of the Church is dead, at least is not alive with sufficient vigor and compelling radiance to win into its fellowship those of our contemporaries who are floundering about with aching, troubled hearts looking for peace and for God wherein peace only can be found.

Are the churches that dot our land monuments of a once flaming and living faith but a faith that is now moribund or dead? Or, are they still places of God's abode where bruised and weary men may come in their need to draw near to their Heavenly Father, His love to partake, His life to appropriate, His peace to find? The answer to this question depends on the Church which is composed of people like you and me.

We know this for sure, whatever else we may or may not know: that, if we behold with our own eyes that majestic Figure of the Pilgrim Christ and are brave enough to follow His lead, dormant churches will become alive again, complacency will be destroyed, and the Church will once again command the respect of men because it is pulsating with a faith that drives men out into the world to build, to heal, and to bless, in Christ's name.

". . . and he made as though he would have gone further." These are the words which constitute our marching-orders for today.

If we of the Church, if the Church, would go further with Him, the Pilgrim Christ, what will our course be?

First of all, it will be to pay more attention to content than to form. By this we mean the Church will pay more attention to faith and The Faith than to its expression. Not that the latter is unimportant, but it is indeed unimportant when the Church has about vitiated its strength in wranglings over matters of ecclesiastical mechanics, liturgical minutiae, and petty politics. The Church has just about succeeded in dissipating its strength over minor matters, trivial things really, while the main thing, the big thing, has been losing ground—keeping faith alive, making it stronger, brighter, and available to all men.

Those who stay away from the churches these days are in many instances the very persons the Church needs within its fellowship. But they will not come back to the Church or enter its fellowship for the first time, if the Church continues as it is these days. Too much fussiness and not enough faith, too much concern with inconsequential matters and not enough with the things that really count—that's the cause of the Church's disrepute.

"Churchianity" is c o r r o d i n g the Church, but getting down to living Christianity will make it a joyous boon to mankind again. The pettiness of the Church today will be the Church's undoing, a pettiness which springs from a lack of the vision of the Pilgrim Christ and a lack of content and too much fussiness about form.

To move on from pious talk to concrete Christian action—this is the second thing, if we would go along with the Pilgrim Christ who always is making as though He would go further. We've suffered from a plethora of high-sounding resolutions and highminded pronouncements. It's about time that talk ceased and action began.

The Early Church didn't waste any more time than was necessary in meetings, conventions, committee deliberations, and time-consuming conclaves. It had too much to do to fritter away precious time in such futile and fatuous ways. There was a whole world to redeem and so little time in which to do it, those early Christians felt; but we somehow seem to feel, even with atomic bombs suspended over our heads, that there's no hurry, that we can do just as well tomorrow or the next day or year what desperately cries out to be done right now.

The Church is wasting away its energy, its force, its life, in inane confabs and vapid talk. If the Church would act as though it would go further, let it be done with the talking about Christianity and get on with the living of Christianity.

Thirdly, introversion curses the Church today. It is a blight that is wreaking the same damage on the Church as it works on an individual personality.

We're looking too much at ourselves, within ourselves. We're overly concerned with within-the-family matters. The emphasis is misplaced. The Church will save and win its life, if it is daring enough to lose it. But the way we're going, the Church is rapidly losing its life and its soul by succumbing to introversion rather than looking the other way—outward and beyond.

Finally, if we, the Church, would go further, let's set our sights on the Pilgrim Christ of the Emmaus Road, not on the Christ portrayed in the stained-glass windows of your church and mine.

Nothing can save the Church today, nothing can get it out of the rut in which it is smugly plodding, nothing can bring it to life again and make it equal to its task, but the power that created it. And that power is not likely to be found in a church-convention or a committee-session. The widespread dissatisfaction with the Church today may well be divinely-intended to drive it from secondary pursuits and irrelevant activity to the central thing, the source of Christian consecration and conquest —the Risen Christ Himself.

"The Galilean has been too great for our small hearts—that is exactly the truth." Who will gainsay these words of the late Dick Sheppard of St. Martin's in the Field, Trafalgar Square, London?

But the time has come, and we are glad of it, when mankind demands a demonstration of a higher type of Christianity than it has been accustomed to—a Christianity that is more magnanimous, more self-forgetting, more daring, more heroic, and more Christlike. The hour has struck when an adventurous Church must set out upon the high road marching in its Leader's steps, the Pilgrim Christ, or die a miserable, cowardly death despised by men it exists to save.

". . . and he made as though he would have gone further." Are we as individuals, is our parish, is the Episcopal Church, is the world-wide Christian Church ready to follow the Pilgrim Christ's lead?

Patience And Firmness

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

It is now apparent that Mr. Henry Wallace will secure the support of many more people than at first seemed probable. It is not my interest to speculate upon the various reasons for his popular appeal but to center upon just one of them.

Many people, who are not Communists, believe that it ought somehow to be possible to "get along with the Russians." They are afraid that the policy which Wallace defines as the "get tough with Russia" program will lead to war. They will therefore support the Wallace candidacy.

While I am certain that Mr. Wallace is wrong in imagining that we could reach a fairly simple accord with Russia if we only tried, it seems to me that there is something to be said for the sentiment of those who support Wallace. That something is that we ought to be as patient as we are firm.

The kind of patience which is required is not easy to achieve when one deals with a truculent foe. Every new advance, as for instance the recent coup in Czechoslovakia, arouses us to a new fever of anti-Russian sentiment.

It is not at all unlikely that the Communists may win an electoral victory in Italy this spring; we may expect a new wave of hysteria at that time. I doubt whether the note of hysteria in our attitude is a good thing for us or for the peace of the world.

We cannot afford to relax our firmness. It is important that we seek to restore economic and political health to western Europe and thus save it from Communist inundation. Until this is achieved, the Communists will remain truculent, because they believe that they have a method by which they can scare us, as they have scared the democratic forces of Czechoslovakia into submission. If we hold firm and succeed in saving western Europe, the truculence of the Communists may well be mitigated.. It may become possible to bargain with them.

But if we meet hysteria with hysteria we may well drift into a situation in which all bargaining will become impossible and where only a conflict will resolve the tension. Whatever the motives of the Communist oligarchy (and its motives are probably mixed) one cannot but suspect that fear is one of them.

They are genuinely afraid of us and their bluster is partly meant to hide their fears. It would be a very healthy thing if we could alleviate those fears even while we make it quite clear that we will not retreat before Communist expansion.

It is one of the weaknesses of democracy in foreign policy that there is always a danger that the general public will become complacent in regard to the perils in which the nation lives. The military leaders are therefore tempted to exaggerate the dangers in order to keep the public on its toes.

The world situation has become so grave in recent months and the outlook for the future is so bleak that we must summon every resource of mind and heart if we are to survive. We cannot afford to follow Mr. Wallace's confused counsel; but we can afford to strive for the patience and good will which he desires and relate it to a policy of firmness.

EPISODES

New York, N. Y.—The Presiding Bishop's radio address brought a by-product of episodes ranging from the pathetic to the hilarious. Just two of them here:

At Christ Church, Glendale, Ohio, where the Rev. J. E. Clarke is rector, he and some of the men of the congregation were not convinced of the infallability of radio receivers and loudspeakers, and they were determined that there should be no slip in reception of Bishop Sherrill's message. They worked out this ingenious scheme; one of the men brought his portable radio set to church, tuned it in very softly to the local station which was to carry the broadcast, and parked it under his pew, ready to be stepped up to full volume at any instant, should the regular installation falter or fail. The parish, with 397 communicants, gave $4,146.

And on the other side, a bishop wrote

The Order On The March

By The VEN. FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Twenty-seven years ago the Order of the Thousandfold was founded and there has been plenty of time to grasp its full meaning. In its early days it was regarded by many as an impossibility. In fact I was advised to make it a hundredfold instead of a thousandfold, as being more reasonable. It may be that some, if not many, regard it in this light now. It seems to be wise therefore, to try and make perfectly clear the real meaning of the Order as I understand it.

I should like to use St. Paul as an illustration of the real meaning of the Order. He, above all other men recorded in history may be regarded as the ideal Thousandfold man. For quite apart from the wonderful work which he did as a missionary during his lifetime there are his Epistles which have come down to us for nearly two thousand years and have influenced the lives of hundreds of millions of human beings, and will continue to influence the lives of hundreds of millions of others down to the end of time. And yet, what did this man say about himself and about the work he had accomplished? In his Epistle to the Ephesians he says, "I can of mine own self do nothing". This is equivalent to placing after his name a zero mark. How can we account for this apparently mistaken appraisal of himself and his work? Fortunately, the most reasonable and at the same time the most satisfactory explanation of his words above quoted is to be found in certain other remarkable words of his. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me. (Phillipians, 4:13.) Nothing and all things are the exact opposite of each other, but regarding St. Paul as the medium through which Christ has worked and is still working, a new light is thrown upon the way by which Christianity can and will conquer the world.

One would have thought that Saul of Tarsus would be the last person whom Christ would have chosen as one of the greatest of His Apostles and the medium through whom He could best work in saving the world. He was one of the chief enemies of Christianity and at the very moment when Christ called him he was on his way to Damascus to bring any Christians he might find there back to Jerusalem to be condemmed to death or imprisonment by the chief priests as many had already been thus dealt with. How was it that Saul of Tarsus, in spite of his antecedents, became such a marvelous instrument in the hands of Christ for the spread of His Kingdom? It was, doubtless that one of the chief results of his conversion was his consciousness of such utter unworthiness that he entirely depended upon Christ's Presence and Power to accomplish everything for him. This was coupled with a strong faith which enabled him to believe that Christ could do everything that He chose to do through him.

Humility and Faith, when closely united can accomplish great wonders for Christ Himself, has said, "All things are possible to him that believeth", and also, when He had taken a little child and set him in their midst, He said, "Whosoever shall humble himself as this little child the same is greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven", and we find in St. Paul both faith and humility as his outstanding characteristics.

Christ has shown us by what He was able to do through St. Paul the possibilities involved in the life and work of a single individual; how much vaster must be the possibilities involved in what Christ can do through the members of His Church when they are entirely willing to be used by Him as His Body the fullness of Him that filleth all in all. St. Paul tells us that he prayed for the Ephesian Church and in that prayer we find the following words, "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened that ye may know—what is the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe, according to the working of His Mighty Power, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places.

The knowledge of the Divine Power as an actual experience St. Paul evidently considered to be an essential part of the equipment which every Church ought to possess if she was to be able to fulfill the Divine Purpose for which she was created.

What greater work could be done by a Christian minister than by teaching his people to realize the possibilities inherent in their being members of the Body of Christ through which Christ is seeking to bring the world into His Kingdom. St. Paul has written in his Epistle to the Romans, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ for it is the Power of God unto Salvation to every one that believeth". He was conscious that God was working with him and that the Power of God was being manifested in what he was doing. Christian ministers should be also conscious of the exceeding greatness of the power which should be possessed by every Christian believer to enable him or her to do great things for Christ and he should encourage them to depend upon the use of this power to make their Christian life really effective. St. Paul also says, "Unto me who am less than the least of all the saints is this grace given that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ". Preaching according to him is a supernatural act requiring the special grace of God to make known to men the mysteries of the Faith. In fact, he expressly states that the clergy in their various degrees are the gift of Christ to His Church for the perfecting of the saints for the edifying (the building up) of the Body of Christ till we all come in the unity of the Faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ".

The word Thousandfold was not intended by me to set any limit to the power which Christ can use in making use of any one of the members of His Body in the upbuilding of His Kingdom. There are many instances in the history of His Church to show that He actually did use many others besides St. Paul to go far beyond the Thousandfold limit in His use of them, even though they may have been entirely unconscious of the extent to which they were being used.

The present condition of the world thus seems to clearly indicate that the members of the Body of Christ are very very far from realizing what inspired St. Paul to accomplish the great work which he did, namely: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me".

SONG OF THE ORDER OF THE THOUSANDFOLD

Knights of the Order of the Thousandfold,
What is there God wants done, thou can'st not do?
The mighty deeds of faith once wrought of old
Thou can'st today renew.

Why wait for some "far-off Divine event"?
The present hour doth claim thine utmost zeal.
Go forth with the belief that thou art sent
To make Christ's promise real:

His promise,* that by faith thou mayest do

Easter

They went that bleak morning in the cold dawn expecting to find quiet death and a tomb. They found a grave burst open and one who said to them, "Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

Strangely, we still seek the Living Christ among the dead! We push Easter into the land of death. Perhaps this is because every man longs to pierce that iron curtain which veils this life from the life that is to come. Now Easter does confirm our faith in the reality of a future life. Jesus truly died upon the cross. One of the soldiers that dread afternoon thrust his spear into Christ's side to be certain that He was dead. Like the tolling of a bell, the creed states the facts: "Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried!" Yet on Easter morn Mary met Him in the garden and with a song in her voice told the others, "I have seen the Lord!"

But we have not fully understood Easter if we think of it only in terms of immortality. Jesus need not have risen from the dead to grant us faith in the future life. Did He not say, "In My Father's house are many mansions. . . . If it were not so, I would have told you!" Easter is not just an epilogue to life, but a new kind of life. The Easter keynote is not "immortality" but "resurrection," or rebirth here and now! It is not only that God grants us victory over our fear of death, but He grants us victory here and now over those forces which daily kill a man's spirit.

We live in a time of world pessimism, moral anarchy, and personal disillusionment. In the grim perplexities of life, is there any word from the Lord? Are the demoniac forces of evil in the world to mock all our dreams and ideals? Has Christianity failed?

Hear the words of the Apostle Paul, "To this day the entire creation sighs and throbs with pain. And we, who have within us the first-fruits of God's spirit, we, too, groan in ourselves. What then shall we say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" In the black night of its soul, the world despairs of the dawn. But the Christian is one who in the midnight darkness has caught a glimpse of the ultimate victory of God!

Is this just pious wishful thinking? We believe this because Jesus Christ rose from the dead! The resurrection of our Lord is our proof of the omnipotence of God. It was not just the escape of Jesus from a grave. It was the victory of God in the conflict between good and evil, between darkness and light. The concentrated power of evil tried to destroy Jesus. "The powers of death did their worst!" But God took all the brunt of evil and came back in triumph! That is the heart of Easter. On Easter Day we see in one tremendous moment the power and the unshakable purpose of Almighty God. Easter is the vindication of God. It is the declaration for all men to see that the heart of the universe is good.

Thus Easter gives direction for a new kind of living. Canon Symons suggests that resurrection should also mean insurrection. To rise again means also to rise against! That was the spirit of the early Church. In a world falling to pieces, they emerged with a plan. They were insurrectionists! They fought with passion against ignorance, lust, privilege and greed. They were revolutionaries fighting that God's will might be done on earth as it is in heaven.

And we? Someone has wryly said that we are the resolutionary sons of revolutionary fathers. They fought. We pass resolutions. May Easter, the day of the Living God, rouse His Church from its complacency and apathy. How many of us who wear crosses daily would like to face the piercing gaze of the crucified and risen Christ? He would soon probe the difference between our profession of faith and our daily practice. He would blaze out against those who think more of Easter finery than of Easter faith. He would tear aside our interest in personal privilege and custom and bare the social injustice, the prejudices and the evil we carry complacently in our hearts.

The Living Christ? But He is living! That's the Easter message. Dare we call ourselves by His name if we be not risen with Him? May the splendor of the Living Christ break into our poor faltering lives this Easter and smite us with the glory of His Resurrection!

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

TOMORROW IS HERE. By Kenneth Scott Latourette and W. Richy Hogg. Friendship Press. $1.50. Paper, 90c.

It is no exaggeration to say that every clergyman, every layman who is eager to advance the cause of the Church, every woman who wants to enter into the spirit of the world mission of Christianity, should read a slender, but thrilling, volume of 140 pages, entitled "Tomorrow Is Here" (New York; Friendship Press, $1.50, on paper 90 cents). Its authors, the famous historian, Professor Kenneth Scott Latourette of Yale and W. Richey Hogg, who is preparing at Yale for missionary service in China, tell the story of last summer's Whitby Conference of the International Missionary Council. But they do more than that. They succeed, for example, in transporting the reader to the opening service of Holy Communion, at which the celebrant was Archbishop Mowll, of Australia, assisted by Bishop Robin Chen, of China, the Rev. R. O. C. King, a West Indian Negro, and the Rev. Mahmood Rezavi, a Persian convert from Islam. They summarize vivid reports of existing conditions as told by carefully picked delegates from forty countries in Europe, Asia, Africa, the Americas and Australasia, and add word pictures of some who gave personal testimony to their conversion and faith. They describe the eternal Gospel as it was reinterpreted by some of "the best minds of the younger and older churches" to those 120 modern apostles, among whom were several who had lived through the tortures of war in Japanese prisons, or Nazi concentration camps, or had followed in the wake of Bataan's "Death March." They go on to remind us that the task which confronts the churches of the world is one. "The Commission to that task is one, spoken to all who name the name of Christ." They demonstrate that Whitby discovered the existence of a new and exacting partnership in obedience to God's will on the part of the younger and older churches of the world. So in an accomplished mutuality, those 120 representatives of churches and national missionary organizations from forty lands undertook to outline a single program for carrying the Gospel to the whole world. In the face of an unprecedented massing of forces opposed to Christianity, expectant evangelism, they said, is the one, immediate, supreme challenge confronting the whole Church today. The tasks ahead, as described by the authors, are almost breathtaking. "We must seek the evangelization of the entire world in this generation," the Whitby conference agreed. This stimulating, yet inexpensive, book shows how to go about it. Get it, read it, and discuss its contents with others.

RELIGION IN THE 20TH CENTURY. Edited by Vergilius Ferm. Philosophical Library. $5.00.

It is hard to realize how many religions are in competition with one's own brand. There are at least 28 of them summarized by experts in this helpful volume. There are the familiar ones, such as Hinduism, Zoroastrianism, Buddhism, Shinto, and the others. The various brands of protestantism and Catholicism are represented, with Norman Pittenger writing on Anglo-Catholicism. Then there are the Mormons, Christian Scientists, Bahai, Jehovah's Witnesses, Ethical Culturists, and others, ending with Reconstructionism. It is a fascinating account, and within this variegated network the editor hopes to find a basis for one religion for one world. But Dr. Ferm makes his point clear when he shows that there is as much variety within any one religion as there is between religions. The only missing "religion" of consequence is Communism.

WHOM THEY PIERCED. By Mervyn Stockwood. Longmans, Green. $1.25.

The Bishop of London's Lent Book deals with the practical implications of the Cross, trying to discover the difference which Calvary makes in our lives, and using a devotional approach. It is written simply and with plenty of illustrative insights, and should be helpful to American readers.

CAN WE BELIEVE IN GOD? By Gardiner M. Day. Cloister Press. Paper, 75 cents.

In a series of simple sermons, Dr. Day takes the reader from the simple assertion of belief in God through the major problems of the right religious adjustment to the God of Jesus Christ, and ending with the victory of faith. This is an example of convincing teaching sermons.

PILGRIMAGE TO AMSTERDAM. By H. G. G. Herklots and Henry Smith Leiper. Morehouse-Gorham. Paper, $1.00.

One of the most important events in the history of 20th century Christianity will take place next summer in Amsterdam. It will be the first assembly of the World Council of Churches, and every Christian needs to understand the background, the success, and the hopes of the ecumenical movement. We need to build the word, "ecumenical," into our vocabulary, for it means "throughout the inhabited earth," or "universal," or "catholic." The major topic for this first great assembly of Christians from churches throughout the inhabited earth is "Man's Disorder and God's Design," and the study program has been arranged by Professor John Bennett of Union Seminary, who spent many months in Geneva on this task. Canon Herklots and Dr. Leiper have arranged this material so that the layman can easily get the significance of what is happening, and then there is a final chapter listing the assets of American Christianity for our share in the task. Not many of us will attend the assembly in person (Bishop Sherrill, Bishop Dun, Charles Taft, and Dean Nes are the official delegates), but all of us should make a spiritual pilgrimage, being prepared in mind and spirit for the support of this great undertaking.

SAINT'S LIVES AND CHRONICLES IN EARLY ENGLAND. By Charles W. Jones, Ithica, N. Y., Cornell University Press, 1947. $3.00.

It is surprising how little is known about England prior to 1066. The period was an important one in the formation of the English nation and its people and yet virtually nothing is known of it. Professor Jones has given us, in this volume a comprehensive survey of the history and literature of that period. His translations of "The Oldest Life of Pope St. Gregory the Great," by a monk of Whitby and "The Life of St. Guthlac of Crowland," by Felix, which are included in full in this volume make readily available these little known but important works which give us a flavor of Medieval England.

Professor Jones narrates and illustrates the gradual emergence of Medieval and "Romance" culture out of the chaos of the Dark Ages, showing how it was developed out of the needs of monastaries which led to a renewal of interest in mathematics and literature in order to develop an accurate calendar which became the foundation of subsequent learning. Strangely enough it was the choirmaster who was responsible for this renascence of study because he needed to be able to find out what saint was to be remembered at the daily services. Particularly interesting is the chapter on the development of Hagiography, the biography of the Saints. Those accounts sound utterly fantastic to modern ears, the biography of St. Guthlac for example, is filled with events of such miraculous nature that it seems impossible that they could have been written by mature, devout, and serious men, but as the author reminds us it was an expression of the age of Romance. One understands from this book why and how these stories were written and what they meant to convey to their reader.

There is a wealth of interesting facts in this book, for example we learn that the famous story of St. Gregory and the English Slave boys which gave that great Pope the incentive to send Boniface to England as a missionary to England, was in its earliest form the account of the visit of several English Princes to Rome on a "grand tour."

In general, however, while the book is interesting to read it is technical and involved and will probably not appeal to the general reader but will take its place as one of the great source books for early English history.

EASTERTIDE GREETINGS

But a short while ago, we were celebrating the birth of Christ, of whom Zacharias said, ". . . the dayspring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."

The dayspring is the first flush of light which sprays the eastern horizon before the solid orb of the sun rises into view. How aptly this figure fits! Christ did not burst upon the world in the full splendor of the sun. Thirty years were to elapse after Bethlehem before He was to become known even to His own people. And even after Jesus began to teach, the full light of His Gospel did not break upon His listeners. It took a resurrection morn to reveal His real significance and inspire His followers to hail Him as the Light of the world. Neither death nor all the powers of evil could hold the Light of the World imprisoned in the tomb. The shades of death were pierced, and trembling chaos fled before the rising sun.

To those sitting in the darkness of ignorance and superstition, physical, mental and spiritual illness, the Galilean gave healing light and truth. To those in the shadow of death, "He brought life and immortality to life, through the Gospel." And to a world fearful of the shadows of war, He offers guidance into the way of peace. In the words of General Smuts, "Fundamentally, the world has no need of a new order or a new plan, but only of an honest and courageous application of the historic Christian idea . . . The love for God and man is the final answer to all the unsolved questions of the ages." The risen Christ, the Light of our world, shows us the way to peace.

To paraphrase a poem of John Masefield, may the Light comfort you, gladden you, and bless you; may this Light fill your years and make you lighten the world.

Prayer for the Whole State of Christ's Church

The next all inclusive paragraph asking "for Thy heavenly grace" for "all Thy people", "especially this congregation here present" was at one time very much longer than it is now. This prayer originally was a part of the consecration prayer, and so at this point it included a special petition for those about to receive the Holy Communion. This was eliminated when it was moved and placed as an introduction to the Communion Service. It still looks forward to all of life for those present.

The next clause, although very brief is also all embracive, and affords a fine opportunity for intercessory prayer for the whole congregation.

The clergyman who is wise will pause for more than the ordinary space as he reads the various kinds of trouble that may come to us in this "transitory life". In doing so it will give an occasion for persons to think especially and lovingly of their friends who are in "trouble"; they may then pass to those in bereavement; the next word usually applies to material misfortune which brings "need".

The word "sickness" offers the opportunity to think of the healing power of prayer, and to exercise this gift for the benefit of our friends.

Surely there is no better way to prepare one's self for the Holy Communion than to assemble a little group of one's friends under these various categories, and to send up loving petitions for them according to their various needs.

Someone has said that the truest service of God is the service of man, and surely when we are asking for an outpouring of God's helpful power to those who particularly require it we are rendering them a real service.

FOR A NEW WORLD ORDER

O Lord Jesus Christ, who biddest Thy Church to bring all men to Thyself and to make all mankind one family in Thee, make clear to each one of us his part in the task. Fire our minds with a vision of a more perfect society here on earth in which justice and right, peace and brotherhood shall reign according to Thy will; and help us, each one, O Lord, to do our part, that Thy will may be done on earth as it is in heaven. Amen.

THE SWIFT MOVING DRAMA

The last few days of Our Lord's Life was a swift moving drama. Each year one realizes more fully the depth of the tragedy and the triumph.

The Three Hour Service is one many of our Protestant and Roman Catholic friends share with us. Here, apart from the world we pray, sing, and meditate on the "Seven Last Words".

Before we come to the Service we read over the drama of the hours before His death. We know His last Supper, His agony in the Garden, His betrayal, His trial, His death march, and His being nailed to the Cross.

Each year we share the experience He had with His companions on the Cross, His mother, disciples, friends and enemies.

His end came and He is buried. Then His friends discover His Tomb is empty, but "Jesus Christ is risen".

Each time we say the Creed I wonder if we realize the agonizing experience He had. It is easy to say these words, as we know why they are. But this does not take from His pain which was endured for others.

Let us try to make the words of the Creed meaningful for our boys and girls. Too many think "Pontius Pilate" is a place. They know that "Jesus Christ is risen" because they have been singing this ever since they can remember any hymn. Junior boys and girls upward can learn to know the real meaning behind all of this. The younger ones can not understand about the Crucifixion. They know that Jesus died but lives again. This is all they need to know.

As we think about these days and those that follow let us reread the Gospels ourselves, and to our family. Let us make it a story which they will know as well as some of the heroes in the funny papers.

Our Junior boys and girls and upwards can understand about people doing something for others instead of for themselves. They are starting to be hero worshippers. Why not have them realize what Jesus did and why? The "and why" is the important part. Here is one concrete way we can start them to realize that everyone is put here in this world to do for others first before he considers himself. This will help to counteract some of our secular ideology "What can I get out of it?"

Let us know this fast moving drama. Let us share with our boys and girls, our office friends, and with the whole world.

ANKING CLERGY MEET AFTER TEN YEARS

Anking, China.—The Clery Conference of the District of Anking, China, held in Wuhu from March 3-8, 1948, brought together a group which has been unable to meet for the last ten years. The Diocesan Synod was planned to convene in Anking last fall, but had to be suddenly cancelled due to the Communist threat to the city. It was therefore all the greater cause for thanksgiving that at this time all the active clergy of the District except two, 18 in number, as well as eight women parish workers, could assemble. Some of the delegates had to spend as much as ten days in travel to reach Wuhu, due to the chaotic conditions of the present time, while several arrived almost exhausted from the difficulties of the journey.

They were amply repaid for any hardships of travel, however, by the five days of the conference, planned under the inspiring leadership of the Rt. Rev. Robin Chen, assistant bishop of the District. Each morning he led the group in meditations on the general subject of the Revolutionary Character of the Christian Message, showing in a series of stirring addresses how in the teachings of Our Lord lies the one hope of bringing about the kind of changed order which will save the world. These meditations were followed by various subjects, presented by leaders chosen from the Conference, and followed by discussion. The subjects treated were "Preparation of Church Members," "Aim of the Sunday School and How to Find and Train Teachers," "The Spiritual Life of the Parish," and "Youth Work."

In addition three specialists were invited to present subjects in their particular fields of interest. The Rev. Victor Hayward, a secretary of the National Christian Council, gave some unusually fine addresses on "The Forward Movement in the Churches of China," as well as on the whole ecumenical movement. His audience was deeply impressed not only by his message but by his remarkable command of the Chinese language. Miss T. C. Kuan, a professor in the Nanking Theological Seminary, gave a series of talks on the "Christian Home," being especially well-fitted for this subject by her years as secretary for Christian Homes in the National Christian Council. Mr. M. G. Swen, of the faculty of Nanking University, in the Department of Audio-Visual Education, lectured on that subject and demonstrated the use of film strips with a projector.

One of the great and intangible blessings of these days was the fellowship made possible by the group living together in the Pei Teh School for Girls, where they were given care and hospitality by the principal, Miss Faith Liu. One of the clergymen who attended had not been absent from his parish except for a few weeks in the last eighteen years. They all arrived eager for help and hungry for the inspiration which such a conference could give. They realize that unknown dangers are certain to lie ahead. Three of the clergy are already refugees from Communist-held cities. It was, therefore, a time for deep heart-searching and an earnest reaching out for the spiritual strength not only to maintain what has been already achieved but to go forward in Christian endeavor. Again and again came the reassurance that the work of the Kingdom does not depend upon temples made with hands, nor can the might of military force quench the Spirit. The persecution of the early Christian Church never succeeded in stopping the spread of the Gospel. With such confidence that "If God is for us, who can be against us?" these leaders of the Church have returned to their various posts of duty with, we believe, new courage and deepened faith.

Is It Easter Today?

Dean T. C. Chao, of the School of Theology, Yanching University, Peking, China, was for many months a prisoner of the Japanese in Peking during the war years; part of the time he was in solitary confinement. According to Professor Bliss Wiant, of the Yenching faculty, Dean Chao composed some 130 hymns and poems during his confinement. Without paper or pencil, he committed his verses to memory, and upon his liberation spent several days in writing them down in the Chinese in which they were composed. It is planned to set some of the hymns to Chinese music and some may be translated into English.

On an Easter Sunday, in his cell, Dean Chao wrote a verse of which he himself gives this free English translation:

"Is it Easter today?
I am not sure, but I hear
The bell of the Northern Temple.
Too late the prisoner worships.
The grave is open
And death is conquered,
The dragon is chained . . .
But who, my God, lets him loose again?"

E. H. S. ELECTS RICHARD P. WILLIAMS PRINCIPAL

Alexandria, Va.—Mr. Richard P. Williams, Jr., member of the Episcopal High School teaching staff since 1908 and acting principal since July 1, 1947, was elected school principal today by the unanimous vote of the Board of Trustees.

Mr. Williams was born 62 years ago in Richmond, Virginia. He is an honor graduate of Episcopal High and the University of Virginia and served as Captain of Infantry in the A. E. F. in World War I.

He has served as head of the Latin and Greek Department at E. H. S. throughout his service on the Faculty, with the exception of his two years of leave of absence in 1917-1919.

While a student at E. H. S., he served as editor-in-chief of the Monthly Chronicle, the Episcopal school paper, and was winner of several prizes for scholarship, literary ability and debating. He was also on the board of the annual.

At the University of Virginia, where he was a student from 1904 through 1908, he took his B. A. and M. A. degrees. He was a member of the advisory board of the general athletic association, of Sigma Alpha Epsilen, Greek letter fraternity, and of Lambda Pi. Mr. Williams was elected to the Phi Beta Kappa and the Raven Society.

On July 17, 1919, Mr. Williams married Miss Gertrude Athlyn Bass of Powellsville, N. C. They have three children, R. P. Williams, III, student at the University of Virginia law school; Frank Bass Williams, manager of the Baltimore office of the Pan-American Airways, and Athlyn C. Williams, of Episcopal High School.

BISHOP OLDHAM, BACK FROM AUSTRALIA, STRESSES NEED

Narrow Escape in Airplane Accident

Albany, N. Y.—Australia's need for friendly relations with the United States was outlined by the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, bishop of the Diocese of Albany, who is back from a three-months' trip in the Pacific islands as a representative of his Church to the centenary celebration of the Anglican dioceses of Adelaide, Newcastle and Melbourne.

"The Australians feel they must keep their ties with Great Britain," he said; "but they also feel that favorable relations with the United States are essential to their economy. They know that they cannot stand alone.

" I was told by Church leaders there are but six million persons in Australia, while the country needs, and could support, twenty or thirty millions."

Bishop and Mrs. Oldham were among 35 persons aboard a crippled airliner which landed safely after flying 380 miles across the Tasman Sea with one of its four engines dead. Bishop Oldham said there was no formal prayer among the passengers, but "you can take it from me that we all were thankful to the Lord that we got out of it."

Mrs. Oldham said that she and her husband lost all their possessions when the crew jettisoned about 2,000 pounds of baggage and freight in order that the plane might gain altitude.

CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES MUST IMPLEMENT ERP

John Foster Dulles and Bishop Dun Speak at Cathedral Open Meeting

Washington, D. C.—A European Recovery Program which carries on the great American tradition of creative moral effort was urged, March 11, upon the American people by John Foster Dulles, chairman of the Committee on Policy, Department of International Justice and Goodwill Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, speaking at an open meeting on the churches' relation to ERP, held in Washington Cathedral under the sponsorship of the Federal Council in cooperation with the Washington Federation of Churches. The Secretary of State and the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, Bishop of Washington, spoke on the same general theme. Bishop John S. Stamm, vice-president of the Federal Council and bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church, presided.

President and Mrs. Truman, Secretary Forrestal, Justice Douglas, and other high ranking government officials, as well as National leaders of many Protestants denominations attended the meeting.

"The European Recovery Plan," Mr. Dulles said, "can and will be also an American Recovery Plan if it evokes vision and sacrificial effort such as enabled our founders to make our nation great."

Warning against fearful or violent reaction to the Soviet challenge, the speaker said, "The need is for the free societies to act constructively, creatively, and, above all, quickly to reassert political and economic vigor and moral strength." The European Recovery Program, which envisages a new unity for some 200 million people, "fits that prescription."

Stressing the concern of Christian leaders for European unity and for American aid to those in need, Mr. Dulles stated, "The United States is today a paradise compared to most of the world, but it will be a fool's paradise if we do not make honest, substantial efforts to help others to lift themselves out of the morass into which they have fallen." He further spoke of two dangers which must be avoided if the churches' concern that the plan should "bear the hall-mark of moral greatness" is to be met. "One danger is that the European Recovery Program may be adopted so grudgingly that, in fact, it will show us to be picayune. . . . A second danger is that the European Recovery Program should develop a spirit of war." Urging that the nation be "self-controlled for peace," Mr. Dulles said, "We would not want the European Recovery Program if it can be had only through exciting such war hysteria as would make more likely a disaster so awful as a third world war."

Mr. Dulles described the sense of mission for human freedom and welfare which motivated the founders of our nation and which contributed to national safety at a time of national weakness. He called for a return to those "Christians ideals which inspired our founders." He also summarized the efforts of church groups in recent years to put the "impress of Christian thinking upon the life of nations," first in regard to the United Nations and more recently in regard to European Recovery.

Bishop Dun, later welcoming the other speakers, lay and religious representatives, and the other members of the congregation, defined the meeting as a gathering of "Christian people seeking to discover the purpose of God for ourselves and for our nation."

"By the faith we share," he said, "we are constrained to acknowledge that before God English men and French men and Greek men and Chinese men, yes, German men and Russian men, are as important to God as we are . . . By the faith we share we are constrained to see in the terrifying interrelatedness of the world's peoples, God's purpose for us. . . . We cannot stand apart as an island of secure privilege; nor can we stand apart in moral superiority, mistaking the blessings of God's mysterious Providence as the marks of self-achieved virtue."

"God forbid that we should be so niggardly, so guarding of our abundance that we delay until it is too late and do half-heartedly what needs to be done whole-heartedly. We have been whole-hearted in the terrible works of war. Shall we be half-hearted in the rebuilding of our broken world?

"We say we love freedom, and we say well; then let us work with a united and ready will to set free our brothers in Europe whose energies and hopes and powers of spirit are imprisoned by hunger and by lack of the tools of labor, and by fear. And in all that we do, let it be made clear that we act in enmity against no nation or people, but that in the words of one who is with us together we strive 'against hunger, poverty, desperation and chaos.'

"In that warfare, we can be assured that God is with us. To that warfare we can with a clear conscience summon the Christian people of this land."

Dr. Glenn Speaker At Laymens' Dinner

Savannah, Ga.—The first annual Episcopal Men's dinner was held at the Hotel DeSoto on March 4. The Rev. G. Leslie Glenn, D. D., of St. John's Church, Washington, and Mr. T. Mayhew Cunningham, prominent layman and local attorney, were the principal speakers. Patriotism to the American way of life and democracy was the theme, both speakers urging a firmer stand towards Russia.

Two hundred and thirty-seven laymen were present. Bishop Barnwell and the local clergy sat at the speakers' table. Mr. W. J. Robertson, of Savannah, who had previously been scheduled to speak on organizing the men of the four local parishes into a district group of the Laymen's League, was not able to appear on the program. The Rev. Dr. Glenn, chaplain of both World Wars and president of the Church Society for College Work, took as his subject, "Democracy," and "What the Chances Are For Peace." He pictured the dire and threatening conditions in Europe as he saw them on a tour of 14 clergymen under the auspices of the War Department last summer and as depicted, he said, in a recent issue of the "Saturday Evening Post" article "Blueprints of Peace."

"The lack of democracy in Europe, he said, shows up especially in two fields—education and industry. Where the United States is constantly utilizing new brains Europe has kept depending for generations on the same families, with little opportunity for others to come forward.

"You can't make democracy function unless you bring new brains to the front."

He said the restriction of immigration into the United States has taken out of our society a number of people who apreciate this country more.

Dr. Glenn told his attentive audience: "There is a bigger thing than stopping the next war. . . . All over the world people are trying to raise their standard of living. We have a part to play, partly in self-defense . . . partly more; we can spread the advantages we have over the world.

"If we can raise the standard of living of all mankind, to equalize the standard of living of the world toward that of democratic America, there will be no war,"

He said in conclusion, "We can work for the abolishing of war as part of a larger problem, so we can make the Kingdom of God come here on earth."

Dr. Glenn received a rising welcome to his introduction and lengthy applause at the end of his speech.

HARPER SIBLEY RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT CHURCH WORLD SERVICE

New York, N. Y.—At the recent meeting of Church World Service, Harper Sibley, former member of the National Council of the Church, was re-elected president. Other Episcopal Church members who were re-elected to the Board of Directors were Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, and the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper. Dr. Pepper was made chairman of the board.

To serve on the Literature Committee, Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman was appointed. The Rev. Dr. E. R. Hardy. Jr., is on the Theological Scholarship Committee. Robert D. Jordan is on the Committee on Education and Information, and Dr. Pepper is a member of the Committee on Displaced Persons. Mrs. Pierce and Dr. Pepper are members of the Committee on Cooperation with the Churches in Europe, Mrs. Sherman and Mr. Sibley are on the China Committee, J. Earl Fowler is on the Japan, Korea and Okinawa Committee, and Presiding Bishop Sherrill and Mr. Jordan are on the Advisory Committee on Policy and Program.

PSYCHIATRISTS AND CLERGY CONFER AT COLLEGE

Washington, D. C.—Fifty leading medical doctors, psychiatrists, and clergymen met at the College of Preachers, Washington Cathedral, on March 16 for a two-day conference on "Religion and Psychiatry." Topics including "Methods of Therapy," "Religion and Psychoanalysis," and "The Therapeutic Relationship" were presented by two speakers, a doctor and a clergyman, and then submitted for general discussion by the group.

The conference was sponsored by the Institute of Pastoral Care of Boston, Massachusetts, in cooperation with the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, the Council for Clinical Training, and the Commission on Religion and Health of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

ANNUAL CONVOCATION LARGEST RECORDED

Ancon, Canal Zone.—The largest attendance ever recorded at an annual Convocation of the Missionary District of the Panama Canal Zone, consisting of seventeen priests, two deacons, thirty-three lay delegates representing fifty-two congregations, met at the Cathedral of St. Luke, Ancon, on February 23, with the bishop, the Rt. Rev. R. Heber Gooden, S. T. D., presiding.

A resolution to petition the General Convention of 1949 for a division of the district owing to its greatly enlarged size occasioned by the recent acquirement of new and important areas in the republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, was adopted.

The Rev. Frank L. Titus, assistant director of the Overseas Branch of the National Council was a special guest of the Convocation. He brought greetings from the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, D. D., Presiding Bishop, and president of the National Council, from the Rt. Rev. Boyd Bently, D. D., vice-president, and from other officials at 281, and mentioned the pleasure he felt in visiting the district and his impressions of the work and the pressing needs as far as he had seen, and also spoke illuminatingly and encouragingly as he explained the administrative policies of the Council.

PRICES IN CHINA CONTINUING TO MOUNT

New York, N. Y.—In a letter which bore $50,002 postage, Miss Elda Smith wrote National Council about some of the difficulties of missionary living in Wuhu, China. She stated that conditions do not seem to be improving, and food prices continue to mount. "We tried to buy flour the day before Chinese New Year only a few weeks past, but we could not find any. The price then was $750,000 a bag. It has a way of disappearing when it is due for a jump. A week after New Year, when it appeared on the market the same bag we bought at $1,689,000. Rice went from $1,260,00 a picul to $2,900,000 in Chinese national currency.

"We seem to have been surrounded by Government soldiers. They came in almost a week ago and are living in every available place, including our children's chapel. With great patience and much persuasion we have managed

REPORT FROM LIBERIA

New York, N. Y.—Late reports from Liberia tell that good progress is being made with the erection of the War Surplus hospital unit, and the domestic science unit. Also that construction of Cuttington College, which is to be 150 miles back in the interior, will begin in the near future.

The school year began the middle of February, with larger enrollment in the boarding departments of both the House of Bethany and St. John's Academy. These schools have a total of 60 in the high school, 70 in the elementary school. At Emory Hall, Bromley, there are 106 pupils, boarders and day students.

The Rev. Seth C. Edwards and the Rev. Paul M. Washington arrived safely and are living at Bromley, where they will be training the two candidates for the ministry who have just come down from the Holy Cross Mission at Bolahun, where they had started their training. These two men ,C. Kai Kandakai and William Vaani Gray, did excellent work teaching in the interior schools in Cape Mount County, before entering their theological studies. They are graduates of St. John's School.

The new hospital unit is being attached to the old building of St. Timothy's Hospital so that there will be double the former space.

RADIO CROSSES UP SERVICE

Providence, R. I.—Through some "ethereal phenomena" extraneous matter has emerged from the amplifying system at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Pawtucket. Recently a sermon was being delivered at St. Paul's Episcopal Church by the Rev. Harold L Hutton, rector. It emerged loud and clear in St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church. The assistant pastor at St. Mary's commented that "This is the first time the rector of St. Paul's has been heard from the pews of St. Mary's."

ST. MARK'S 100TH ANNIVERSARY APRIL 25

Unusual Treasures to Be On Exhibit

Philadelphia, Pa.—The treasures of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, will be on display in the church from April 20-25, in connection with the 100th anniversary celebration to be held on April 25.

Foremost among the treasures of the church is the silver altar in The Lady Chapel of St. Mark's, given by Rodman Wanamaker in memory of his wife. It was made in England and is the only one of its kind in this country.

The Coronation vestments worn by Louis XV in 1722 are also on exhibit.

The Brock Chalice, whose workmanship is a masterpiece of great beauty, will be shown with the collection of other famous appointments of the church.

These treasures are kept in a vault, but will be brought to St. Mark's for this occasion.

ANNUAL MEETING RURAL WORKERS' FELLOWSHIP

"One day of the National Episcopal Rural Church Conference will be given over entirely to the annual meeting of the Rural Workers' Fellowship," announced the Rev. E. Dargan Butt, president. The National Conference is to be held in Parkville, Mo., June 15-24, 1948.

The Fellowship is a voluntary membership organization of the bishops, other clergy, and laity of the Church. It is primarily interested in strengthening the service of the Church to people in town and country. Actually, the Fellowship goes back to 1924 when it was organized at the second national conference of rural clergy at the College of Agriculture, Madison, Mis. By now more than 500 workers are striviug toward the accomplishment of three purposes: (1) To promote the interest of the whole Church in developing an effective ministry to town and country areas and, at the same time, to prove that many techniques called rural are equally good in suburban communities. (2) To increase fellowship among rural workers and those interested in rural community life. (3) To aid the National Council in its program of service to rural workers. "The time has come," said Mr. Allison, secretary-treasurer, "when men and women everywhere are realizing that the Church must be taken into rural areas, as against the idea that established churches in suburbs and towns can be satisfied with inviting country folk to services."

SERVICES IN SPANISH INAUGURATED

New York, N. Y.—From the Dominican Republic comes to the National Council, word of the inauguration of a celebration of the Holy Communion in Spanish, to be continued as a regular service at the Church of the Epiphany, Trujillo City. The Rev. Roy L. Gaskell has found that the children and some of the adults of the congregation understand practically no English. He believes that this is the first time that Spanish language services have been a regular thing in Trujillo City.

ORDINATIONS

The Rev. James David Reasner, minister-in-charge of St. Matthew's Mission, Toledo, Ohio, was ordained to the priesthod by the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., in Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, on March 16. The Ven. Donald Wonders, D. D., preached the sermon, and the Rev. James F. McElroy, rector of St. Mark's Church, Toledo, presented Mr. Reasner.

The Rev. George Blake Holmes was ordained to the diaconate on Monday, March 15 in Christ and St. Luke's Church, Norfolk, Va., by the Rt. Rev.

A PETITION ADDRESSED TO THE BISHOPS OF THE ANGLICAN COMMUNION AT THE 1948 LAMBETH CONFERENCE

WE, the undersigned, being Communicants of the Anglican Communion, recall with thankfulness the declaration of the 1930 Lambeth Conference that "war as a method of setting international disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ".

We believe that the experience of the second World War has confirmed this judgement. It has shown how war undermines general morality by lending support to the doctrine that evil means can promote righteous ends, by weakening the sense of truth and the values of family life, and by treating national rivalries as of greater significance than the unity of the universal Church. We have also observed how the traditional methods by which Christians have attempted to limit the effects of war have swept away—a process culminating in the horror of the atomic bomb.

We therefore humbly beg Your Graces and Your Lordships to declare that all participation in war as it has now developed, even for a good cause, is contrary to the Divine Will, and to affrim that the right method of resisting evil is that of positive Christianity, as shown, not only in the witness of the Society of Friends, but also in the resistance offered to Nazism by the pastors of the Church of Norway and of outstanding Christians in Germany and other countries.

Cut out this petition and circulate it among your friends, adding extra sheets if necessary. Send it, signed by one name or thirty names, to Rev. Sydney Temple, General Secretary, Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, Essex, Conn., by April 30, 1948.

A Prayer For Army Day

6 April, 1948

By MAJ. GEN. LUTHER D. MILLER

Chief of Chaplains, U. S. Army

O Eternal Lord God, be pleased to receive into Thine almighty and most gracious protection the soldiers of our country. Support them in the day of battle, and in their service to our country amidst the storms and floods of national disasters. Shield them from all danger; keep them strong and steadfast; give them courage and chivalry; uphold their hands as they seek to further the cause of righteousness for the maintenance of a just peace. Hold in Thine omnipotent keeping our many comrades, who, having made the great sacrifice upon the altar of liberty, now rest with Thee. Grant that we, the living, may keep faith with these brave ones who have gone on before us, to the end that we may glorify Thy Holy Name and be worthy trustees of the moral heritage of our beloved country. Bless our comrades, we pray Thee, O God, wherever they serve; and keep this our land, the United States of America, under Thy holy protection.

Amen.

Post Haste . . .

CONSTANT IN PRAYER

Sir: Doesn't it give you a "queer" feeling in these really tragic days to listen to the radio giving dreadful news of the "Iron Curtain" group, our fellow-Christians being forced into persecution and slavery, suicides of Christian leaders, the creeping march of misery over the world, . . . and then, immediately, a blast of revelry, "high powered" programs of fashions (alluring anklets, etc), dances, night clubs, and what not?

Can't we have more influence for pause, prayer—yes, and fasting? Have we allowed the public (so called Christian communities) to get so far from our fundamental church teachings, that only a spiritual revolution can help? And are we sufficiently strong to have a spiritual revolution?

I still earnestly believe that the church (and only the church) has the power to revive our Christian practices of fervent prayer and litany—will she do it? Can't we start by a concerted program of prayer groups everywhere—a "World Day of Prayer" continuously?

Do we really believe in prayer? Let's begin to practice our teachings more earnestly; let's begin and continue prayer groups.

"And the disciples continued constant in prayer."

A WARNING

Sir: I have had an experience here as rector of St. James' Episcopal Church which I think I ought to share with the other clergy of the Church so that they might be on their guard. I request you, if you would be so kind, to put a letter of warning in your next issue of your paper.

A certain man came to see me and said that his name was Alvin Augustus Merritt. His wife's name was given as Dianne. His story was that he had been working with Stone & Webster in Virginia, but, that, owing to his wife's health, he had to go to a warmer climate. Also, because of excessive hospital bills, he was without money. He was well dressed and had the appearance of being a gentleman and a graduate engineer as he claimed. His suavity and bearing impressed me so favorably that I gave him financial help and by means of introductions enabled him to get a well paying position as an engineer. This firm even bought an automobile for his use. He stayed with the firm for about two weeks when he remained at home from work because of an alleged sore finger and soon after disappeared taking the car, and I presume his wife, with him. Since his departure a number of bad checks have turned up and the disappearance of a diamond ring which he took from a woman on the pretense of having the diamond cleaned was revealed. Both he and his wife seemed to have quite a knowledge of the Episcopal Church and even claimed that they were communicants of St. Luke's Church, Salisbury, N. C. However, a letter from the rector indicates that he could find no record of them.

The Episcopal clergy are urged in case this man should turn up to call in the police at once and get them to send a wire or to make a telephone call to the sheriff of East Baton Rouge Parish, Baton Rouge.

THE ONEIDA INDIAN MISSION

Sir: My attention was called to one of the issues of your paper, "The Southern Churchman," I believe you listed my name along with one of the laymen of Fond du Lac Diocese as receiving the 1948 award of your magazine.

Will you kindly accept my words of appreciation? I have never thought I should be mentioned by any person or magazine and the news came as a complete surprise.

Thanking you and the magazine again for their honor.

CATHOLIC—UNIVERSAL SYNONYMOUS?

Sir: The Rev. R. Cary Montague in his column "The Prayer Book Page by Page" (S. C., 3/13/48), while discussing the prayer for Christ's Church which immediately follows the offertory in the Prayer Book rite, makes the following statement: "One could wish that the same substitution (i. e., universal for Catholic) had been made in the translation of the Creed, since it would save considerable explanation." The writer blithely assumes that "Catholic" and "universal" when used theologically are always synonymous. Such does not seem to be the case.

A committee of theologians of the English Church defined the word Catholic as being used: "to describe, not a type of thought or outlook, but certain facts whose existence and authority Christians acknowledge: the Catholic Church, the Catholic Creeds, the Catholic Faith, the Catholic Sacraments." (Catholicity: A Study in the Conflict of Christian Traditions in the West; Dacre Press, Westminster, 1947, p. 9).

In a pastoral letter eleven bishops of the Anglican Communion affirmed that the Church is Catholic "because it

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

A Statement of Faith and Order

PREPARED IN HARMONY WITH THE LAMBETH QUADRILATERAL

By the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

Prepared for Submission to the Lambeth Conference

I. Introduction

The General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A., meeting in Philadelphia in October, 1946, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved . . . that the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be continued and that it be directed to continue negotiations with the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to further or initiate such conversations with representatives of other Christian bodies as in its judgment may lead to our closer fellowship with them, and be it further

Resolved . . . that we receive both the majority and minority reports of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity with appreciation of the great service rendered the Church in presenting the results of negotiations with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and be it further

Resolved . . . that since the results of these negotiations have reached a point at which it becomes necessary to set forth an authoritative statement of the basis upon which the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. will act, the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity be continued, and be requested to prepare a statement of faith and order, in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral, upon which the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. is prepared to enter into intercommunion and to proceed toward organic federation with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. or with any other interested Christian body, the Commission to report to the next session of the General Convention; and be it further

Resolved . . . that the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. extend to the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. its cordial greetings and gratitude for the brotherly courtesy manifested in the discussions which have been held, and request that the Department of Church Cooperation and Union of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. prepare a similar formulation, taking into account the points of the Lambeth Quadrilateral, and

Whereas, the subject of Unity is of the utmost concern to the entire Anglican Communion, and

Whereas, for one part of the Anglican Communion to consider union with any Christian body necessarily involves the life and unity of our whole Communion, therefore, be it

Resolved . . . that the Presiding Bishop be requested to refer to the 1948 Lambeth Conference such proposals for Church Unity as are being considered by our Church, and which are related to the Anglican Communion, including the statement to be prepared by the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity based upon the Lambeth Quadrilateral, as provided hereinabove.

In accordance with the foregoing directive, the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity presents this statement of Faith and Order as a basis for intercommunion, looking toward organic federation with other Christian bodies.

"Intercommunion" between two churches is understood as meaning that members of either church shall be permitted to receive Holy Communion in the other, and that ministers of either church shall be competent to celebrate the Holy Communion in the other.

One example of intercommunion now actually in effect is that between the Anglican and Old Catholic churches in Europe and America. The Bonn Agreement, which is the basis of this intercommunion though not necessarily normative for all future agreements, reads:

"1. Each communion recognizes the Catholicity and independence of the other, and maintains its own.

"2. Each communion agrees to admit members of the other communion to participate in the sacraments.

"3. Intercommunion does not require from either communion the acceptance of all doctrinal opinion, sacramental devotion, or liturgical practice characteristic of the other, but implies that each believes the other to hold all the essentials of the Christian faith."

"Organic federation", which presupposes intercommunion, may take any one of several forms. It may be: (1) a federation, such as now exists among the churches of the Anglican Communion, with a council whose functions are purely advisory; (2) a federation which has an advisory council as in (1), and in addition merges administrative and missionary agencies, the autonomy of the uniting churches being not affected; (3) a federation which merges administrative and missionary agencies as in (2), and in addition has overall legislative body with limited delegated powers.

The Quadrilateral has had a long and interesting history. Its four points originally appeared in a reply from the American bishops to a memorial on the subject of Christian unity. The reply was set forth by the House of Bishops meeting in Chicago in 1886, and was later ratified by the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies. We make our own the following words from this statement.

"We . . . do hereby solemnly declare to all whom it may concern, and especially to our fellow Christians of the different Communions in this land, who, in their several spheres, have contended for the religion of Christ:

"Our earnest desire that the Saviour's prayer, 'That they all may be one', may, in its deepest and truest sense, be speedily fulfilled;

"That we believe that all who have been duly baptized with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, are members of the Holy Catholic Church;

"That this Church does not seek to absorb other Communions, but rather, cooperating with them on the basis of a common Faith and Order, to discountenance schism, to heal the wounds of the Body of Christ, and to promote the charity which is the chief of Christian graces and the visible manifestation of Christ to the world;

"We do hereby affirm that the Christian unity now so earnestly desired can be restored only by the return of all Christian communions to the principles of unity exemplified by the undivided Catholic Church during the first ages of its existence; which principles we believe to be the substantial deposit of Christian Faith and Order committed by Christ and His Apostles to the Church unto the end of the world, and therefore incapable of compromise or surrender by those who have been ordained to be its stewards and trustees for the common and equal benefit of all men."

In the statement of the bishops there followed four points which have since become familiar to the entire Anglican world and beyond. Originally known as the Chicago Quadrilateral, they were adopted by the Lambeth Conference of 1888 as follows:

"1. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as 'containing all things necessary to salvation', and as being the rule and ultimate standard of faith.

"2. The Apostles' Creed, as the Baptismal Symbol; and the Nicene Creed, as the sufficient statement of the Christian faith.

"3. The two Sacraments ordained by Christ Himself—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—ministered with unfailing use of Christ's words of Institution, and of the elements ordained by Him.

"4. The Historic Episcopate, locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the Unity of His Church."

Reaffirmed in slightly different forms by subsequent Lambeth Conferences, these points were incorporated in 1920 into An Appeal to All Christian People.

II. THE QUADRILATERAL

A. The Holy Scriptures

The Holy Scriptures are the inspired record of God's self-revelation to man and of man's response to that revelation. This is the primary ground of the authority of the Scriptures.

The fact that the Church under the guidance of the Holy Spirit has accepted the Bible as canonical invests it as a whole with an authoritative character for all Christians. Its authority is further validated by the continuing experience of Christian people.

The Bible has an inner unity as the record of the special preparation for Christ, and of His redemption of man through His Life, Death, Ressurrection, and Ascension, and through the gift of the Holy Ghost. Both in the Old and in the New Testaments the Kingdom of God is proclaimed and everlasting life is offered to mankind in Christ, the only Mediator between God and man.

The Bible has been and is for the Christian Church the ultimate criterion of its teaching and the chief source of guidance for its life. It contains all doctrine required for salvation through faith in Jesus Christ.

The reading and preaching of the Word of God are indispensable for the life and worship of the Church.

B. The Creeds

The Apostles' Creed rehearses the mighty acts of God in creation, redemption, and sanctification as recorded in the Holy Scriptures. Upon these, the life of the Church is based. As a declaration of allegiance to the Triune God the Apostles' Creed is a profession of faith appropriate to Holy Baptism.

The Nicene Creed likewise witnesses to the faith of the historic Church in its assertion of fundamental Christian truths and its denial of fundamental errors and is appropriate to Holy Communion.

While liberty of interpretation may be allowed, the Christian faith as set forth in these two creeds ought to be received and believed by all Christian people.

The recitation of the Creeds in public worship is to be commended, though their invariable use in such fashion is not essential to the unity or the life of the Church.

C. The Sacraments

Baptism with water and with the Spirit, in the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, is a divinely instituted sacrament whereby we are made children of grace and incorporated into the Church, and receive forgiveness of sin and a new birth unto righteousness. The requirements for baptism are repentance and faith, declared by the recipient or on his behalf by his sponsors.

The Supper of the Lord, ministered with unfailing use of Christ's words of institution and the elements ordained by Him, is the supreme act of sacramental worship in the Christian Church. This Sacrament is a corporate act of the Church towards God, wherein it is united with its Lord, victorious and triumphant, Himself both Priest and Victim in the sacrifice of the Cross. In it the faithful continue a perpetual memory of the precious death of Christ who is their Advocate with the Father and the propitation for their sins, according to His precept, until His coming again. For first they offer the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving; then next they plead and represent before the Father the sacrifice of the Cross, and by it they confidently entreat remission of sins and all other benefits of the Lord's passion for all the whole Church; and lastly they offer the sacrifice of themselves to the Creator of all things which they have already signified by the oblations of the bread and wine which are His creatures. In the Supper of the Lord the faithful receive and partake, spiritually, of the Body and Blood of Christ; and thus enter into communion with Christ Himself and with one another in His Life.

In addition to the sacraments of Baptism and the Supper of the Lord, the Church recognizes sacramental rites or mysteries, namely, Confirmation, Absolution, the Marriage Blessing, Holy Orders, and the Unction of the Sick.

D. The Historic Episcopate

1. The Ministry.

The fundamental Christian ministry is the ministry of Christ. There is no Christian priesthood or ministry apart from His. His priestly and ministerial function is to reconcile the world to God in and through Himself, by His incarnation and by His "one sacrifice once offered" and by the gift of the Holy Spirit, delivering men from the power of sin and death.

The Church as the Body of Christ, sharing His life, has a ministerial function derived from that of Christ. In this function every member has his place and share according to his different capabilities and calling. The Church is set before us in the New Testament as a body of believers having within it, as its recognized focus of unity, of teaching and of authority, the Apostolate, which owed its origin to the action of the Lord Himself. There was not first an Apostolate which gathered a body of believers about itself; nor was there a completely structureless collection of believers which gave authority to the Apostles to speak and act on its behalf. From the first there was the fellowship of believers finding its unity in the Twelve. Thus the New Testament bears witness to the principle of a distinctive ministry, as an original element, but not the sole constitutive element, in the life of the Church.

2. The Episcopate.

Anglican formularies deal with the episcopate as a fact rather than a doctrine. It is, however, a fact deeply rooted in history. The Lambeth Quadrilateral is, accordingly, employing a defining phrase when it speaks of the "historic episcopate." Acceptance of episcopacy as a basis of reunion necessarily means acceptance of it not as a bare fact, but a fact accompanied by its historical meaning.

The maintenance of a ministerial succession, by way of ordination with the laying on of hands, is a familiar fact in the life of most Christian communions. All such ministerial successions are in some sense historic, differing from one another, however, in form and in the degree to which succession is continuous in history. Anglican formularies pronounce no judgments on other ministerial successions. They do claim, however, for the churches of the Anglican Communion for which they speak, that these churches have preserved both the form and the succession which traces back to the "Apostles' time," and they make the preservation of this succession a matter of scrupulous discipline. They define ministers within this historic stream as "Ministers of Apostolic Succession."

It should be clear, therefore, that while acceptance of the "historic episcopate" may not involve acceptance of any one formulation of the doctrine of the ministry, it does involve acceptance, in the form of a fact, of the threefold ministry of bishops, priests, and deacons, and the acceptance of it also as accompanied by the claim that it is a ministerial succession tracing back to the "Apostles' time."

The Lambeth Conference Report of 1930 enlarges upon this claim as follows:

"When we speak of the Historic Episcopate, we mean the Episcopate as it emerged in the clear light of history from the time when definite evidence begins to be available . . . Without entering into the discussion of theories which divide scholars, we may affirm shortly that we see no reason to doubt the statement made in the Preface to our Ordinal that 'from the Apostles' time there have been these Orders of Ministers in Christ's Church: Bishops, Priests, and Deacons.' Whatever variety of system may have existed in addition in the earlier age, it is universally agreed that by the end of the second century episcopacy had no effective rival. Among all the controversies of the fourth and fifth centuries the episcopal ministry was never a subject of dispute . . . If the Episcopate, as we find it established universally by the end of the second century, was the result of a process of adaptation and growth in the organism of the Church, that would be no evidence that it lacked divine authority, but rather that the life of the Spirit within the Church had found it to be the most appropriate organ for the functions which it discharged. In the course of time the Episcopate was greatly affected by secular forces, which bent it to many purposes alien to its true character and went far to obscure its spiritual purpose. . . . The Historic Episcopate as we understand it goes behind the perversions of history to the original conception of the Apostolic Ministry."

The concept of the episcopate can, accordingly, receive definition as an historical fact. It can also receive clarification from a description of its functions.

To quote from the Lambeth Report of 1930: "When we say that we must insist on the Historic Episcopate but not upon any theory or interpretation of it, we are not to be understood as insisting on the office apart from the functions. What we uphold is the Episcopate, maintained in successive generations by continuity of succession and consecration, as it has been throughout the history of the Church from the earliest times, and discharging those functions which from the earliest times it has discharged."

When we refer to the historic episcopate we are concerned with the essentials and purposes of the office of bishop and not with the incidental attributes of the office or the details of the administration of the Church, which have changed from time to time and may continue to change.

The most obvious function of the "historic episcopate"—the one which in the course of its varied history, has been most scrupulously guarded—is its vocation of transmitting the ministerial succession. The bishop is thus the organ of ministerial continuity. He is also the personal organ of the Church's unity. The very name bishop (episcopos) implies the function of pastoral care, of oversight. He is addressed in the Church's traditional liturgies as Father-in-God. He is also addressed as the Church's Shepherd. He represents the Church catholic to his flock, as the localized minister cannot do. Expressive of the bishop's function of ministering the Word and of pastoral oversight is the opening prayer of the Anglical Form of Ordaining or Consecrating a Bishop.

"Almighty God, who by Thy Son Jesus Christ didst give to Thy holy Apostles many excellent gifts, and didst charge them to feed Thy flock; Give grace, we beseech Thee, to all Bishops, the Pastors of Thy Church, that they may diligently preach Thy Word, and duly administer the godly Discipline thereof."

The fourth point of the Lambeth Quadrilateral was rephrased by the Lambeth Conference of 1920, in its Appeal to All Christian People, as follows:

"A ministry acknowledged by every part of the Church as possessing not only the inward call of the Spirit, but also the commission of Christ and the authority of the whole Body."

We close this section by further quoting from this Appeal:

"May we not reasonably claim that the Episcopate is the one means of providing such a ministry? It is not that we call in question for a moment the spiritual reality of the ministries of those Communions which do not possess the Episcopate. On the contrary, we thankfully acknowledge that these ministries have been manifestly blessed and owned by the Holy Spirit as effective means of grace. But we submit that considerations alike of history and of present experience justify the claim which we make on behalf of the Episcopate. Moreover, we would urge that it is now and will prove to be in the future the best instrument for maintaining the unity and continuity of the Church. But we greatly desire that the office of a Bishop should be everywhere exercised in a representative and constitutional manner, and more truly express all that ought to be involved for the life of the Christian Family in the title of Father-in-God. Nay more, we eagerly look forward to the day when through its acceptance in a united Church we may all share in that grace which is pledged to the members of the whole body in the apostolic rite of the laying-on of hands, and the joy and fellowship of a Eucharist in which as one Family we may together, without any doubtfulness of mind, offer to the one Lord our worship and service."

3. The Priesthood and the Diaconate.

The office of a priest (presbyter) is to minister to the people committed to his care; to preach the Word of God; to baptize; to celebrate the Holy Communion; to pronounce absolution, or remission of sins, and blessing in God's name. Thus he exercises part of the Apostolic office, and it is significant that in the Anglican Ordinals, as in the general practice of the Western Church, which is itself based on very early usage, priests are associated with the Bishop in the laying on of hands at the ordination of priests.

The office of a deacon is to assist the priest in divine service, and in his other ministrations, under the direction of the bishop. In the early Church the diaconate represented the ministry of the Church to men's bodily needs, but not as though these were separable from their spiritual states. Though this function is still emphasized in Anglican Ordinals, the deacon today exercises his office almost entirely in spiritual activities.

4. Laity.

To the whole Church of God and to every member of it belongs the duty and privilege of spreading the good news of the Kingdom of God and the message of salvation through Jesus Christ and of interceding for the brethren. All, according to their measure, share in the priesthood which the Church derives from Him. This is the meaning of the doctrine of the priesthood of all believers.

III. THE QUADRILATERAL AND THE CHURCH

We have confined our exposition to the Quadrilateral; its interpretation must be seen in the context of the scriptural doctrine of the Church. This involves more extended consideration than can be given in this statement. We can, however, join with other Christian bodies in the affirmation in the Edinburgh report on Faith and Order:

"We are at one in confessing belief in the Holy Catholic Church. We acknowledge that through Jesus Christ, particularly through the fact of His resurrection, of the gathering of His disciples round their crucified, risen, and victorious Lord, and of the coming of the Holy Spirit, God's Almighty will constituted the Church on earth.

"The Church is the people of the new covenant, fulfilling and transcending all that Israel under the old covenant foreshadowed. It is the household of God, the family in which the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man is to be realized in the children of His adoption. It is the body of Christ, whose members derive their life and oneness from their one living Head; and thus it is nothing apart from Him, but is in all things dependent upon the power of salvation which God has committed to His Son.

"The presence of the ascended Lord in the Church, His Body, is affected by the power of the one Spirit, who conveys to the whole fellowship the gifts of the ascended Lord, dividing to every man severally as He will, guides it into all the truth and fills it unto all the fulness of God.

"We all agree that Christ is present in His Church through the Holy Spirit as Prophet, Priest, and King. As Prophet He reveals the divine will and purpose to the Church; as Priest He ever liveth to make intercession for us, and through the eternal sacrifice once offered for us on Calvary He continually draws His people to the Most High; and as King He rules His Church and is ever establishing and extending His Kingdom.

"Christ's presence in the Church has been perpetual from its foundation, and this presence He makes effective and evident in the preaching of the Word, in the faithful administration of the Sacraments, in prayer offered in His name, and through the newness of life whereby He enables the faithful to bear witness to Himself. Even though men often prove faithless, Christ will remain faithful to the promise of His presence, and will so continue till the consummation of all things."

IV. CONCLUSION

The foregoing statement is not a complete formulation of the faith and order of the Church. It is an exposition of the background and chief implications of the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral, and is to be regarded as the possible precursor of a unity to be achieved tomorrow, not as the unalterable basis of a unity to be realized today. We hope that the document will form a useful instrument of further negotiation with those Christian bodies which may be willing to join with us in seeking a way into that unity to which our Lord is calling all Christian people."

PROGRESS IN LOUISIANA

Bishop Describes Parish's Growth

New Orleans, La.—Development of missions into church parishes since he became bishop eight years ago was told by the Rt. Rev. John Long Jackson, bishop of Louisiana, at a meeting following a luncheon given in his honor by the Woman's Auxiliary of Christ Church Cathedral in the parish house.

Eight missions have become church parishes in those eight years—Bunkie, Innis, Morganza, Pineville, Metairie, Gentilly, Baton Rouge and Shreveport—he told the group.

Another mission, at Bayou DuLarge, in Terrebonne parish, is about to become a parish, he announced. Founded about 25 years ago by the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker and accessible then only by boat, this mission of some six families now has a parish list of 150 family groups.

One of the most vital phases of church work is with the young people in the Canterbury clubs, Episcopalian student centers in the colleges. There are six of these centers in the state, serving more than 2,000 boys and girls.

Plans are being made to start building a permanent student center at Tulane this summer.

No Time For Hysteria

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

An ominous note of hysteria is becoming manifest in our national life. From leaders in the nation's capital down to the man in the street, people are talking as if war were both imminent and inevitable. Nothing in the international situation has changed sufficiently to justify this temper.

It is true that the nation was shocked by the destruction of democracy in Czechoslovakia. But this event did not change the power realities of Europe. We had known long since that Czechoslovakia was in the Russian orbit and that it would not and could not challenge Russian foreign policy.

The Czechs believed that if they were wise enough to accept Russian foreign policy the Russians would be wise enough to let the Czech democratic system alone. This proved to be a mistaken belief. But the mistake did not change the international picture.

The other seeming cause for increasing hysteria is the forthcoming Italian election. The Communists have the possibility of winning that election. If they do not win it there remains the possibility that they will increase their strength sufficiently to become a permanent threat to the parliamentary system in Italy. This is indeed a serious prospect. But no one denies that the Italian election will be free. It represents a genuine democratic contest of power between Communism and the West.

Is it not foolish to meet the political threat of that election by hysterical talk of increased armed force? Actually the Christian democratic party would have a better chance of winning the election if it presented a genuine platform of land reform and did not rely so much purely upon American power and threats of religious ex-communication for those who differed with it.

We are living in a most insecure world and must take every possible defensive precaution in it. The danger which confronts us is manysided and strategic precautions are therefore justified. But the primary danger is ideological and political. Russia is not likely to make military ventures in Europe. She is anxious to infiltrate into western Europe by ideological and political pressure. She will of course ultimately use any position so gained for strategic purposes.

But the more we rattle the sword and make military threats against political dangers, the more we strengthen the Russian propaganda in Europe. We must be firm; but we ought also be sober. The note of hysteria in our voice and in our manners is bad, both for our security and for the peace of the world.

What Is The South's Program?

It is tragic that race relations should have become a political football. That this is their status at the moment is evident. Without considering the proposals of either President Truman or his opponents, it is obvious that both are acting from political motives rather than in the interest of better treatment of our American minority groups.

This is indeed sad because real progress was being made in this difficult area. Advance was admittedly too slow for radical elements, but advance was being made and it was real and solid in its basis. For it was based not on debatable law, but on mutual understanding, respect and a realistic knowledge of the possibilities inherent in the actual situation. In the South there was a growing concern in this area which was far better than the smug complacence of much of the North which refuses to see that segregation and prejudice exist on both racial and religious lines in that part of the land also.

Now all this must temporarily stop. Any immediate move in this field must await the quieting of emotions and an end to politics. How far this spirit of unthinking emotion has gone is seen in the ridiculous action of the House of Delegates of the Virginia Assembly which ordered an investigation of two Richmond newspapers that challenged the wisdom of certain Assembly actions. The Legislature impugned the motives of the two distinguished Christian gentlemen who are editors of these papers, Dr. Douglas Freeman and Mr. Virginius Dabney. What a sad fate for the state that originated the Bill of Rights!

During this enforced cooling-off period, the South might well consider what its future program is to be. If the South opposes the Civil Rights Program of the President, what is its own program? Beyond its political motivation, the weakness of the actions of the southern governors and legislators is that these acts are all negative. The Virginia Council of Churches has worked out a program for inter-racial action to be studied by the Churches of Virginia that might well be sent to the governors for their study also. It rejects federal action. It acknowledges the fine advances made in this realm. It sees the situation realistically. It calls for responsibility and action by the Negro community as well as the white. It is a realistic and Christian program. It is probably in advance of anything the governors would adopt, as politicians always lag behind the best community sentiment. But if some such program were adopted by our governors, it would be an indication by them of a statesmanlike concern for a problem that affects all their constituents.

Religion In The Schools

The Supreme Court decision concerning religion in the schools is not entirely clear. It definitely rejects the use of the school buildings for the teaching of religion by the Churches. It seems, however, to leave the Churches free to use released time in non-school property. But the most severe part of the decision apparently prohibits the teaching of religion in the schools as any part of the regular curriculum of the schools.

This actually is almost unknown in our public schools today. The Holy Bible is not even studied as great literature. The place of the Christian Church in the evolution of western civilization is neglected or misinterpreted. The influence of the Hebrew prophets in the realm of ethics is ignored. This is a grave weakness in our educational system, for it means that the place of religion as the undergirding of our American democracy is forgotten. How long can our democratic way be suspended in mid-air without falling if its religious foundations are gone?

Further, this very lack of religious teaching is in itself a judgment and a teaching of a new religion. This attitude says that the great Hebraic-Christian tradition is unimportant and can safely be ignored in the education of a child. By implication and by act, the child is then converted to a new faith. The altar of this faith is a mirror, for it is the humanistic worship of self. Its ritual is cosmetic, for it whitewashes sin. Its ethic is ruthlessly acquisitive. Its faith is materialistic. Its philosophy is secular and nationalist. Its result is death and doom.

Yet the teaching of this pseudo-religion goes on actively in our schools from day to day. No one wants denominational teaching in our schools, but let us call for schools that respect and teach the great Hebrew-Christian concepts of life and faith that are the roots of our American life.

The Resurrection And The Collection

We can think of no more appropraite text for the Sunday after Easter, or for that matter, for Easter itself, if the preacher dares to be different and unconventional, than this:

"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as your labor is not in vain in the Lord. Now concerning the collection . . ."

This is exactly what the Apostle wrote, the precise order in which the ideas entered his mind. He did not separate his Epistles into chapters, and erect a barrier between the resurrection and the collection. He did not feel, as we are likely to, that the mention of a collection is a sudden drop from the exalted heights of his glorious proclamation of the Resurrection, a descent from the "spiritual" to the material.

St. Paul realized, as has every great religious leader, the serious danger that either theological dogmatizing or mystical raptures may become short-circuited. An Easter service that lifts us to exalted heights may do no more than blow out the fuse if it ends in itself. Read the Epistles of St. Paul, and you find that the theological arguments of Romans, or the mysticism of Ephesians and Colossians is soon followed by a therefore, let us. Indeed, even before we get to the collection, St. Paul regards it as an essential of his Easter proclamation that we must abound in the work of the Lord. To him there is nothing unspiritual or commonplace in channeling the life of the Christ risen within us into the effort to raise funds for needy Christians.

The danger of our Church Year, and indeed of all celebrations, is the reaction that may follow them. We suggest as a daily religious exercise throughout the year an effort to get something of Christmas, something of Lent and Good Friday, of Easter, of Thanksgiving Day, yes, and why not of the Fourth of July, into every day's experience. William James in his Psychology recommended that we "seize the very first possible opportunity to act on every resolution we make, and on every emotional prompting we may experience in the direction of habits we aspire to gain." He said that it is dangerous to the character to have any emotion without giving it some active expression. If we have enjoyed a concert, we should do something about it, if it be no more than speaking genially to grandma, or giving up one's seat to someone on the train. "If we let our emotions evaporate, they get into the way of evaporating." Someone else has said that sentimentality is "not paying for our emotions."

If your Easter joy is so exalted and "spiritual" that it is lifted above the common decencies of living, that it is too holy to be bothered with the collection, it is not spiritual at all. It is irreligious, atheistic and un-Christain.

Maundy Thursday Evening Communions

We regret that there are Churches who do not have a celebration of the Holy Communion on Maundy Thursday evening. That evening is the time of our Lord's institution of this blessed service. There is a peculiar solemnity to the Lord's Supper celebrated then, especially when it is held quietly and simply. One feels very close to the Upper Room at such a moment. The very fact that ordinarily the Holy Communion is a service of the morning hours makes the evening celebration a significant one.

Parishes which no longer have a communion service on Maundy Thursday night have, whether consciously or not, accepted the Roman theory of fasting as a necessary preparation for receiving the Holy Communion. That fasting is often a good discipline, no one will deny, that its spiritual effects are often overvalued. But it is not obligatory in our Church before receiving the sacrament. It is, moreover, far from the most important preparation for the Holy Communion.

Despite the deep appropriateness of the Holy Communion on Maundy Thursday, some Churches may still decide to have a service of psalms and prayers. Such services are ancient in character. But we confess we wish they would not be called by Latin names when used in our communion. We are proud that our services are in a language understood by the people. Let's keep them that way!

Meditations In His Presence

"Whose Kingdom shall have no end."
(From the Nicene Creed)

We are tempted to begin by saying, "whose Kingdom has had no beginning." As we look around there is more evidence for this than for Kingdom coming. The title of Margaret Slattery's book cannot be dismissed from my memory. "Thy Kingdom Come—but not now." Our most constant and continuing prayer phrase is "Thy Kingdom come—on earth."

God is beginning and ending. If He is in the beginning He will be in the ending. It is His Kingdom we are talking about, not the kingdoms of this earth. What is His Kingdom? Literally it is the rule of His will over every heart, and over the society of men. When God's will is allowed to govern the conduct of men His Kingdom will emerge. But such a miracle will not come by fiat but by the earnest and wholehearted cooperation of men, and it will inch into being with movement no more perceptible than that of a gla-

THE WORLD IN WHICH WE LIVE AND WORK

By Canon J. Douglas Paterson, Toronto

"This is my Father's world,
And to my listening ears
All nature sings, and round me rings
The music of the spheres."

This lovely children's hymn was written in 1901 and some of us still sing it but to most of us it does not make sense. This may be God's world but something has gone wrong with it. The older active generation, say those over 34, have lived through a war, a boom time, a depression and another war and the future is a great big question mark. We acknowledge that we have failed to realize the good life. We cannot hand on to our children the attractive future as we had expected and had hoped to make it again. We know something has gone wrong but we don't know what it is; we are not sure that we want to find out. We are about ready to hand over the reins to the younger and more virile generation which is crowding on our heels.

They have neither the traditions nor the inhibitions we inherited. If their despairs and frustrations are the same as ours they have something that makes them see clearly and analyze accurately, and they have the courage to take such action as their judgment calls for.

There are fundamental causes going back for nearly a hundred years. A way of life and an attitude to life has been evolved and we have rather liked it. We believed it was leading us rather definitely to a richer, fuller, happier, and altogether more desirable life. There were difficulties to be adjusted and a little more time was required to develop the newest ideas, but we were definitely on the right track. Then came the crash and after 34 years we live in a world of chaos, disappointment, disillusionment, frustration, and hopelessness. Only that one who is willfully blind or who is mentally incapable fails to recognize that this is a time of crisis and we live in an age of transition. The past is labelled failure in every realm and department of life.

Political Failure. We have today few if any statesmen to lead us. What is politically advantageous in view of coming elections is the criterion, not what is for the common good. A League of Nations failed to stop even small wars and was helpless when a world war came. Rank injustice, and infamous bargaining, graft and greed, is the record. Millions of displaced persons present a problem they cannot solve.

Economic Failure. Depression at home, starvation abroad, famine killing off millions, profiteering, destruction of foods, medicines, and other necessities of life all show that gambling in human happiness and misery which cannot be explained.

Moral Failure. Dishonesty in public and private life is everywhere. Men do things as officials they would scorn to do in private life. The man of science dedicates his life and talents to discovering ways of destroying, not saving mankind. Money is poured out for destruction but not for healing. Compare the amount of money spent in research for atom bomb and cancer.

Social Failure. The decay of family life is our most tragic loss. Divorce and liquor are a scandal. The entertainment of today is becoming openly more degrading.

Human Failure. We want to enjoy one another, but satisfying friendships are becoming rare. The best relationships will always be when admiring the sterling worth of another we can live together, play together, learn together, and advance together. Today the measure of a man is not character but possessions. A war profiteer is preferred to a war hero.

Church Failure. Too often and for too long the Church has been going through the motions, living on an honorable past but with no life; dying in a slow and dignified way, proud of old traditions and enjoying old endowments and loyalties but with no message for today, and giving stones for bread because it knows nothing else and has nothing else to give.

The young man and maid with high idealism and great courage see this record of failure and can only look forward to a future of hopelessness and despair unless they know Christ has not failed.

CXVIX
Prayer For the Whole State of Christ's Church

The concluding paragraph of this prayer affords a striking illustration of the way in which the opinion of the Church of England, and our own branch of it has swung backwards and forwards like the pendulum of a clock.

In the Prayer Book of 1549, when the Reformation was in a more or less incipient stage this clause included a prayer for the Virgin Mary and all prophets and patriarchs. In 1552 under the advancing influence of reform it was entirely eliminated; but ten years later in the Prayer Book of 1662 it was returned but in a more limited form, omitting the words "grant them continual growth in Thy love and service."

In the revision of 1928 these words were added so that we have the prayer as it is at present.

Here again is an opportunity for an effective pause after the first phrase, "and we also bless Thy Holy name for all Thy servants departed this life in Thy faith and fear." If the minister waits here for a moment or two a properly trained congregation can and will call to mind their loved ones who have gone on before, and so make "the Communion of Saints" a real and living group.

The request that God shall "grant them continual growth in Thy love and service" emphasizes the fact that death in no way impairs the progress of the soul, but that it continues on and on through all eternity.

Also the expression that we "with them may be partakers of Thy heavenly kingdom" reminds us that entrance into the other life will offer us the opportunity for a grand reunion with those who have gone before, and that there will not be any waiting for a general resurrection. This further implies recognition and companionship, something that some persons seem to doubt in spiritual life.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

A LETTER TO SHARE

The following letter was written to the boys and girls of another diocese in connection with the Mite Box Offering. A young sixteen year old Japanese boy wrote it. The Rev. Mr. Merritt, a missionary over there, wrote this comment about Andrew Ogawa: "The letter may not be exactly what you are after, but I thought it better not to prescribe too exactly. This is just what the lad wanted to write. It was not necessary even to correct the English very much. Actually the boy is sixteen years old, but he seems very young to us. His heart and appearance are still those of a child, although he is 'growing up' and shows the usual mental activity of healthy adolescence. He is a most interesting boy and will be a help and credit to the Japanese Church one day, I feel sure."

STATEMENT ON SUPREME COURT SESSION

In McCallum Champaign Comm.

The adverse decision of the United States Supreme Court in the matter of weekday religious education in the public schools was a great shock to all Churchmen and a sad blow to this increasingly popular practice. Coming at a time in history when it is all too apparent that society needs most desperately to fortify itself with all the forces of righteousness, it is regrettable that anything should indicate a shift in government policy from an attitude of encouragement and friendliness to public instruction in religion to one of neutrality.

The decision itself will drastically affect further use of public school buildings for religious classes. It does not yet affect the holding of classes on released time in Church buildings. Therefore, it is urged upon the leadership of all Episcopal Churches where the authorities move to discontinuance of classes in the public school building, that immediate provision be made to house these classes in our own buildings. There is some ambiguity at the moment as to the court's intention to rule out all released time. However, four of the justices indicated that they did not intend to do so, and a fifth dissented from the opinion because he feared this result. On these grounds, we interpret the law at this moment as having no effect upon released time when instruction is given in the church building.

This Department recognizes and approves the propriety of respecting this decision and urges conformity to it in both spirit and letter, but it does not urge a hasty change of any local situation initiated by the Church. Let that come from the School Authorities. The situation is not at this moment clear enough.

One thing is obvious. More than ever, the responsibility for religious instruction rests upon us in the Church. Let each parish give even greater thought to the discharge of this its greatest task.

JOHN HEUSS
Director of the Department of Christian Education.

CHURCH COOPERATION AT HARVARD

Cambridge, Mass.—An excellent example of Christian co-operative work and worship is given by the work of the United Ministry to Students at Harvard University. For four years the Protestant and Jewish faiths have worked together in a co-operative organization called the United Ministry to Students in Cambridge. A chaplain for students assigned by the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and Unitarian churches worked together through the United Ministry together with the Society of Friends, the International Student Association and the Inter-denomination of Phillips Brooks House. The chaplain of the Roman Catholics was invited to participate in the United Ministry but has refrained from doing so.

The chaplains of the different churches and the secretaries of the Society of Friends, the International Student Association and the Phillips Brooks House meet every month to discuss matters of mutual interest and concern and to make plans for their combined religious impact upon the thousands of students in Cambridge who attend Harvard, Mass. Institute of Technology, Radcliffe and many less well known educational institutions.

The student work of the Episcopal Church is carried on under the direction of the Rev. Frederic B. Kellogg, who is the Chaplain for students under the Rhinelander Memorial Foundation. The base of his activities is the chaplain's house which stands alongside of Christ Church, Cambridge. Mr. Kellogg holds a student communion service in Christ Church every Sunday morning at nine o'clock, and a meeting of the Canterbury Club at his home in the evening. He takes part in the services of Christ Church and receives every possible support in his work from the rector, the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, and the vestry of historic Christ Church.

While the Canterburg Club and the various other clubs meet every Sunday evening several times a year the students of all the churches represented in the United Ministry join together for a joint service of worship followed by an address on some phase of religion by an outstanding speaker. On Sunday evening, March 7, the students packed the First Congregational Church in Cambridge to hear Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr speak on the subject of "Beyond Relativity and Law in Morals."

During Lent not only do the individual church groups hold their own Lenten meetings but the United Ministry has combined on a series of six Tuesday evening lectures on great classics of the Christian tradition. The quality of the lectures is such that Macmillan agreed in advance to publish the lectures which are as follows: "Confessions of St. Augustine", Prof. John D. Wild; Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress", Prof. Perry G. E. Miller; "Of The Imitation of Christ", Dean Willard L. Sperry; "Journal of John Woolman", Prof. Henry J. Cadbury; Schweitzer's "Out of My Life and Thought", Rev. Fredrick M. Eliot; Maimonides' "Guide to the Perplexed", Rabbi Beryl D. Cohen.

SPECIAL CONVENTION TO ELECT SUFFRAGAN

Bishop Emrich To Be Installed

Detroit, Mich.—A special Convention for the election of a suffragan bishop for the Diocese of Michigan will be held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on Thursday, April 8.

The Convention will open with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 10:00 A. M., at which service will also be held the installation of the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., as seventh bishop of the diocese. Bishop Emrich was elected bishop coadjutor of the diocese by unanimous vote at the annual Diocesan Convention held in January, and succeeds the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., sixth bishop, upon his retirement on March 31.

Bishop Emrich will be installed by the Rt. Rev. Benjamin F. P. Ivins, D. D., D. C. L., bishop of Milwaukee and president of the Fifth Province. The Rt. Rev. Herman R. Page, D. D., bishop of Northern Michigan, will be the celebrant, and the Rt. Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore, D. D., bishop of Western Michigan, the preacher.

Other bishops who up to the present have signified their intention to be present are the Rt. Rev. William W. Horstick, D. D., bishop of Eau Claire; the Rt. Rev. Richard A. Kirchhoffer, D. D., bishop of Indianapolis; the Rt. Rev. Reginald Mallett, D. D., bishop of Northern Indiana, and the Rt. Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, S. T. D., bishop of Erie.

Immediately following the service, the Convention will meet in the Convention Hall of the Cathedral and proceed to the election of a suffragan bishop.

The Standing Committee of the diocese, augmented by the addition of four other persons, was made a committee to receive nominations for suffragan bishop, and has been at work for some weeks. The committee on nominations issued a report to the clergy and lay delegates to Convention, indicating that it would place in nomination the names of three persons, one clergyman from outside the diocese and two from within.

The names to be proposed by the committee are as follows: the Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, of Bar Harbour, Maine; the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, and the Rev. Gordon Matthews, executive secretary of the diocese.

No dinner or social event will be held in connection with the Special Convention. However, the executive council have directed that as soon as possible after the Convention, a reception be held in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Emrich.

A SKETCH OF ALL SAINTS CHURCH

Richmond, Va.—All Saints' Church had its inception in the needs of parishioners of the Monumental Church who were living in the western end of the city of Richmond. To meet this need, the Monumental Church began in 1883 to hold services in a building located within little more than a hundred yards of the western city limits, at what is now the corner of Grace and Madison Streets.

Within five years a chapel congregation had been gathered and a church building was erected on Madison Street. The mission was then organized as a separate congregation in 1888, called its own minister, and at the annual Diocesan Council in May, 1889, was admitted into the Diocese of Virginia as an independent congregation of All Saints' Church in Henrico Parish. Ten years later, in 1898, work was started upon the erection of the present church building. This was first used for service on Epiphany, January 6, 1901. It was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson, bishop of Virginia, on May 18, 1913.

The organization of the congregation, the erection of its church building, and the development of its life during the first forty-two years of its existence was under the rectorship of the Rev. John Yates Downman, D. D. (1888 to 1830), who still lives as the honored rector-emeritus of the Church. The present rector is the Rev. Robert M. Olton.

All Saints' Church building is a striking example of French Gothic style of architecture, and is one of the outstanding, if not the most notable, specimens of that style in Virginia. From an architectural standpoint, the features of greatest interest are the facade of the west front and the mosaics in the sanctuary.

The church has for many years been noted for its ministry of music. It has the largest and best organized boy choir in the city, conducted and trained for thirty-five years by the late Ernest H. Cosby, AAGO, and carried on by the present organist, Charles W. Craig, Jr., FAGO.

All Saints' Church will hold a Garden Week Bazaar on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 27-28. Lunch, 12 to 2.

Sale of genuine antiques and rare old books. Handdressed dolls—handmade aprons—homemade cakes.

Tours through the church will be conducted by the Rev. Mr. Robert M. Olton, before and after lunch.

CONSECRATION PHILIPPINE BISHOPS APRIL 7

Manila, Philippines.—Bishop Binsted of the Philippines has announced that the consecrations of the three bishops of the Philippine Independent Church, authorized by the House of Bishops of the American Episcopal Church in November, will take place in The Pro-Cathedral Church of St. Luke, Manila, at 9:30 A. M. on Wednesday, April 7, 1948. Bishop Binsted will be the Presiding Bishop; the co-consecrators and presenting bishops will be Bishop Kennedy of Honolulu and Bishop Wilner, Suffragan of the Philippines. Bishop Wilner is to be the preacher. Those to be consecrated are Mons. Isabelo de los Reyes, Jr., Supreme Bishop, Mons. Manuel E. Aguilar, Bishop of Laguna, both of whom were ordained deacon and priest by Bishop Binsted in January, and Mons. Gerardo M. Bayaca, Bishop of Tarlac and Zambales, who is in priest's orders of the Roman Catholic Church.

A EUROPEAN LOOKS AT AMERICA

The average European's opinion about America "is quite different from reality," according to a young Vienna physician who has just returned to Austria after a four-months' study visit which took him to many parts of the United States.

"I thought I knew a bit more than most Europeans about life in the United States," said 29-year-old Dr. Karl Komucski, "from what I read in our newspapers and heard over the radio, and because I knew many Americans in Austria. But when I came here I was really astonished to see that only high school youngsters dance the jitterbug and boogie-woogie and that most Americans prefer good music and the wonderful American folk songs that Europeans never have an opportunity to hear. Also I was surprised to see the high cultural standard in American homes and that only a few live in the crazy, modernistic houses that most Europeans think are typical of America, as they are shown in our magazines."

Serving with others of his countrymen in World War II, Dr. Komucski was severely wounded in 1942 and spent long months in a military hospital. After his recovery, he was assigned to the medical staff of a prisoner of war hospital in Vienna. Since 1945 he has been secretary of his nation's Red Cross society in the Tyrol, and he was vitally interested in the work of the Red Cross here, particularly in the health, medical, and safety fields.

"The American Red Cross is truly an organization for the people and of the people. I have never found an organization that works on such a large scale yet is so well geared together, like the mechanism of a watch. There's a sort of family spirit shown by all its members."

According to Dr. Komucski, he returns to his country with a far better understanding of America from his first-hand observation of everyday life in a democracy: "I have seen your wonderful country and from the American spirit and culture I have learned much. My only hope is that I have the opportunity to realize my hopes at homes, to help my country win a better future."

Dr. Komucski is one of 72 Red Cross leaders from 39 nations around the world who have come to America during the past year under the American Red Cross study-visit program. He is one of 72 men and women who are taking back to their co-workers in 39 nations a fuller conception of America and the American "family spirit" of which he speaks.

UNIFIED RELIGIOUS RADIO MINISTRY

New York, N. Y.—Aimed at helping non-Roman Churches to develop and administer a "unified religious radio ministry," a Protestant Radio Commission was formed here at a meeting of 40 Church executives.

The Commission, representing 15 denominations and eight interdenominational agencies, will have as its chairman Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The new group plans for the gradual merging of all non-Roman radio activities, but, while the Episcopal Church shared in the formation of the Commission, it was with the understanding that the proposed national network program, planned to start next fall, will be under Episcopal Church direction exclusively.

Church bodies participating in the formation of the Commission include the Methodist, Northern Baptist, United Lutheran, Presbyterian, Episcopal and Congregational-Christian. Interdenominational agencies participating were the Federal Council, International Council of Religious Education, Foreign Missions Conference, Home Missions Council, United Council of Church Women, Missionary Education Movement, United Stewardship Council, and the National Protestant Council of Higher Education.

CHAPLAIN SCHOOL OPENED BY CIVILIAN INSISTENCE

Carlisle Barracks, Pa.—On March 3, The Chaplain School celebrated with special services of thanksgiving the thirtieth anniversary of the official opening of the World War I Training School for Chaplains and Approved Chaplain Candidates on March 3, 1918, and the sixth anniversary of the reopening of The Chaplain School for resident instruction during World War II, after formal classes had been suspended for almost twelve years.

During three decades, at eleven different posts in nine different states and under seven commandants or directors (as the heads of the School were known from 1920 to 1941), it has trained sixty-three classes of chaplains, totaling over 8,000 students. Both the present Chief of Chaplains, Chaplain (Major General) Luther Deck Miller, USA, and his predecessor, Chaplain (Major General) William R. Arnold, USA-Ret, were at one time directors of the Chaplains' School, while the first Commandant of the World War II school, Chaplain (Brigadier General) William D. Cleary, USA-Ret, became Deputy Chief of Chaplains.

Chaplain School Older Than the Chaplain Corps

Although the official existence of chaplains in the U. S. Army dates back to 1789, when the provision was first made for chaplains in the post-Revolutionary military establishment, there was no separate Corps of Chaplains with its own Chief of branch until 1920. The Chaplain School is thus two years older than the Chaplains' Corps, for it came into existence in March 1918, while chaplains were still administered by The Adjutant General.

NEW RESIDENCE AT GRACE-HOUSE-ON-THE-MOUNTAIN

Roanoke, Va.—For a long time Bishop Phillips has realized the urgent need of more adequate and comfortable living quarters for the missionaries at Grace House-on-the-Mountain, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. He was finally able to secure an excellent contractor, and the new house is now completed.

The house is of one story with attic and basement. There are a large living room, three bedrooms, a kitchen, pantry and bath, with garage on the basement level.

Grace House is in Wise County, on route No. 1 from St. Paul, Va., and the missionaries, Deaconess Anne Newman and Miss Alice W. Mayer, are already in residence in their new home.

SPECIAL SERVICES AT ST. JOSEPH'S

Detroit, Mich.—The fortieth anniversary of the first services held in St. Joseph's Church, was observed on Sunday, March 7, with the holding of special services, one of the features of which was an address by former Probate Judge Henry S. Hulbert, one of the original laymen who secured the present site.

Judge Hulbert made the address at the 11:00 service and dwelt upon the historical background of the parish. He pointed out that the ten laymen who founded the Church were discouraged by church leaders because it was thought that they were undertaking too ambitious a project. At the first annual meeting of the parish there were 69 members, and in seven years' time the parish had grown to 475 communicants.

It was recalled by Judge Hulbert, a vestryman emeritus, that the original ten laymen responsible for the parish's existence actually helped to build with their own hands the small Chapel which was the first meeting place for the parish on the new site. This building, still a part of the parish property, cares for Church School classes and parish activities.

The original St. Joseph's Church was built in 1883 on Woodward Ave. at Medbury, much closer to the downtown district. This property was sold in 1906, and the major part of the congregation joined with St. Paul's and Grace Church to form the nucleus for St. Paul's Cathedral.

The original group of St. Joseph's laymen purchased two hundred feet of frontage on Woodward Avenue in 1907. This property is now extremely valuable, as the city has grown far beyond the parish site. The first services in the little Chapel were held at Easter in 1908. Outgrowing the original building, the congregation erected its present Gothic structure about twenty years ago. It is one of the most beautiful church buildings in the city, containing remarkable wood carvings, paintings and mosaics.

The indebtedness was cleared 18 months, and the building was consecrated at that time by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese.

The Rev. Wm. C. Hamm, rector of St. Joseph's, is now in his sixth year of service to the parish.

PRAYER BOOK IN SPANISH

Havana, Cuba.—Episcopal Churches in Cuba are beginning to use the new edition of the Book of Common Prayer in Spanish, printed by the National Council under authority of the General Convention. Its language gives credit to the work of the revisers, and there is no doubt that the public worship of the Church in this country will be greatly enhanced with the use of the new Prayer Book.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S FUND ALLOCATED

New York, N. Y.—The Presiding Bishop met with his committee on allocations of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, and in view of pressing, urgent needs, forwarded $348,807.39, for immediate use, leaving but $5,000 as the Fund's balance. This allocation was of money received since the beginning of 1948, the largest part since February 29, when Bishop Sherrill's radio appeal was made.

Most of the undesignated money was allocated through Church World Service, for its relief program, which averages 50% to Asia and 50% through the churches of Europe. Included are such items as aid for the Finnish Orthodox Church, for the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, for the Serbian Theological Seminary (for Displaced Persons) at Dorchester College, in England, and the Emergency Fund of the American Bible Society, which is filling vast demands for Bibles for the use of churches in Finland, Greece, the Philippines, China, Russia, replacing Bibles destroyed in the war.

Other uses being made of money contributed by Episcopal Church people include the shipment of clothing, food, agricultural supplies, and the program for Displaced Persons.

The Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive secretary of the Presiding Bishop's Fund, pointed out that needs are particularly urgent now, before the harvests come, making this actually the most crucial part of a crucial year. He expressed the hope that, because of this urgency, parishes and dioceses will remit promptly, so that the gifts of their people may be put to use at the earliest possible moment.

EMBARKING FOR LIBERIA

Air France News Bureau.—En route to his post of director of St. John's Episcopal High School in Roberts Port, Liberia, Mr. Edgar Robertson, 29, of 548 High Street, Petersburg, Va., left New York for Paris on an Air France Comet at 12:14 P. M. today.

The youthful director, who was on a six-month furlough with his family in Petersburg, is planning a week's vacation in Paris and London, before reembarking for Liberia.

St. John's Episcopal High School is one of the four only high schools for natives in Liberia. It has 125 students and has been in existence for approximately 50 years.

CLASS OF 91 PRESENTED

Last Services of Bishop Coadjutor-Elect

San Antonio, Tex.—A class of ninety-one was presented to Bishop Jones for confirmation on Palm Sunday by the Rev. J. Wilson Hunter, the rector of St. Mark's Church and bishop coadjutor-elect of the Missionary District of Wyoming. This brings to 408 the number of those confirmed during his rectorship of two years and three months. Members of the congregation are grieved over his leaving but happy over the service he will give in a missionary field. They have honored Mr. and Mrs. Hunter with many gifts and that from the congregation as a whole was a purse presented at an informal gathering on Palm Sunday following a service at which the choir sang Brahms' Requiem. Mr. Hunter's last official acts were on Easter Day at the three services of Holy Communion and in the afternoon at the Children's festival. He gave a meditation for the women of the Parish on Tuesday in Holy Week and on Good Friday conducted the meditation at the three hours' service.

Christ Church, San Antonio, gave the women of the city an opportunity to have a week's devotional Bible Study led by Mrs. William Gordon, of Spray, N. C., and St. Luke's Church, the Rev. Smythe Lindsay, rector, brought Father Junker, of the Diocese of Dallas, for a teaching mission during Passion Week. A Quiet Day, sponsored by the Daughters of the King, was held at Camp Capers, on Wednesday in Holy Week, conducted by Bishop Jones. Women from all parts of the diocese attended.

LARGER SCHOOL BUILDING NEEDED

Vertientes, Cuba.—On his annual visitation to the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Bishop Blankingship laid the cornerstone for the parish school building, assisted by the Venerable R. C. Moreno, archdeacon of Camaguey, and by the Rev. J. A. Gonzalez-Martinez, priest-in-charge. The parish school was founded by the Rev. Mr. Gonzalez-Martinez a year and a half ago, and has met great success, so much so that a larger building is needed. The erection of the new building will be started soon, largely through a gift from the National Council, and will be continued as funds are available.

JAPANESE IN BRAZIL SHARE IN BISHOP'S FUND

New York, N. Y.—The Japanese colony in Brazil some time ago expressed a desire to share in the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief.

Through the treasurer of the District of Southern Brazil, these Japanese residents of Brazil have sent to the Fund a total of $57,000, with the regretful comment that it is feared there will not be much more at this time.

CHAPLAINS NEEDED IN NATIONAL GUARD

Because of increased enlistments in the National Guard and the desire for religious counsel by the members of the Guard, a dire shortage of chaplains of recognized denominations exists.

A tremendous opportunity to exercise spiritual and moral leadership in all phases of a chaplain's work is offered to those qualified men with a current ecclesiastical indorsement from the appropriate denominational endorsing body recognized by the Department of the Army.

Chaplains appointed in the National Guard will, by performing their appropriate duties, be paid one full day's pay for each weekly two hour training period, and will spend a fifteen-day period every summer with their unit in the field, for which they will all receive the pay commensurate with their rank.

Further information can be obtained by writing to the State Capitol, attention Adjutant-General of the State.

DEATHS

MRS. JAMES F. PLUMMER

Mrs. Fanny Minor Plummer, wife of the late Ven. James Fitts Plummer, died at her home 109 Churchill Drive, Mobile, Alabama, on March 1, 1948. Mrs. Plummer was the daughter of the late Dr. Charles Landon Carter Minor of "Edgewood," Hanover County, Va., and was the mother of five sons, four of whom survive her: James Minor Plummer of Philadelphia, Pa., Charles Cazenove Plummer of Arlington, Va., Edward Armistead Plummer of Pacific Palisades, Calif., Cameron McRae Plummer, of Mobile, Ala., and by six grandchildren and one great-grandchild, and other relatives. Her remains were interred at Old Blandford Churchyard, Petersburg, Virginia. "And all the trumpets sounded on the other side."

Coming to Washington about thirty years ago, Mr. Murphy was connected with Epiphany Church, Epiphany Chapel and St. Paul's, Washington. When he retired he became a collector of books and clocks, and his home at 1279 New Hampshire Avenue contains many rare antiques. He was the father of sixteen children, nine of whom are still living.

Funeral services were held at St. Paul's Church in St. Thomas' Parish, on Saturday, March 27, and were attended by many of the clergy. Mr. Herbert Murphy states it was his father's wish to be buried in Ireland, where Mrs. Murphy's body was sent from this country. After cremation the ashes can finally rest in Colerain, Ireland.

A LETTER TO SHARE

Lent 1948.

Dear Friends of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts:

One important problem which the students of Japan must consider is by what hope can we rightly live? Before and during the war, we were obliged to put all our confidence in the military government and to fight your nation. The result was a failure such as we had never dreamed possible.

Until the moment when the emperor declared the surrender, militarism was "right" and the emperor was the "highest living God." But as soon as the war ended, they were proven wrong. Every condition in Japan changed overnight into the quite opposite condition.

During the war, the Japanese army spread the rumor that American soldiers were demons or cannibals; we young boys believed this and, therefore, worked hard in factory, field and battle for victory. But the day of defeat came.

Since the ending the war, without spiritual resources, we have had to swim in the strong currents that trouble a nation that has been defeated. During that time several "rescue boats" had appeared. There were Christianity, Humanism and Communism. I became interested in that Christianity boat because my sisters were interested before me and also because I entered St. Paul's University. I boarded that boat and took up an oar and rowed. But I didn't pay careful attention to the direction the boat was taking. I rowed so hard that I became tired; then I rested and looked around at the others in the boat. They were women and children, but it was hard to find any young men. I asked the leaders of the boat which way it was going. They told me many things; but it seemed to me that it was going somewhat in the wrong direction. Because strong waves of conflicting opinion are beating our boat and its construction is very weak. We must take great care. Sometimes the leaders issue commands but do nothing about them themselves. Our leaders need help and encouragement.

At last, I can see a strong ship com-

cier, perhaps, but perceptible.

The picture is clear in Hebrews as the story of man's faith unfolds in the 11th chapter, "things hoped for" but never attained in a lifetime of struggle. The key to our thinking is in the conception of time span and the unit of growth. Looking at the world from year to year the evidence is lacking. But seen in the perspective of God, as the scientist sees it, there is slow but steady progress from the ignorance and shadow of man's beginning to the comparably high point of man's farthest advance. In no area is this more concrete than in man's enlarging conception of God and in his ever clearer perception of the measure of His life for us.

There shall be no end to His Kingdom coming so long as we who find a small fraction of it hold to this and increase the size of it whereupon we stand. One man and God will make God's Kingdom for that man and lead others on by the hope that earth might at last be fair.

teaches all the truth revealed by our Savior." (Letter to the Faithful; pub. by The Living Church, Milwaukee, Wis., n. d.; p. 2).

Catholic also has been defined as meaning: "(1) adherence to the mind of Christ made known to the Apostles and summarized in the Apostles' Creed; (2) sharing in the spiritual life and power of Christ through the Sacraments instituted by the Apostles on behalf of Christ; and (3) membership in the body ruled by Ministers of the Apostolic Succession today." (Religious Communities in the Episcopal Church; Holy Cross Press, West Park, N. Y., n. d., p. 124).

I do not maintain that any or all of the above three statements constitute a dogmatic definition, but they do seem to suggest that the word "Catholic" is not so devoid of definite connotation as to make possible the substitution of the vague word "universal" for it in our confessions of faith, the creeds of the Church.

The Southern Churchman
April 10, 1948

Dean Robert F. Gibson, Jr., of the School of Theology of the University of the South points out details of the plan for a new theological classroom building to the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, Bishop of Albany, visiting Sewanee for the first time. Bishop Oldham has just returned from Australia where he represented the American Episcopal Church at the centennial of the founding of the Dioceses of Melbourne, Newcastle, and Adelaide in the sub-continent. Bishop Oldham will attend this summer the first Lambeth Conference held since 1930, after which he will preside at the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, of which he is President.

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, D. D.
Former Editor Of The Southern Churchman
Died Suddenly

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, 50, rector of the Church of the Epiphany in Washington, a former editor of The Southern Churchman, also former rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, Va., died Sunday night, April 4 at his home in Washington as the result of a heart attack.

The funeral service was held at noon Wednesday at the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, with the Rt. Rev. Angus Dunn officiating.

Dr. Sheerin, a son of the late Rev. James Sheerin and Mary Picking Sheerin, was born Aug. 2, 1897, in Pittsburgh. He was graduated from Columbia University with a B. A. degree. He pursued his theological studies at Virginia Theological Seminary, where he received his B. D. degree in 1924. He received the honorary D. D. degree at the University of the South.

He was ordained to the priesthood in 1924, and that same year became assistant minister at St. Thomas' Church in New York City. From 1925 to 1928 he was rector of Trinity Church in Fredericksburg and served as rector of St. Paul's Church in Waco, Texas, 1928-29.

Coming to Richmond in 1929, he served as rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church until 1935, when he was made rector of St. Paul's and associated churches in Chattanooga, Tenn.

Since 1942 he has been rector of the Church of the Epiphany in Washington.

Dr. Sheerin served as a director of the Southern Churchman and was the editor of the paper from 1932 to 1938. Since 1944 Dr. Sheerin has been president of the National Council of the Church Mission Help.

He was a member of the forward movement committee of the Protestant Episcopal Church and a vice-president of the National Council from 1938 to 1942. He also served as a trustee of St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville and was a regent of the University of the South.

At the time of his death he was Trustee of the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Virginia, national president of the Episcopal Service for Youth, the only case-work agency in the Episcopal Church, a member of the Board of National Conference of Jews and Christians and the Washington Mental Hygiene Institute and chairman of the speakers bureau of the Washington Community Chest. He was a member of the board of directors of the Washington Federation of Churches and a member of the Social Service Department of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. He was Honorary Canon of the Washington Cathedral, a member of the Executive Council of the Diocese of Washington, and chairman of the Department of Social Relations of the diocese.

During the summer of 1938 Dr. Sheerin was summer exchange preacher with the Church of England, and he has been well-known as a guest preacher throughout the Eastern half of the United States. While vice-president of the National Council, he visited every Diocese and Missionary District in the Episcopal Church.

He married Miss Maria Ward Skelton Williams, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Williams, of Richmond.

Surviving are his wife; one son, Charles Welford Sheerin, Jr., and two daughters, the Misses Maria Ward and Elizabeth Lewis Sheerin.

Funeral services were held in the Church of the Epiphany at noon, April 7. The Pallbearers were the members of the Vestry, Dr. John Minor, Dr. Harry Hurtt, Mr. H. Rozier Dulany, Jr., Dr. Leonard M. Elstad, Mr. Richard Hynson, Mr. J. Pervis Milnor, Mr. Charles F. Roberts, Mr. Richard E. Shands, Mr. Richard H. Wilmer, and Mr. John S. Graham. Interment was at The Virginia Seminary.

It was requested that no flowers be sent to the funeral, but if friends wished to do anything in his memory, the Building Fund Campaign of the Virginia Theological Seminary was closest to his heart and gifts in his memory might be sent to that cause.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

A Brief History Of The Protestant Episcopal Church In The United States Of America

By MR. GEORGE V. BLUE, Washington, D. C.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America is the lineal successor of the episcopal Church of England in the thirteen colonies which separated from the mother country in 1776 and became the original United States of America. It is an autonomous Church in the Anglican tradition as continued under the Reformation settlement achieved in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

This fine "Brief History" of our Church, written by a devoted layman of the Diocese of Washington, will be printed in a number of installments week by week.

PART I. THE EARLY PERIOD

The Colonial Church

The first Anglican church services in America of which there is record were those held on Californian shores in 1582 by the chaplain who accompanied Francis Drake. This fleeting appearance of British Christianity in the New World did not remain unique, for Raleigh's "lost colony" at Roanoke Island was an Anglican group, but the permanent beginnings of the English Church in the Americas may be said to date from the landing of the Jamestown colony in Virginia in 1607.

The open-air services held on the banks of the James River by the Reverend Robert Hunt have a justly sentimental value for the history of the Church in the colonies, and mark its temporal point of departure. As a missionary enterprise this Anglican planting can hardly be said to have fulfilled the early plans which the ecclesiastical authorities in England had for the establishment of the English Church overseas. After the colony came under the direct control of the Crown in 1624, the royal government (perhaps partly because of mounting political troubles at home) failed to promote an extension of the ecclesiastical institutions of the mother country in the American wilderness. In step with the secular development of Virginia, however, a rudimentary form of the Anglican system also normally developed. The Church was legally "established", which meant that parishes were set up, vestries formed and clergy installed and supported under the laws of the colony as an integral part of the colonial system of institutions. Ministers came or were brought to the colony and the Virginia Church entered upon its long career of ups and downs.

Immigrants adhering to the Mother Church who came to the English settlements were bulked chiefly in the southern and the Island colonies. There the Church became "established" also, as in Maryland, Bermudas, and the West Indies (Barbados) and partially so in the Carolinas and Georgia. In the north, after New Netherland became New York (1664), the Church was established some thirty years later in four predominantly English counties of the new colony. Nowhere else, for well known historical reasons, was there institutional organization, although Anglican churchmen, clerical as well as lay, were to be found (sometimes only as transients!) in the New England plantings, such as Massachusetts Bay, and even at Plymouth.

Although the Church grew steadily in numbers, both clerical and lay, up to the outbreak of the Revolution, the lack of full ecclesiastical organization along traditional Anglican lines hampered its institutional development. As an episcopal church, it was without a bishop; as a church which affirmed the indispensability of a three-fold ministry, the almost non-existent diaconate was relegated to the very minor status that unfortunately distinguishes it to this day; the presbyterate of the church necessarily became, therefore, the one clerical order with which the laity generally had immediate acquaintance. This anomalous situation endured until the former colonial churches, their connection with England severed by the War, obtained an independent episcopate. The tenuous jurisdiction which the bishops of London had exercised over the clergy, mainly by means of "commissaries" sent in their name from time to time to oversee ecclesiastical affairs, ceased with the Revolution.

The "commissary" system had not proved successful, even though the commissaries were capable men of good intentions. The colonial clergy too often resented and opposed these episcopal representatives, and the laity and parish organizations were beyond their control. Inevitable, as also happened in the secular life of the colonies, the colonials met their ecclesiastical needs by experiments with new institutional devices. The latent trend toward self-government which the haphazard English system of colony planting unwittingly encouraged had its counterpart in the smaller sphere of the colonial churches. The enactments for the government of the Church in colonies such as Virginia and Maryland, where it was established, built up a body of legislation that furnished precedents of great help in the organization and growth of Anglican congregations elsewhere, and later in the organization of the Church on a national scope. When the secular authority did not act, the clergy and laity though often at odds as between themselves were compelled, as needs arose, to seek means of managing their own affairs. Voluntary conventions which brought about meetings of men if not always of minds were a saving resource from an exaggerated parochialism which otherwise would have met with slight impediment. To provide continuity from one convention to another, a further American development in the mainland colonies was the device of "standing committees" for the exercise of a certain degree of superintendence. These two institutions of domestic origin, local Conventions and local Standing Committees, were carried over into the post-colonial Church and became part of its diocesan structure. Such institutional features as these of the colonial Church, in its several branches (so to speak, for there was no general, all-embracing organization throughout the colonies), were the basis for the constitutional balance among the three elements, lay, clerical and episcopal, which later became a special feature and innovation distinguishing the Protestant Episcopal Church.*

The colonial setting must be taken into consideration in a view of the position of the Anglican congregations and churches. Taking the English colonies as a whole, the Church of England population was ever a minority. Among the non-British elements (such as the colonies conquered from the Dutch) the episcopal system was not known, and among the preponderant dissenting and noncormformist British elements it had been known unhappily and was viewed either with suspicion or active dislike. The "prelatical" coercions of the sixteenth century and the early years of the seventeenth in England had not been forgotten, and this memory conditioned an attitude among non-Anglican colonials toward episcopacy (shared by some Churchmen), in the eighteenth century that might have better fitted a bygone day; for the Church of England, whatever its shortcomings in the "Century of Enlightenment" was not a persecuting Church.

Neither then nor for many years later were the institutions of the Church adequately adapted to meet conditions imposed by the expansion westward of the American frontier. A settled, ordered framework of secular society was the habitat best suited to the Anglican system,, and this handicap was not boldly overcome until the Church was forced to meet the facts of the American way of life if it were not to remain chiefly an organization isolated on the Atlantic seaboard.

Notwithstanding difficulties both external and internal, the colonial Church proved by its record that it was neither oblivious to its opportunities nor unaware of its responsibilities. A sound and honorable growth was in the making. Notably with the opening of the eighteenth century, a period of true vitality began with the work undertaken by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts (1701). One of the ablest of the bishop of London's "Commissaries", Thomas Bray, founded the Society as a result of his work in the colonies, where he had discerned the crying need for an organization of that kind. For the next three-quarters of a century the majority of the Anglican ministers in the colonies apart from those where the Church was "established", were provided and supported by the Society. This fine missionary enterprise not only made possible an extension of Anglican churchmanship in the colonies, but also made for a measure of control and discipline hitherto lacking within the church itself. A drift away from Dissent and back to the Anglican formulary was also marked in the eighteenth century, exemplified by the return of President Cutler of Yale and several of his associates to that discipline.

Humanitarian and missionary efforts among the neighboring Indians and the negroes were initiated, with varying results of success and disappointment, but at the least were a testimonial that churchmen recognized some need of responsibility for others besides themselves, especially for those less fortunately placed. Another commendable cultural contribution was the lending libraries started in the colonies by the Society. Finally, the cause of education in the colonies owed the founding of William and Mary College at Williamsburg (1693) to the efforts of another Virginia "Commissary", Thomas Blair.

Obviously, a candidate for either confirmation or ordination to the ministry had to go to England to receive these rites. The expensive and often perilous voyage was not the deterrent that might have been expected, for native Americans came to compose a majority of the colonial clergy; but it could have hardly been less than a serious handicap for the Anglican community, lay and clerical.

The peculiarities of the system and its discipline, such as the oath of allegiance by the clergy to the Crown and the ministerial support and control exercised by the S. P. G. tended to make a large element among the clergy dependent upon the mother country and the Established Church there; while the laity, particularly the native-born, left to themselves as colonials acquired a detachment in greater or less degree from both.

Theological thought does not appear to have manifested any unusual tendencies. By and large, the colonial clergy reflected the points of view prevailing in the Church in its insular homeland. Calvinistic and Arminian views were alike represented in the thought and teaching of the pulpit. The effect of the Wesleyan movement in the latter years of the colonial period is not to be gainsaid, but at first was felt as a stirring within the Church not as a schism from it. The full impact of the great (and still potent) Evangelical Movement itself on the Episcopal churches was not generally felt before the close of the first quarter of the nineteenth century, although the "pioneer" of the Movement among the colonial Anglicans was Devereux Jarrett, who died in 1801, after a rectorship of nearly four decades in Bath Parish, Virginia.

Meditations In His Presence

"Who proceedeth from the Father and the Son." (From the Nicene Creed, page 71.)

The third Person of the Holy Trinity has suffered from man's limited powers of conception and expression. Man's mind ached and agonized over long centuries of search for an adequate word to express the moments of fulfilment in his longing after a living God. Light came as fast as man could push further into the unknown and bring back a load of truth. Only courageous men dared to journey beyond the small circle of the known. But a few of them did.

Amos found social justice as coming within the province of God, as did Hosea loving kindness and Jeremiah intimate private conversations with God. Then Jesus came and stirred up as never before the concept of God, and left the earth with but a few remaining who had caught in Him a glimpse of the fullest revelation of God ever given to man. A Father-God. Yes, that was now easy to believe. That Jesus was His Son, this too, demanded little additional difficulty. But what beyond this?

God had opened to man all he could bear of Himself as fast as man could take it. But with the passing of Jesus from earthly sight, the light of the past seemed to shake out its life and scatter hope and belief as dust from an exploded star. But soon, there was ample evidence that God's life had not departed, that the power of His presence was terrific and near. They could not see Him but they could feel Him. Was it God? Was it Jesus? Or was it the God through Christ revealed, who now stood among them as Spirit and blew upon them with new purpose? God's spirit was there—the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Jesus Christ, the Spirit of love, the Spirit of truth. Whatever of God man could receive was from all of God man had ever known. Holy Spirit became a name to express a conviction and an experience.

As men have been lifted up in power and great purpose since for righteousness, they claim it has all happened by God's Holy Spirit—who proceedeth from the Father and the Son and is known as the inner power of an ever present God, even Christ, our Lord.

Reviews and Ratings of Current Films

Picture of the Month:

THE TREASURE OF THE SIERRA MADRE

Gold, and what it does to those who lust after it, is the theme of this powerful story. Toughly realistic in spots, "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre" is nevertheless as potent a sermon as we have seen in a long while. Here, in merciless clarity, is displayed the corroding effect of greed, the poison of suspicion, the consuming fire of selfishness —with retribution, swift and sure, falling upon those who sell themselves to the quest for riches.

Warner Brothers, the producers, are to be congratulated in bringing to the screen so forceful an exposition of the commandment "Thou shalt not covet."

"The Treasure" is often as rough and tough as the elemental motives of men surrendered to the gaining of gold. And the film is somewhat overlong. But so well-knit is its plot and so absorbing its suspense that one is hardly conscious of its two-hours-plus length.

Featured in the main roles are Humphrey Bogart and Tim Holt, as two down-on-their luck Americans in Tampico, and Walter Huston as an old prospector who tempts them to join him in a gold-hunt in the wild Mexican hills. The hazards they meet on their tortuous trip are second only to the growing tensions that tear at their partnership after they have found gold. Bogart particularly is driven half crazy with suspicion that the other two mean to kill him and keep all the gold. The deterioration of his character mounts as his greed and suspicion build up. And the film finishes in an exciting climax, completely satisfying to the moral sense, and a back-to-normal return for Huston and Holt after they lose their gold through the operation of a higher force.

All those in the main roles give creditable and credible performances. But to Walter Huston, the old prospector wise in the ways of men and strong enough to bear the irony of fate, belong the honors for a brilliant portrayal.

Because of its occasional brutal sequences, essential to the plot, "The Treasure may not be fit for children of tender years. But adults and young people will be able to take it—and with profit. A, Y.

OTHER CURRENT FILMS

Audience Suitability Ratings:
A—Adults; Y—Young People 12 to 18;
C—Children under 12
(Films starred (*) were regarded as exceptional by our reviewers)

*CALL NORTHSIDE 777 (20th Century-Fox). Based on the true story of a devoted Polish mother who works as a scrubbing woman in Chicago for eleven years in order to save $5,000 to help clear her son of a murder he did not commit, this film has the reality of a documentary—plus fine acting, a well-knit plot, superior direction, and some excellent lessons in ethics. The contrasts between lawnessness and crime, political corruption and civic-mindedness are strong, and American justice is vindicated in an exciting way. The mother (Kasia Orzazewski) is a symbol of sacrificial motherhood whose faith in God and man is rewarded. James Stewart, as the reporter assigned to dig up the facts, and Richard Conte, as the accused, also turn in able performances. A, Y.

*THE PARADINE CASE (Selznick Releasing Organization). Skillfully directed by Alfred Hitchcock, this story of a woman accused of murdering her blind husband turns into a brilliant and absorbing play. It is handled with taste, woven with suspense mounting to a dramatic climax, and comes to a conclusion fully satisfying to the legal and moral codes. Human weaknesses are neither excused nor exploited. A distinguished cast includes Charles Laughton, Ethel Barrymore, Gregory Peck, Ann Todd, and the newcomer Valli in the name role. A.

*THE NAKED CITY (Universal-International). This is one case when criminals are not glamorized and crime is shown as a truly destructive force. It is also the story of how the police force of a great city detects it and tracks down the criminals. A well-developed story is gradually revealed as the detection closes in, and the film holds attention because of its authentic details, excellent photography and good acting —especially by Barry Fitzgerald as the chief detective. A, Y.

MY GIRL TISA (Warner). Set in New York at the beginning of the century, this picture shows with genuine feeling what "America the Beautiful" meant to newly arrived immigrants who believed in themselves, in each other and in the hope of unlimited opportunity for those who would sacrifice for it. Dramatically portrayed also are the evils of sweatshops and the swindling of unsuspecting victims by the "steamship ticket racket." The intense desire of the aliens to become citizens, what citizenship meant to them and can mean to all, is a good emphasis. The ending, wherein all difficulties are made to vanish through an intervention of the President of the United States, weakens an otherwise fine story. A, Y, C.

THE MIRACLE OF THE BELLS (Jesse L. Laski Productions). Heralded as a lesson in interfaith and goodwill, we find this picture to be the sentimental treatment of an overdrawn Cinderella story. The daughter (Valli) of a Polish coal-miner in a small Pennsylvania town makes good in Hollywood, only to die when reaching success. A press agent (Fred McMurray) who loved her brings her body back for burial from the small Roman Catholic church she attended as a child. What began as a publicity stunt ends as a posthumous acclaim for the young actress. A ground-settling crack brings about a "miracle" which is never properly explained to the people. The "good-will" message is telescoped hastily during the last moments of the film, leaving the audience with conflicting impressions. A, Y.

AN IDEAL HUSBAND (20th Century-Fox). A cross-section of aristocratic English life in the late 90's, this is a superb achievement in technicolor, exquisite interiors, beautiful outdoor settings and elegant costumes. The acting is well-nigh perfect, with clever dialogue and discerning insights into ethical conflicts, desire for power, and how far veneer will hold when a moral crisis comes. An excellent "comedy of manners." A, Y.

A DOUBLE LIFE (Universal-International). An intelligently conceived photoplay about a successful actor who identifies himself closely with his roles —until he plays "Othello," with dire results. Only a dramatic actor with the great skill shown by Ronald Coleman could succeed in this engrossing, plausible and understandable character portrayal. The use of music for shifting moods, plus realistic New York settings for authenticity, produce intense dramatic feeling. A.

TENTH AVENUE ANGEL (MGM). This is Margaret O'Brien's picture all the way, whether she skates down Tenth Avenue, cries because of childish disillusionment, or believes in "miracles" —in this case, a kneeling cow on Christmas Eve. An over imaginative child may take stories so seriously that they become reality, and their lack of fulfillment is a tragedy. This becomes the child's undoing until circumstances and individuals fall into their proper perspectives, as they do in this story. A clean picture in which good family relations are paramount. A, Y, C.

THE SIGN OF THE RAM (Columbia). Psychological melodrama, interesting if taken as pathological case history of a selfish, strong-willed invalid who nearly wrecks the lives of her husband and step-children before her destructiveness turns upon herself. Over-possessiveness is well depicted in all its scheming extent. A.

THE BIG CLOCK (Paramount). A well-concocted and suspense-laden story for those who care for the murder motif. Consistently well-acted by Charles Laughton, Ray Milland and others, and there are some moral lessons surmised. A.

ALIAS A GENTLEMAN (MGM). Wallace Beery is at his blustering best as the reformed "jailbird" wanting to go straight upon his release from prison. That his old partners in crime do not allow him much peace is a foregone conclusion. His rough attempts at playing the gentleman are mixed with humor-producing blunders. A, Y.

HOLIDAY CAMP (Universal). Typical English middle-class people's activities in a recreation camp run on "mass lines." All concerned endeavor to pack every moment with manufactured entertainment. There is not a dull moment, and much is quite enchanting. A, Y, C.

A MIRACLE CAN HAPPEN United Artists). Would it be too much to ask that a moratorium be called on screen "miracles"? They are becoming a habit. We were unable to detect the miraculous in this case, unless it be the device to string together some slap-stick comedy incidents as answers to a roving reporter's query on ""How did a child influence your life?" Some good actors lend themselves to this series of "gags," but the merriment seems rather forced. A, Y, C.

Suicide and The Higher Life

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The suicide of Jan Masaryk, the foreign minister of Czechoslovakia and the son of its great founder, raises some interesting questions about moral dimensions of human existence upon which we reflect only occasionally.

The suicide of the son is usually interpreted in the western world as a kind of final and brave act of loyalty toward the father's heritage. For the father was a great democrat; and the son who sought to combine faith in democracy with friendship for a great non-democratic neighbor took his life when history proved that it was impossible to preserve his father's heritage.

If this was the motive of the act, it proves, what deeds of martyrdom in history prove, that there is a dimension of life, higher than physical existence, which is sometimes in conflict with physical existence. If it is true that men can, at times, preserve the integrity of their souls only by sacrificing their life, we have a proof of a dimension of existence which cannot be equated with physical survival.

We may have varying views of the nature of the "soul" or the "spirit" of man and of its immortality; but our response to the sacrifice of life for the sake of an ideal is strong proof of the reality of this dimension.

But the question which this act raises is whether it is ever right to put suicide in the same category as an act of martyrdom. Did not Masaryk's father write a pamphet in his early academic days condemning suicide? And have not both the Jewish and the Christian faiths condemned it? Must we not make a basic distinction between taking one's own life and martyrdom.

These moral distinctions are important, and on the whole valid. But no moral theory ever fits every specific occasion. The Catholic philosopher Jacques Maritain tells of devout Catholics in the French resistance movement, who were finally persuaded that, though suicide is generally wrong, it would be right to take one's own life rather than run the risk of betraying a comrade in the torture chambers of the Nazis. Suicide may, in other words, come very close to, or be identical with, an act of martyrdom.

We cannot of course be absolutely certain of the motive of an act of self-destruction. Even in Masaryk's case there is the possibility that his acceptance of a position in the cabinet of a Communist government involved him in what he recognized, in the still watches of the night, to be a betrayal of his father's heritage.

He may have taken his life in self-disgust. Or he may have simply found the tension between his ideals and the political realities too difficult. These scruples remind one of the legitimacy of the distinction between suicide and martyrdom. But the possibility that the act was the pure assertion of moral integrity remind one to be charitable in judgment and flexible in moral theory.

MEMORIALS COMMEMORATING FOUR ARMY CHAPLAINS

Washington, D. C.—The most recent memorial to the four chaplains who sacrificed their lives when the troop transport, SS Dorchester, was torpedoed off the coast of Greenland in the early morning hours of February 3, 1943, is a three-cent postage stamp. The stamp honoring the four chaplains—George L. Fox and Clark V. Poling, Protestants; John P. Washington, Roman Catholic, and Alexander D. Goode, Jewish—is scheduled for release by the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., May 28, 1948. At the first-day sales' ceremonies to be held at the White House the nearest of kin of the four chaplains will be honored guests.

Another tribute, dramatically portraying the last heroic moments of the four chaplains, is a painting by Dudley Summers, owned by and on display in the New York City Headquarters Office of The National Conference of Christians and Jews. The picture depicts the chaplains standing together on the bow of the battered and heaving ship with arms linked together and voices raised in prayer as the ship is about to make its final plunge.

Last year a therapeutic pool for disabled veterans was dedicated to the memory of the four chaplains at the Bronx Veterans' Hospital, New York City.

An interfaith memorial chapel is being erected in the crypt of the Baptist Temple at Philadelphia. Persons of every faith have contributed to this project, which is sponsored by the Philadelphia Interfaith Committee. The shrine, to be known as the Chapel of the Four Chaplains, will have a seating capacity of 400 and a three-sided altar, mounted on a turntable, for use by the three major faiths. A decorative painting behind the altar, showing the Cross, the Star of David and the Tablets of the Law; stained glass windows; tiled floors; warm-colored stone walls and oak-stained woodwork, will lend beauty and atmosphere to the chapel. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, father of Chaplain Clark V. Poling, has been minister of the Baptist Temple for many years.

The York County Branch of "The Association for Childhood Education," York, Pennsylvania, has established "A Living Memorial for Good Books" in honor of the Four Chaplains. This memorial provides for the purchasing of books for distribution to the school children of the County.

Distinguished Service Crosses awarded posthumously to the four chaplains were presented to the nearest of kin on December 2, 1944. The citations of each contained the lines, " . . . heroically and calmly moved about the deck encouraging the men and assisting them to abandon ship. After the available supply of life jackets was exhausted, he gave up his own. He remained aboard the ship and went down with it, offering words of encouragement to the last."

A postage stamp, a painting, a therapeutic pool, a memorial book collection and an interfaith chapel to date memorialize the heroism of these four heroic American clergymen who gave up their lives in the service of their country.

The Statment On Unity

The "Statement of Faith and Order" released last week by the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity is a middle-of-the-road document that will not further the cause of Christian unity very much. It leans heavily, even to almost exact phraseoloy, upon the "Report of the Archbishop's Commission" familiarly known as "Doctrine in the Church of England." There are also decided traces of Canon Wedel's excellent book, "The Coming Great Church."

There is a hopeful note in one paragraph relating to the ministry, which is always the crucial point in discussions of Church unity. "When we refer to the historic episcopate, we are concerned with the essentials and purposes of the office of bishop and not with the incidental attributes of the office, or the details of the administration of the Church, which have changed from time to time and may continue to change." However, there will be much difference of opinion concerning what are "essentials" and what are "incidental attributes of the office." The Statement further "make(s) our own" part of the original Chicago Quadrilateral, "This Church does not seek to absorb other Communions." But then the next paragraph, also quoted from the Quadrilateral, says "Christian unity . . . can be restored only by the return of all Christian communions to the principles of unity exemplified by the undivided Catholic Church during the first ages of its existence!"

The Statement does a service by reminding the Church that both the majority and the minority reports of the Commission were "received" by the General Convention. Some falsely assume that the Convention rejected the majority report. It was never actually directly voted upon. Since the majority proposals still are, to our knowledge, the only practical proposals for bridging the gap between Anglican orders and those of other reformed Churches ever to be presented to the Church; and further, since they are in effect the same method which the Church of South India has since used, it would be tragic if they be forgotten. Those who disagree with them should offer other proposals, or revise these.

Unfortunately, the Statement contains no report on conversations and conferences under way. Even if the Commission was not prepared to issue any proposals at this time, the Church has the right to be informed. It is exceedingly bad strategy for the Commission to erect an iron curtain about its work.

Disunity is the great weakness of the Christian Church in the world today. Pray God our Church may take a place of true leadership in this area and not be satisfied with a pious form of good words. We hope that our American bishops going to Lambeth will speak courageously and forthrightly of the great yearning among the Churches of America for Christian unity.

Recall The Spanish Prayer Books

General Convention some time ago authorized the translation of the Book of Common Prayer into Spanish for use in our missionary work in Latin America. By a bad error of judgment, the translators were permitted to make certain specified changes. They were allowed to omit the word "Protestant" from the name of the Church on the title page, even though the Church definitely refused to make this change some years ago. This was permitted, however, on the basis that "Protestant" would be misunderstood in these missionary areas. This was a false argument and should not have prevailed. The truth is that certain missionary districts wish to deny as far as possible our Protestant heritage, and sought to bend the Book of Common Prayer to their purpose.

But then the original error was compounded by certain groups of translators who apparently deliberately misled the National Council by further changes in the Ordinal and the service of the Holy Communion. We say deliberately because these books were printed and shipped out of New York before any mention was made of these unauthorized changes.

At its February meeting, National Council sought to repair part of the damage. It admitted "irregularity" in translations not certified by the Custodian of the Book of Common Prayer. It asked the Standing Liturgical Committee of the General Convention to check the translation into Portuguese now under way. It declared that 'National Council will not publish or finance any edition of the Prayer Book which does not conform to the Standard Book of Common Prayer and is so certified by the Custodian of the Book of Common Prayer." The resolution closed with the statement that "The National Council deeply regrets that it has been unwitting party to the publication of the editions of the Book of Common Prayer in Spanish which do not conform to the Standard Book, and recommends that the fact of the actual or proposed changes in the edition of the Book of Common Prayer in foreign languages be brought before the next General Convention by the President of the Council."

One further step should be immediately taken. These psuedo-Prayer Books in Spanish ought to be recalled and repudiated. The cost involved is minor in relation to the principle involved. If these books are permitted to circulate even until the next General Convention, untold damage will be done. The Church will be represented by an unauthorized book. Almost surely, in the not distant future, these changes will be used as a precedent for further changes, not only in missionary fields but here at home. We strongly urge the April meeting of the National Council to reconsider this matter and recall these books. There should be no prayer books in any language in use without the certificate of conformity of the Custodian of the Standard Book of Common Prayer! Let the National Council act to safeguard the Prayer Book!

The Risen Christ Among The Common Things

We doubt whether it is possible to explain satisfactorily the mysterious appearance of Jesus to His disciples after His resurrection. For those who describe them spoke a different language from ours, and lived in a different world. We are certain however of one fact, that the man who says that if these appearances were spiritual, they were not real, is guilty of nothing less than the sin against the Holy Ghost.

It is significant that in describing one of those appearances, the author of the Fourth Gospel, whose narrative usually moved on an exalted, mystical plane, presents to us a picture of the Risen Lord who is still interested in common things. He comes from the other world with no oracular pronouncement of eternal significance, no stunning and spectacular revelation, but says nothing that He might not have said at any time.

In his story in his twenty-first chapter, the Evangelist tells us that the Master, whom the disciples at first daily see through the mists of the lake, speaks three times. And we can best realize the simplicity of His utterances if we translate them literally into modern speech:

"Boys, have you caught anything?"

"You will do better on the right side of the boat."

"Bring some fish ashore and have breakfast.

This story reminds us of the fundamental meaning of the resurrection which some of us have missed. It did not prove that Jesus was immortal, and therefore His disciples. They were already convinced of that, and were quite sure that Jesus had found His eternal rest in Paradise. But the amazing revelation was that Jesus was still their ever-present Friend, who desired to walk by their side, sup with them at their tables, who was interested in how many fish they had caught.

Today we again on a stormy sea can see the form of our Friend through the mist. When He asks us how far we have succeeded in the task he has committed to us, we must confess that, though we have toiled all night, we have failed. He asks us to throw our nets on the other side of the boat, to learn to do His work in His way. And if we try His way, we shall find abundant success, and He will invite us to share with Him the strength and encouragement which He alone can provide.

But we cannot stolidly return to the "common things" as if nothing has happened. For they can no longer be common. That fishing party in the Galilean lake was vastly different from any other because sanctified by the presence and blessing of the Lord. And when we welcome our Divine Friend, the Risen Lord, among the common things of daily life, they are transformed and transfigured, and all our life—our business, our family and social life, our politics, become truly religious because in them we are partners of our Lord.

ALBERT SCHWEITZER: An ANTHOLOGY. Edited by Charles R. Joy. Harper & Beacon. $3.00.

Albert Schweitzer is a great Christian who has given his generous talents to the world-wide mission of the Church. Scholar and medical doctor, musician and artist, he has given us an example of what a man may become when he gives himself fully to Christ. All of us will not read all that he has written, but all of us may gain great value from carefully reading this selection of his writings. The editor has drawn source material from practically all of Schweitzer's English translations and arranged them under various subjects to aid the reader.

PRAYER. By Dr. Alexis Carrel. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.25.

The book is a translation of Dr. Carrel's La Priere, of which a part was translated and printed in the Reader's Digest early in 1941, but in a form much edited and cut down. Here there is given the translation of the entire French book—some 50 pages in length in English form.

The author writes persuasively and in simple language, easily understood by the reader, of such matters as: Definition of Prayer, Its Techniques, Where and When to Pray, the Effects of Prayer—psycho-physical and curative, and of the Meaning of Prayer. It is a book written by a layman for lay people. Here is a book to place in the hands of people who are sceptical or indifferent to prayer.

PROJECTED VISUAL AIDS IN THE CHURCH. By William S. Hockman. Pilgrim Press. $3.75.

This is one of the most valuable handbooks made available to religious educators in some time. It is the most thorough approach to visual aids which can be obtained. Thoroughly tested and adequate in its philosophy, it deals with general principles, and then applies them in practical detail to projected visual aids, giving instructions to the teacher, advice on utilization, telling how to use motion pictures in worship, suggesting ways of setting up the room and equipment, giving understanding of projection equipment, providing hints for promotion and administration, listing some unsolved problems, and outlining some programs. It is essential reading for anyone contemplating making any use of visual aids of this kind in the whole school or in class rooms.

HOW GOD LOOKS AT THIS WORLD OF TODAY

By Canon J. Douglas Paterson, Toronto

Until a second war upset things, for a time most people looked on the world situation quite hopefully. There were, indeed, some black spots, but they were far away; some things like race relationships, social barriers, needed adjusting which would be done some day; but on the whole we were getting on; this was a good old world, at least for "nice" people; we were progressive folk and given a little more time, everything would be all right.

God's view is exactly the opposite. Where we lament war, famine, spoiled lives, mental confusion, waste, divorce, and all the other evil things, God goes deeper and mourns one man's sin—the root cause of all the misery. This is to God a sin-sick world, a lost world, and this is the way we must regard it if we are to enter into God's plan and be agents in God's purpose of redemption.

"A LOST WORLD." We don't like the word. But then we generally don't like to be definite about anything. A blackhearted villian is an evil man, but on the other hand a man who is too white, too perfect, too faultless, may probably be uncomfortable to live with. We are not sure that we like either black or white—we prefer grey—not too goody-goody but certainly not too naughty. God knows nothing of grey. The Bible speaks of "going to the right hand or to the left." Paul tells us "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is life." The Judgment (Matt. 15) is "Come unto Me" or "Depart from Me." Jesus spoke of the lost coin, the lost sheep, the lost son. He told us "the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which is lost." How could He come to seek "the lost" if He knew there were no lost souls? The Cross has a meaning only if there are lost souls, and if there is no other way by which they can be saved.

As we contemplate the text "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost" in the light of the Cross of Jesus three truths become chrystal clear:

1. This is a lost world.

2. This world is worth saving and can be saved.

3. No price—even the death of the Son of God—was too great for God to pay to save a lost world.

Once we get these clear in our thinking and accept them as God's truth, then the world's dark night is broken by the heralds of dawn, and rays of hope kill the blank despair and give us encouragement. So it was that Jesus told us of "the found coin," "the found sheep," and "the found son." By facing the facts that this is "a lost world" but that it can be a "saved world," the Lord Jesus gives us a picture of God's perfect world restored, and our part with the Lord Christ in its redemption.

THE CHURCH IS GOD'S SCHEME. Today the Church knows she has failed, but she is not defeated. She recognizes her failure frankly and the causes for her failure; she is conscious of her weaknesses but more conscious of the source of her strength. She cannot save the world but she can seek the lost and bring them to the feet of Him who can save the lost. She has at last found her relevancy in the world of today, even though it be a world pitted with every evil thing, and she is fast awakening to the task in the New Age. The Church has learned a lesson and her feet are on sure ground. Now she can go forward with no uncertain tread.

"Strong is the faith which God supplies Through His Almighty Son."

THE CHARGE

After the conclusion of the prayer for the "Whole State of Christ's Church" there is in our present Prayer Book a very short and simple rubric as follows: "Then shall the Priest say to those who come to receive the Holy Communion."

The revisors of 1928 removed the long and very formidable exhortation from this place in the Communion Service and put it back, together with other rubrics at the end of the service, so that although it may still be used it is not obligatory, and can be abbreviated at the discretion of the clergyman. These rubrics and the Exhortation will be considered later when we come to them.

The Charge or Invitation to "Ye who do truly and earnestly repent you of your sins and are in love and charity with your neighbors, and intend to lead a new life, following the commandments of God, and walking from henceforth in His holy ways; Draw near with faith," etc., is now considered a sufficient warning and admonition, followed as it is by the General Confession.

In fact the omission of the old Exhortation, which went into considerable detail as to the nature of self examination necessary is much more in line with the general principles of our church. We leave details of doctrine and conduct largely to one's individual conscience, and although this freedom may occasionally be abused it is generally recognized as being a wiser method of discipline than that of dictating to people exactly what they shall believe and how they shall live.

The whole thought of the Communion Service looks forward and not backward. It is not so much what a person has done as it is what one hopes and intends to do that is the important thing.

The Holy Communion is meant to be a source of strength for future living, rather than an act of repentance for past offences, and should be recognized and used in this way.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

THE UNHAPPY POSSESSORS OF A LITTLE RELIGION

By the Rev. R. G. Preston,
Rector, All Saints Church, Worcester, Massachusetts

We all know the line, "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing." The proud possesor of a few facts has not gained mastery over life but has often simply developed headstrong overconfidence.

The thought pertains to the field of religion also. We are tempted to paraphrase that line to read, "A little religion is a disturbing thing." Someone has put it in a popular way by saying that most Christians do not have enough religion to keep them from indulging in sin but just enough to keep them from enjoying it.

Two hundred years ago the English theologian, William Lord, stated it this way, "Whilst you are divided betwixt God and the world, you have neither the pleasures of Religion nor the pleasures of the world, but are always in the uneasiness of a divided state of heart. You have only so much Religion as serves to disquiet you, to show you the handwriting upon the wall, to interrupt your pleasures, but not enough Religion to give you a taste and a feeling of its pleasures. You dare not wholly neglect Religion, but then you take no more than is just sufficient to keep you from being a terror to yourself, and you are as loath to be very good as you are farful to be very bad."

People might well be a little more "fearful to be very bad." There is not enough wholesome awe in contemporary religion. But it is to be regretted that too many Christians are "loath

BISHOP-ELECT BLOY'S CONSECRATION

April 21

Los Angeles, Cal.—Official announcement has been made from the office of Bishop-Elect Francis Eric Bloy, D. D., dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, that the date set for his Consecration as third bishop of the Diocese of Los Angeles, will be Wednesday, April 21, at 10 A. M. at St. Paul's Cathedral.

Very limited information is available as to who will be present at the ceremony, but it is expected that the Orthodox Christian Churches, (Greek, Syrian, Russian, etc.) as well as many educational institutions and all officials of diocesan organizations and institutions will be heavily represented.

The Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, retired former Presiding Bishop, has been invited to be the Consecrator. It is expected that there will be at least 12 other bishops from all parts of the United States either taking part in the Consecration Service or in attendance.

Bishop-elect Bloy, 43 years of age, was born in Birchington, England, coming to this country when a boy, with his parents. His father was also a clergyman. When elected dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, eleven years ago, he was one of the youngest men to be so elected in the Church, and immediately prior to that he was first associate rector and then followed as rector of St. James By-the-Sea, La Jolla. At 43, Dean Bloy is one of the youngest men to be elected Diocesan in the Church.

FOURTH CONFERENCE ON TOWN AND COUNTRY LIFE

Davis, Cal.—The fourth Conference on Town and Country Life, held March 29-April 1, was attended by 18 Episcopalians and one hundred others, including the Rt. Rev. Lane W. Barton, Eastern Oregon; the Rt. Rev. William F. Lewis, Nevada; the Rt. Rev. A. W. Noel Porter, Sacramento; the Rt. Rev. Sumner Walters, San Joaquin; the Ven. William F. Bulkley, Utah; the Ven. Rex A. Barron, Sacramento; the Rev. E. Dargan Butt, instructor in Problems of Rural Work at Seabury Western and C. D. S. P., and ten other clergy from California, Nevada, San Joaquin, and one layman, Joseph Scott, a professional social worker, who is in charge of Layman's Work in the Missionary District. Bishop Walters served as organist on several occasions.

The conference headliners included: Bishop Lewis, who led a daily meditation on the theme, "Men of God," which proved very soul searching and inspiring.

The Rev. E. Dargan Butt was in charge of a seminar on Evangelism, which was presented in a forceful style, stressing types of evangelism, the value and dangers in evangelism and the necessity for thorough preparation before beginning a program and an equally thorough follow-up.

The Rev. Henry S. Randolph, of New York (Presbyterian), represented the Home Mission Council with lectures on "The Rural Church Movement in America" and "The Rural Church Functioning in Its Community."

Interest in the Davis Conference was developed by Archdeacon Bulkley, chairman of the Rural Commission of the Eighth Province, and the Rev. Norman E. Young, member of the advisory board of Northern California-Western Nevada Council of Churches and provincial representative of the Episcopal Rural Workers' Fellowship.

The Episcopal group presented a list of recommendations to the conference which were heartily approved. Among the suggestions was that definite time be allotted to the various church groups to meet with their leaders in planning application of material presented in lectures and seminars.

BISHOP SHERRILL REPORTS ON CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION

Philadelphia, Pa.—On March 18th the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill came to Holy Trinity Church under the auspices of the Department of Christian Social Relations of the diocese and also of the Woman's Auxiliary Department of Christian Social Relations to give a report on the President's Commission on Civil Rights, his talk entitled, "To Secure These Rights." Preceding the convocation there was a period of intercessions given for the peace of the world by the Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, suffragan bishop of Pennsylvania. Bishop Sherrill was met by the Rt. Rev. Oliver J. Hart, bishop of Pennsylvania, the mayor of Philadelphia, the Hon. Bernard Samuel, and members of the Standing Committee and the Executive Council. Music at the service was rendered by a choir of the Youth Council.

Bishop Sherrill made very vivid in his report that the commission had given long and careful study to the report, no area of political issue was ever discussed and he laid it squarely on the hearts of each individual present to make it a very personal concern to see that in this time of Evangelism we made every effort for our fellow man to "secure these rights" and charged us to remember that in every instance the place to begin was with ourselves.

SUMMER CAMPS AND CONFERENCES

Orlando, Fla.—The Diocese of South Florida will again hold several camps and conferences at its Diocesan Camp, Camp Wingmann, located a few miles north of Avon Park, Florida, on Trout Lake. The Board of Managers of Camp Wingmann have announced the following camps and conferences: Clergy Conference under the direction of the Suffragan Bishop, June 8-10; Laymen's Conference directed by Mr. Morton O. Nace, of Tampa, June 12-13; Adult Conference under the direction of the Rev. Martin J. Bram, rector of Holy Trinity Church, West Palm Beach, June 13-19; Camp St. Mark, for young people ages 15 to 18, directed by the Rev. John H. Soper, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Sarasota, June 21-July 2; Camp St. Andrew, for boys ages 9 to 15, under the direction of Mr. Nace, July 5-16; Camp St. Mary, for girls ages 9 to 15, directed by Miss Alcesta Tulane, of St. Petersburg, July 19-30; Camp St. Francis, under the direction of the Rex. Gladstone Rogers, rector of Holy Cross Church, Miami, assisted by the Rev. John S. Armfield, vicar of St. Paul's Church, New Smyrna Beach, August 3-13.

TORNADO STRIKES COLLEGE TOWN

President's Home Wrecked

Indianapolis, Ind.—The tornado struck Indiana early on the evening of Good Friday, while doing great damage to the small town of Coatesville, also severely damaged Danville, where our Canterbury College is located. Canterbury College is sponsored by the Diocese of Indianapolis and Northern Indiana.

While the college buildings escaped severe damage, the residence of President Edgar C. Cumings was completely wrecked. Dr. and Mrs. Cumings and their two young boys dived under a bed, and thus escaped injury. The top of the house was completely blown off, most of the walls caved in, and the house so damaged that it is beyond repair.

The Rev. James E. Savoy, Chaplain of the College, who lived a few blocks away, was not aware of the fact that the tornado had struck Danville until an hour or more after the disaster. The Rev. Leonard C. Wolcott, who teaches in the history department of the college, was returning from a Good Friday service in Bedford, Indiana, and approached Danville from the south just as the storm struck. He had to abandon his car and ran, walked and crawled the half mile to his house, not knowing what had happened to Mrs. Wolcott and the children. While the roof of their house was wrecked and all windows broken, the house itself was not too severely damaged. Many of their neighbors had their houses completely damaged, and the Wolcott's house became a refuge for the night for many injured people, though they were without heat and light. An automobile from a garage more than a hundred yards away was picked up and deposited on the foundations of what had been the Wolcotts' barn.

Canterbury College, which was taken over two years ago by the two Dioceses in Indiana, is the Church's only co-educational liberal arts college and is seeking the support of the general Church. The President's house will have to be completely rebuilt, and any assistance that the Church generally can give will be very much appreciated.

RICHARD A. KIRCHHOFFER,
Bishop of Indianapolis.

PRAYER BOOK USED IN CELEBRATING CEYLON INDEPENDENCE

New York, N. Y.—When Ceylon gained its independence, the religious observance of the event was observed with the Independence Day service from the American Book of Common Prayer.

Howard Spencer Hane, of the Hoosac School, Hoosick, N. Y., has a letter from a friend in Ceylon, an Anglican priest. He wrote that he used the copy of the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer which had been sent to him by Mr. Hane, "in celebrating the gaining of independence by Ceylon."

BISHOP OLDHAM VISITS SEWANEE

Sewanee, Tenn.—"A third World War means the end of civilization, which is already tottering on the brink of destruction," the Rt. Rev. George A. Oldham, bishop of the Diocese of Albany, said in an interview at Sewanee, March 20, adding that "the Christian Church is our only hope."

Bishop Oldham, who has just returned from a tour of the Southwest Pacific and Australia, cited Germany, a country in which the entire moral rebuilding depends upon the small but vigorous group who opposed the Nazi state, and who are now attempting to bring order out of the ruins of that nation.

As a delegate to the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, Bishop Oldham will attend conferences in Europe this summer, before going to the Lambeth Conference of the Anglican communion.

WONDERFUL WORK BEING DONE

New York, N. Y.—Henry F. Budd, of the National Council's Department of Finance, is in Shanghai, helping the Mission to cope with the financial situation in that country of excessive inflation. Mr. Budd had the opportunity of visiting Wuhu recently, and wrote the Council: "It was a pleasure to be in Wuhu for a couple of days and see the splendid progress being made by Bishop Craighill. He sings high praises for the great help made possible through the Reconstruction and Advance Fund appropriations. There is so much evidence of reconstruction work being done that I am sure Bishop Craighill has the entire situation well in hand, and knows exactly what he is doing and wants to do. There is no doubt that he is a very good leader in his district. It certainly was gratifying to me to see the wonderful work which they are doing up there."

COUNCIL, PROVINCE OF SEWANEE

Albany, Ga.—The Church's work among Negroes was an important item in the discussion in the Provincial Council of the Province of Sewanee, meeting on Lookout Mountain, near Chattanooga, Tenn., March 30 and 31. A resolution expressing the "conviction that it is most important to the welfare of the whole Church that the Bishop Payne Divinity School be continued and supported," and "that it be improved and enlarged" was passed.

The report of the Committee on Negro Work, headed by Bishop John Moore Walker, of Atlanta, recommended a "modus vivendi" in dealings of whites with Negroes, which includes elimination of prejudices and establishment of frankness rather than condescension as a basis for relationships.

The Council members were guests of one of the group, Mr. Z. C. Patten, at his mountain-top lodge, "Witches Cabin." Only two members were absent.

Department reports indicated increased activity in Christian Education, Town and Country Work, Christian Social Relations, and College Work. Mr. Ted Gannaway, provincial member of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, outlined steps being taken, and planned, in that field.

Plans for the 1948 Synod, to be held October 5-7 in Augusta, Georgia, were formulated. Meetings will be in St. Paul's Church. The Presiding Bishop will speak twice, and Dr. Almon Pepper will be on the program.

Council sessions were presided over by Bishop Jackson, of Louisiana.

CHINESE WOMEN SHOWING INDEPENDENCE

New York—For the first time in the history of China "the thoughts and ideas of women are forces to be reckoned with," writes Professor Liu En-lan of mission-supported Ginling College, Nanking, in a recent letter received here by the United Board for Christian Colleges in China. "Since the war," Dr. Liu declares, "Chinese women have become released from their traditional bondage as dependents and are becoming as essential as men in earning a livelihood for the family.

"Another change that has taken place in China is the political attitude of the people. Formerly they simply managed their own affairs, cultivating the land to feed the nation and doing business for the economic life of the country, and they left politics to their leaders. Today they themselves are concerned with the political problems and policies of the nation, and are also feeling concerned enough to enter into political activities. Women, too, are interested and are working to get seats on national and city political councils."

HOSTEL IN APPRECIATION OF DR. CLAUDE LEE

Wusih, China.—March 16 was the fortieth birthday of St. Andrew's Hospital, Wusih, and was observed with special services and ceremonies. Locally St. Andrew's is known as "The Universally Benevolent Healing Courtyard."

Instead of the usual morning prayers, the Rev. C. T. Chiang, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, celebrated the Holy Communion for the hospital staff in the Memorial Chapel.

A number of guests representing the other Christian churches in the city, and the official and business groups of the city were invited to meet the staff at tea. The company assembled at 5 o'clock in the newly-completed Hostel given by Wusih people in their appreciation of Dr. Claude M. Lee's services to the community. The building provides living quarters for the unmarried men of the staff and supplies a dining room and general meeting place for all the St. Andrew's personnel. In the Library, an engraved stone tablet was unveiled and presented to the hospital by Mr. P. Y. Tang, a mill owner, and other friends of Dr. Lee. The following is an English translation of the inscription on the tablet:

"On this occasion, the people of Wusih have decided to erect a memorial tablet in commemoration of the long and valuable service rendered by Dr. Claude M. Lee, the founder of the hospital. The opening ceremony took place on March 16, 1908. At that time the country people of Wusih being accustomed to old ways of medical treatment, looked upon scientific medical methods with astonishment and scepticism. . . . (But) even in days of severe heat and cold, Dr. Lee made calls on his patients in distant quarters. He saved thousands of lives in the seventeen districts of Wusih, and his name as a miraculous doctor spread far and wide. Patients thronged to him thick and fast. Many country people respected him with idolatry and obeyed his orders with implicit faith. . . . As head of the hospital, Dr. Lee erected many new buildings, enlarged and improved upon their equipment and adopted the use of new, efficacious medicine. . . . He carried out his projects with prudence and perseverance. According to an old Chinese saying, 'Either be a wise minister, or else be a good doctor.'

"Among the western missionaries who have crossed the waters and founded hospitals in China for the benefit of the masses, Dr. Lee is a prominent figure. The ideal of universal love as represented by these missionaries can be found in the teachings of many Chinese philosophers in the past. If our fellow-countrymen could be more public spirited and forego their self-interest for the good of others, China would have a great future. The ideal of universal love which breaks down the barriers between man and man would serve as the best prescription for a country that is suffering from war and devastation. In recording the immortal service of Dr. Lee, let us express our hope for the dawn of a brighter day for China and for the world."

The Rt. Rev. K. T. Mao, assistant bishop of Changhai, replied briefly on behalf of the Church and the hospital, of whose new board of directors he is chairman.

The latter part of the program consisted of an address by Mr. Yih Tsin, well-known writer and lecturer in political economics, and a member of the Central Executive Committe of the Kuomingtang in Nanking.

Binsted, of the Philippines, refers to St. Andrew's Theological Seminary, housed in a war-surplus hospital building, as "the key to our whole future plan and policy in connection with our great venture of faith with the Philippine Independent Church."

Bishop Binsted said further that the three men from the Independent Church who have been in the Seminary since it opened in Manila, "have made a fine record and apparently feel thoroughly at home with our own men."

Ten more men from the PIC are expected to enter the Seminary at the beginning of the next school term.

PROGRESS IN RECONSTRUCTION

New York, N. Y.—Good progress in reconstruction in the Philippines is reported by Mission Architect John Van Wie Bergamini. He intends to move to Sagada in the near future, and start work on the church, convent, orphanage, kindergarten, hospital and school together with a couple of the Bontoc buildings and the residence at Besao.

"While in Sagada," Mr. Bergamini wrote, "I had a man trim the surface of the stone walls of the church to see how badly the fire had damaged them. They can be used by replacing a few of the damaged stones. We are getting a break on St. Peter's Church in Manila. Instead of signing a fixed contract we made it a 'cost plus' job, with the accepted estimate guaranteed maximum. We are saving 15% to 20% on the contract."

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH HOME

Mother's Day

Richmond, Va.—Believing that The Protestant Episcopal Church Home as nearly as possible represents that haven of rest which our Church would like to offer to its gentlewomen who are no longer able to work for their own support, the Board of Managers decided to present the opportunity to its friends to help in the care of these ladies.

Mother's Day seemed an appropriate time to make our appeal because of loving memories cherished.

In the Spring of 1929 our first letter of appeal was sent out. Contributors to this Fund will be interested to know how the Fund has grown through the years. In 1929 gifts amounted to $200.00. In 1947 they had increased to $3,000.00.

Before sending the 1948 Mother's Day letter we are taking this opportunity of suggesting that rooms might be endowed as memorials to loved ones. The Home has limited accommodations and insufficient endowment to provide for those who might otherwise be accommodated. It has been abe to carry on only by supplementing the income from the Endowment Fund, with gifts made in response to the Mother's Day appeal, and contributions from the branches of the Woman's Auxiliary. These gifts are used for nursing care and unforeseen miscellaneous expenses required for the health and comfort of these ladies.

Twenty-nine ladies are now being cared for. There are as many more on the waiting list.

As a bit of history we are quoting from the issue of Our Diocesan Work of November, 1882. In the publication of that date the Rev. Alexander W. Weddell, then rector of St. John's Church, Richmond, wrote:

"We add this month to our standing record of Diocesan Institutions The Protestant Episcopal Church Home, No 517 N. Fourth Street, Richmond. This is a Home for elderly ladies in needy circumstances in which they can spend the evening of their days in peace and comfort, free from the cares and privations of poverty, and in the enjoyment of religious privileges.

"The admittance fee is $200.00 for any and all alike without discrimination.

"There is an Endowment of some $4,000.00 we think, and it is very desirable that this should be increased as soon as possible to such an extent as to make this Institution self-supporting.

(Signed) (Rev.) A. W. WEDDELL"

The Protestant Episcopal Home, which in the year 1909 was moved from 517 N. 4th Street to 1621 Grove Avenue, is now approaching its 75th anniversary and we hope that all of our Church people will show deep interest in its support.

CHRISTIAN MISSION SCHOOLS IN DESPERATE PLIGHT

From the Jerusalem and the East Mission comes this statement: "Among the sorry facts of the times there is one that makes no headlines, but, for all that, weighs heavily upon the minds of all whose primary concern is the education of young Palestinians. That fact is the desperate plight of Christian mission schools. Some have no alternative but to close. Others, with a fair muster of pupils, either Arabs or Jews, are gallantly carrying on and, with depleted staffs, are working prodigiously to keep in touch with unhappy absentees, especially those preparing for examinations.

A Jewish boy wrote: "It is very unfortunate that I had to withdraw from school, but I cannot help it. Please remember me kindly."

An Arab boy wrote: "During my stay at the school it was hard for me to estimate its importance, but now I come to realize the deep loss I have reluctantly to accept."

ANOTHER SIDE OF THE PICTURE

The religious picture among the students of the University of Virginia is not as stark as might be gathered from reading the article by Chad Walsh in te November issue of The Church Review. No doubt Mr. Walsh reported accurately the attitude of a very small group of students, but this does not represent the vast majority. It could hardly do so in view of the fact that Madison Hall, the building of the first college Y. M. C. A. in the United States, is just across the street from the Rotunda and is the center of a strong religious program carried on by its 621 paid members.

Under the leadership of the Rev. Oscar Wooldridge the Y. M. C. A. sponsors a widely varied religious program. Voluntary services are held twice weekly by students in the little Gothic University Chapel on Wednesday and Sunday afternoons. Voluntary Bible classes are attended by 185 students. The Boys' Club, with a student staff of twelve, works regularly with a group of boys in downtown Charlottesville. A regular program of inter-faith meetings attracts 60-80 students each time. About 30 student-faculty meetings are attended by 300 students. A weekly series of lectures on Theology is participated in by members of the faculty and some of the more mature and thoughtful students. A series of student-faculty conferences on Religion in the Making has been held this year for the first time. The Professor of Religion, Dr. S. Vernon McCasland, is chairman of the Board of the Y. M. C. A. Assisted by the Rev. John Fischback he gives a program of courses in the college curriculum. Each year the Richards' lectures on religion are given by some distinguished man. This year President Colwell of the University of Chicago spoke on the source materials of the New Testament. Each year during Religious Emphasis Week college classes are suspended at a convenient hour to permit all students to hear some well-known preacher in a series of addresses on some religious topic. This series was opened about 1920 by Dr. Hugh Black. Among his successors have been T. Z. Koo, Arthur L. Kinsolving, H. St. George Tucker, Beverly D. Tucker, and "Scotty" Cowan.

The local churches, some in the immediate vicinity of the University and others in downtown Charlottesville, attract many students to their services and work effectively through their student organizations. Among these are the various clubs: Canterbury, Wesley, Newman, Westminster, Baptist Student Union, and the Hillel Foundation.

St. Paul's Memorial Church is located adjacent to the grounds of the University. The strength of the congregation is best indicated by the steady stream of students who go from the University to the Seminaries, especially the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia. In the choir of St. Paul's, in the Sunday School, and especially in the missions in the nearby Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge, students are active. In some years as many as 50 students take an active part in the mountain missions.

The large number of clergymen and missionaries who have gone out from St. Paul's through the years indicates a healthy religious atmosphere in the student community. This is hardly surprising in view of the large number of Episcopal students (1400 at the present time), and the type of leadership furnished by the rectors of St. Paul's. Three bishops are former rectors, Tucker of Ohio, Powell of Maryland, and Kinsolving of Arizona. Other bishops from the alumni include two recently elected, Gunn of Southern Virginia and Bland Tucker of Western North Carolina.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." No sterile soil could yield such a crop as this. It may be admitted that St. Paul's does not reach as many students as it would like, but may be as firmly maintained that it touches deeply those it does reach. Those who know the present rector, the Rev. Theodore H. Evans, will not be surprised at this. He continues a great tradition of service to the students of the University of Virginia and through them to the Protestant Episcopal Church.

IVEY F. LEWIS,
Dean of the University of Virginia.

Dear Fellow Episcopalians:

One of your Church colleges needs help! Canterbury College, in Danville, Indiana, founded on the roots of an old normal school two years ago by the two Indiana dioceses, is as much a part of the Church as you yourself, your parish, your diocese, or indeed the National Church.

Not all of your missionary opportunities are in foreign fields! Canterbury has 350 students, 60 of whom are Episcopalians coming from sixteen states. These students and the college faculty have the necessary faith to build this institution into one of the finest Church schools in the country.

But we need immediate and general help to minister to the spiritual needs of our students. At present our Chapel is a small room in a partially unheated building. We have chairs for only thirty people and the room is equipped very poorly. We do have, however, an organization of Episcopal students who want to convert a larger, more suitable room into an adequate chapel—they are willing to do the necessary work themselves.

You can help us in several ways. We could use anything in the way of extra furnishings available in your parish—old kneeling pads, pews, alms basins, hymnals, announcement boards, vestments, articles to administer the sacraments, linens—almost anything. Secondly, any contribution of money either for a specific article or for our general fund would aid us immeasurably, since the college has only limited funds at its disposal. A visit from you or your help in persuading students to attend college here would give us an encouraging expression of your faith.

Remember, this is a vital part of your Church. The college and our chapel deserve help. We believe that we can repay you by helping to develop graduates imbued with the faith of Christianity. This is your opportunity to put used or unneeded articles into use and see them create men and women who will endeavor to create a better world for all of us. I urge you to write to me and help me to build this newest of our Church colleges.

EDGAR C. CUMINGS,
President, Canterbury College.
Danville, Indiana.

JESUS

The amplest gift God ever gave is Jesus,
Who came to earth our race to save,
Man Jesus.
Endured the Cross, despised the shame
Brave Jesus
And gained the most exalted Name
Lord Jesus.
His reign extends o'er every land
King Jesus
His throne, a cross and God's right hand
Christ Jesus.
Our great High Priest, He ever prays
Friend Jesus,
That men find bliss in love's highways,
Dear Jesus.
He left a rich bequest of Peace
Our Jesus,
And wins for faith sin's full release,
Strong Jesus.

GOD TAKES HIS TIME

Sir: There is much criticism by both friends and enemies of the Church, which is the whole body of the baptized, for taking nearly two thousand years to partly Christianize the world. As Christ promised to be with His Church He is thus criticized as well as Christians. People overlook the fact that God takes His time for His operations.

Even after our own nebula, the "Milky Way" was created and our star, the sun, had thrown off our planet, Earth, it took two billion years for Earth to be ready for man, and perhaps a billion of this for living cells to develop into intelligent men. Then came thirty thousand or more years before God revealed Himself to Abraham, a thousand more before He gave the ten great commandments to Moses, and some twelve hundred and fifty years more before He revealed through Christ that there are three Persons in the Godhead.

America was only discovered in 1492 and Australia after 1770. The "Cape to Cairo R. R." and exploration of the Congo and the Niger basins are matters of our day. The Valley of the Amazon still awaits airplane work. It took six hundred years for Christianity to establish its Creeds. Since the 5th century we have had Buddhism to contend with and Mohammedanism since the 7th, and both are well equipped for strenuous resistance throughout the whole of southern Asia.

Meantime Providence has brought about world political conditions that seem to promise great opportunity. Civilization is advancing rapidly, and these marvellous airplanes enable the Scriptures and missionaries to be literally dumped into every nook and cranny of the entire earth.

God the Father is providing, God the Son is leading, and God the Comforter is overcoming our ingrained pessimism by exalting the Mercy of the Holy Trinity.

ROBERT W. BARNWELL, SR.
Florence, S. C.

Of the 440 students enrolled at Ginling College in Nanking last semester more than forty per cent were Christians. Two students (daughters of the Indian ambassador to China) were Hindus; three were Mohammedans, and one a Buddhist. Nearly 200 of the girls received their college preparatory training in Christian schools. Most popular major subject was sociology, with English second and home economics third.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

On The Burma Road

AN AIRMAIL LETTER FROM BISHOP QUENTIN HUANG

The first Yunkwei Synod, in spite of distance and poor means of transportation (some delegates spent actually 9 days on the road), brought 10 clergymen, 9 lay delegates 8 woman representatives, and 2 bishops to Kunming from Feb. 22 to March 2. In addition, there were 6 special guests and 1 special speaker. On the first day we had a grand opening service with the Cathedral solidly packed and more than one hundred in the procession. In the afternoon the opening session of the synod was marked with a roll call of clergy, lay and women delegates, the election of the steering committee and the election of the new bishop of Yunkwei. The last was held again in the church with solemn ceremony; by the grace of God I was elected unanimously save one abstention.

For 10 solid days the clergy and lay delegates coming all over the Burma Road happily gathered together. The first few sessions were given to the reports of the work of our churches and our auxiliary institutions, such as, hospitals, orphanages. Every morning our regular sessions were proceeded by Holy Communion, while in the afternoons addresses were given by Bishop Hall from Hongkong on "The Church in China After the War," by myself on "Our Mother Church in America," and the workshops of Dr. Alice Gregg from Shanghai on adults, youth, women, children, lay-training and rural work. Daily devotional meetings conducted by Bishop Hall, dinners given by our friends and organizations, committee meetings or even regular sessions occupied all the evenings. Three mornings and one afternoon were devoted to the discussion and adoption of our new Constitution and Canons. Because of high enthusiasm, we need neither tea nor coffee to keep us awake; because of our harmony we required neither sugar nor candy to sweeten our mouths. "Thanks to Dr. Gregg, for she has opened our eyes to the field of religious education," mentioned some; "the same to Bishop Hall, for he has deepened our spiritual life, which certainly helps us make the synod so successful," commented others! After my report on "Our Mother Church in America," the rectors have been very much interested in Every Member Canvass, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Girls' Friendly Society, Daughters of the King, etc. They all have expressed their desire to experiment along these lines when they get back to their stations.

To extend the Kingdom of God in Yunkwei, the synod has resolved that we should open two sub-stations, provided we have means and personnel; one in Pao Shan, Yunnan, at the request of the non-Christian magistrate and the other in Tsuni, Yunnan as an answer to the call of the sheep without a shepherd there.

Although Yunkwei is still a baby only 8 years old, it was resolved unanimously that every clergyman together with his vestry is to draw up a self-supporting plan according to the local conditions, no matter how hard it may be, so that we may save some from what our Mother Churches and friends give to us for more new evangelical work in these two provinces. More inspiring to us is that they have without the least hesitation decided that every church in the Diocese should give 10 per cent of its total income to the Diocese for missions. Again they have adopted unanimously a Forward Movement for Evangelism of doubling the church membership in a year. With God's help we hope and pray our dreams may be realized.

Most encouraged by the reports of the splendid work from the delegates of 3 Woman's Auxiliaries in Kweichow and one in Kunming, the delegates from the other churches, one and all, have voluntarily promised to organize at least one Woman's Auxiliary in each parish. They have passed a number of important resolutions concerning evangelism, service, spiritual life, and elected Mrs. L. C. King as the Diocesan Chairman of Woman's Auxiliary, with my wife the vice-Chairman. Under their leadership and with the high pitch enthusiasm of the delegates, we are deeply convinced that the woman's work will have a great future!

Thanks, praises and glory be unto God for He has poured His blessings upon our first synod. One of the Chinese proverbs says, "Favorable climate is not so good as advantageous position; advantageous position is not so good as human harmony." We, in Yunkwei, have in addition to the lovable climate and peaceful position in the Southwest China, also the human harmony as exhibited at this synod. During our ten days' sessions neither the clergy nor the lay delegates had any personal scratch; every one whole-hearted and enthusiastic attempted to solve all the problems with only one aim—for the glory of God and as the item of our synod all the clergy voluntarily rededicated themselves to God's work in Yunkwei with a solemn ceremony. Because of their spirit of harmony and cooperation, faithfulness and loyalty, both my wife and I have been made very grateful to God and very happy to bear our crosses.

Yunkwei hereafter is a diocese by which we mean in China only ecclesiastical autonomy, not in the same sense as it is in the States. It was organized into a district only 8 years ago. For the sole reason of making it every Christian's baby, Yunkwei has been made a diocese with a hope that all the Mother Churches and Christians will extend us a hand, as PECUSA and CMS and our many friends in the States have done. Daily we meet opportunities; daily heart-breaking we have to turn some down. At the synod requests and petitions for clinics, hospitals, churches, schools and taking care of orphans came in one after another. All the clergy and lay delegates in accord desire to establish one and only one Episcopalian High School in the Diocese of 245,000 square miles. May God help us in realizing this so that His future labourers will have a chance of receiving church education. We need missionaries, as doctors, nurses, teachers, preachers, youth workers; we need a few more scholarships to train the future church leaders, and we need some more assistance in taking care of our blind, deaf-mutes and orphans. Constantly we hear the Macedonian call—"Come over and help us." Indeed the harvest is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Kindly pray for us to the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into His harvest! May I have the honor of transmitting this call to you, dear friends!

Yours very faithfully,

QUENTIN K. Y. HUANG.

Kunming, Yunan, China.

A Brief History Of The Protestant Episcopal Church In The United States Of America

By MR. GEORGE V. BLUE, Washington, D. C.

PART TWO

The Colonial Revolution and the Church

The Anglican churches in the mainland colonies were particularly hard hit by the War for Independence. Even the shadowy connection with the bishop of London was now dissolved and the support of the S. P. G. was withdrawn. A large number of the clergy conscientiously adhered to the royal cause in view of their pre-ordination oath of allegiance to the King. In the exodus of loyalists during and after the War, great numbers of influential laity and a similar proportion of clergy were included. Congregations ceased to exist or were left destitute of pastoral care. In many of the former colonies, when the War was over, churchmen were a remnant rather than a Church with not much left them but their books of Common Prayer. It is only too easy, however, to over-stress facts which in themselves were sufficiently unhappy. There were centers where the corporate life of the Church was still strong; in all the former colonies there were Churchmen still loyal to their tradition, awaiting leadership; and fortunately there were leaders who nobly answered the challenge that the catastrophe of war and the needs of new times presented.

THE CHURCH IN THE POST-REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD

This period may be regarded as corresponding measurably to the "critical period" of national history, and the term holds good for the Church as for the Nation. The situation was even more desperate for the ecclesiastical body politic, as there was no semblance of a central organization. In the new States, formerly colonial entities, the remaining episcopal congregations were not only without the chief officer that gave them their distinctive status but seemed not to have much likelihood of obtaining one. That many able and prominent laymen remained to the Church was exemplified in the list of signers of the Declaration of Independence, and later on in the membership of the Constitutional Convention. They and the remaining clergy might have rallied about a bishop had there been one; but in the experience of most of the American churchmen a bishop was a foreign and almost fabulous creature.

Another tiny ecclesiastical minority, the Roman Catholics, were also lacking an American hierarchy, but their problem was essentially different. For the isolated Church of England congregations there was no question of any but a Protestant episcopal succession, if there were to be one at all.

Everywhere the churches were impoverished, and disestablishment as part of the post-war domestic settlement in those regions where the Church had enjoyed special legal privilege served at first to create further confusion. The separation of church and state effected in 1784 in Virginia nevertheless freed the Episcopalians from the hampering restrictions of secular control and put them in a position to set their house in order in their own way. Not the least among the Church's difficulties there, both before and after disestablishment, were the persistent attacks levelled against it by foes of the former Establishment. Some fifty of the clergy still remained in the Old Dominion out of a pre-War total of one hundred twenty-two. No one cause can be adduced to account for the decrease, but contrary to a common impression extreme loyalist sentiment among parish incumbents would not account for more than a third of it; an equal or larger number of the Anglican clergy in the colony, moreover, had been active supporters of the patriot cause during and after the War.

In South Carolina, although three-fourths of the parish clergy had sided with the patriot cause, the former English connection was for the time being a handicap to regaining popular goodwill. Perhaps the most serious impediment to the Church's revival was an intense parochialism which prevailed, encouraged by the local conditions of the times. The contrast with Connecticut was vivid. In Maryland the remaining clergy and the active laity, amid their own troubles, fortunately perceived that revival was closely connected with united efforts toward a reorganization that would go beyond the limits of the individual States.

The churches in Connecticut, where fourteen clergy were still resident out of a former twenty, entered the "critical period" in the best condition of any in the new States, notwithstanding the political conservatism which had been marked among them during the War. The Tory principles of the leading presbyter, Samuel Seabury, were well-known. At the other end of the scale, Georgia emerged from the War with no Anglican clergy ministering there. All things considered, it was in the middle States, after Connecticut, where the fate of the former Church of England congregations seemed most immediately hopeful. The firm centers of the Church viewed as a whole were in New York and Philadelphia, although at one time during the War the only rectors in their respective colonies who carried on their functions were Provoost of Trinity parish in the former and White of Christ Church parish in the latter.

As early as 1780, the Reverend Dr. William White (who was also chaplain of the Continental Congress) had given serious thought to what independence would mean to the episcopal congregations. In 1782, he published the historically notable pamphlet "The Case of the Episcopal Churches in the United States Considered." This carefully studied presentation became virtually the foundation charter of the Church's federative constitution later on.

Three institutional problems of prime importance confronted the independent American churchmen: (1) unless there were to be thirteen separate Churches in the thirteen confederated—and far from united—States, a broader form of ecclesiastical union would have to be sought; (2) the Book of Common Prayer would have to be adapted to the realities of the American scene and the new political loyalty of American churchmen; (3) how to obtain the episcopate for the American churches by the consecration of native clergy to that office. The third point was singularly pressing, for here and there voices had bruited the possibility of continuing the Church without an episcopate, particularly one endowed with temporal powers. The general mind of the churches, however, was fixed on having bishops in the historic line who would confirm and ordain. The churches of Connecticut were the first to take effective steps by electing Samuel Seabury as their bishop and sending him to England to seek consecration.

Seabury met with a peculiar legal impediment to favorable action by the English hierarchy, as by law only a British subject who would swear allegiance to the Crown could be consecrated by the English bishops. The

TWIGS AND ROOTS

There was a big mulberry tree in our back yard. We say "was" advisedly. It isn't there any more. We liked the tree when we first saw it. It gave good shade and served as a screen between us and our neighbors. However, it didn't take us a year to discover that our mulberry tree was not the blessing we had supposed.

When mulberry season rolled around the next summer, our tree bore fruit in profusion. The berries were the small seedy kind, unfit for human consumption, and hardly fit for that of birds, but there were so many of them. They fell all across the walk leading to the house, and everyone who came that way tracked them in on their feet. We had mulberry stains on the floors, on the rugs, on the furniture, on our clothes, on everything. To add to our discomfort, the breeze blowing across that moldy carpet of berries pervaded the place with a sickly, sour odor.

It was exasperating, and we decided to do something about it. We sawed off limb after limb, and branch after branch, until we had whittled that tree down to half its size. That, we thought, would eliminate at least half the nui cance. How wrong we were. The next year the remaining branches simply produced twice as many berries, and the plague was as bad as ever.

That was just too much. We knew drastic measures were required, and we took them. We did the job in the way we should have done it in the first place. We quit fooling with the branches and started working on the tree down where the roots were. When we had finished there wasn't any tree left except a pile of fire wood. Needless to say, we haven't been troubled with mulberries since.

After we had gotten rid of that nuisance, we began to wonder why this old world of ours hasn't gotten around to tackling its problems of evil in the same way we went after that tree. It strikes us that it would be more sensible and more productive than the way we are going at it now.

For ages, people have been working on the small sins and the obvious wrongs. They prune them off one by one, and hope that the suffering and pain of the world will be reduced in proportion. It doesn't look as though we are getting very far very fast with that method, and it is pretty clear that we never will. For each one we cut away, at least two others grow in its place. At that rate, the job is a hopeless one.

We just can't win that way, because the evils we fight against—lying, meanness, stealing, prejudice, oppression, murder, and all others of their kind—are just twigs and branches on the tree. They all grow out of the great evils which are their roots. These roots are under ground where we don't see them, or recognize them as evil. Not seeing what they really are, we even approve them and think that they are good. They are such things as personal ambition, the belief that we are better than our neighbors, the aim for power and reputation. These are all just plain selfishness and self-seeking, and that is the tap-root of all evil. All the sin and wrong, all the suffering and pain, all those ills the flesh is heir to grow out of it. They are nourished and sustained by it, and it makes it possible for them to produce the nauseous fruit which stains our world and gives it so foul a smell.

If we are ever to get rid of evil, we have got to stop pruning the twigs, and lay the axe to the root of the tree. The axe was given to us long ago: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and mind and soul and strength; and thy neighbor as thyself." The mind of man has never given us so good a tool.

A SMALL BOY'S GIFT

New York, N. Y.—A small boy, sitting in a small church, heard the Presiding Bishop's appeal for World Reliefin that memorable radio broadcast on February 29.

When the offering was received and presented at the altar, one of the alms basins bore that small boy's silver wrist watch . . . the best thing he had to give at the time.

OF INTEREST TO CLERGY

Sewanee, Tenn.—Of special interest to members of the clergy is the announcement that the Graduate School of Theology, University of the South, will be open again during the month of August under the direction of Dr. M. Boyer Stewart, of General Theological Seminary. Approximately thirty ministers can be admitted for the highly concentrated course which will give credit toward the degree of Master in Sacred Theology. The Graduate School will open on June 26 and last through August 28.

Meditations In His Presence

X. "Catholic and Apostolic Church."

(From the Nicene Creed.)

This means an all inclusive. all encompassing Christian fellowship—for all men everywhere by direct order of Jesus Christ, by direct inspiration from the Apostles. This is the Church. This is the Christian Church. We are a living, on-moving part of it. We who are part of it, a believing working part of it.

Is this our simple all embracing belief? Yes? No! Rather, it is the point where many stumble and stop. Catholic vs Protestant. Protestant vs Catholic. Roman Catholic vs Anglican Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Catholic. Protestant against ritual, against liberalism, against bishops, against a widely separated array of so-called evils. There are many distortions of the early Christian fellowship, from whence we should get a continuous stream of knowledge and power to combat the very evils which so easily beset us. The kind of apostolic succession that really matters, and spells life or death for any branch of His Holy Church, is the continued oneness of teaching and practice of Christ's word and way those first disciples discovered and used with such astounding power and results.

Hands on heads, bishops without interruption, quarrels and questionings, valid vs invalid ministries, and all the paraphernalia of ecclesiastical differences and blocks to reunion centered around the word "apostolic", fade into comparative insignificance when we envision the "coming great Church" moving heaven and earth, as did the Church of the Apostles. They with one accord continued stedfast in the apostles' teaching and fellowship about Christ and with Christ. This is true apostolic success in endless succession, world without end.

In His Presence we find truth revealed about His desire for us as Christians, as Protestants, as Episcopalians, and have found that truth revealed as an hearty desire to join forces around Jesus Christ and His way as revealed in the New Testament, and wherever else it has been successfully found and followed, by monk or saint or quietist layman. Wherever God's Holy Spirit emerges with power to change and redeem the souls of men, there we find true catholicity and true apostolic tradition.

Prayer for Peace

Thy Kingdom come. Thy Will be done, On earth as it is in Heaven.

Nunc Dimittis

To continue in Simeon's company is to have our feet set in a large room, one in which we are encouraged to cultivate personal religion of such a quality that its outworking will be seen in evangelistic and missionary endeavor.

Under the direction of the Holy Spirit, Simeon knew that he had seen One Who was to be the Saviour of "all people" (Lk. 2:10, 31).

Having seen the Lord's Christ, did he do anything other than sing about it? His friend Anna, after returning thanks, spoke of Jesus to all that looked for redemption (38). Noble Simeon probably did that too, and continued to joyfully witness until he finally departed this life in peace.

We, who know the God of our salvation in a greater degree than was possible to Simeon, have been brought into the company of Christ's disciples, (learners), and have been numbered among His friends (John 15:15). In such company our lives have grown, and our worship of God, in the congregation of His saints, has become more blessed—but in all such experiences, the friends of the Master must show outward results. The context of John 15:15 must not be overlooked. Such statements as those of verses 8 and 13 and 16 are for us, no less than verse 15.

To those who, because of years or infirmity can no longer take active part in well-loved organizations of the parish as of yore, there remain other expressions of service. "Fat and flourishing" we may not wish to be, but we should seek fulfilment of the companion promise in Psalm 92:14, "They shall bring forth fruit in old age." What form shall our Eventide-service take? Somehow it ought to be along Anna and Simeon lines; our witness should have an evangelistic accent as we gratefully tell of the great love of Jesus.

Spirit-directed commendation finds expression in a variety of ways. To Isaiah, a young man, the word was, "Go"; to Paul it was "Witness"; to aged John, "Write". (Isa. 6: Acts 26: 16; Rev. 1:19).

To that third method we now give thought, as something complimentary to the use of our knees, a bit of ministry born in the quiet of our prayer periods.

Musing on the great spiritual privileges of the friends of the Master, rejoicing in the realization that they had been constituted a kingdom of priests, (Intercessors), the Seer heard a Voice saying, "Write." (John 13: 1; Rev. 1: 5, 6, 19).

When Paul the Aged could no longer be an intinerant evangelist, he became a gospeller by his pen, and half of our New Testament came to us that way.

The Rectory library may include a copy of "Letters to His Friends." Try and borrow it, and learn from such a glorious servant of the Lord Jesus as Forbes Robinson, something of this ministry by mail.

It needs not the pen of a ready writer to tell to others, in simple, convincing words, our own experience of the common salvation, and of the things accompanying it.

Yet it is not a ministry to be undertaken lightly. Letter writing can only be really used, as it becomes an outgrowth, an outworking, an overflowing of our own developing devotion to our Lord and His Word. Only as our letters are Spirit breathed can we avoid the appearance of being overrighteous and preachy—but, if this phase of lay minstry is offered to us by the Lord of our lives, we must not say Him Nay. It may be but a word, that the Spirit's Voice whispered, "Write"; but the worker passed onward unblessed and weak, whom we were meant to have stirred to courage, devotion, and love anew, because when the message came to us we were out of touch with our Lord. But to the soul, made sensitive through frequent prayer, there will open a field of most satisfying service. Known to us are lives without love, men and women burdened with heavy cares, friends in a distant land, perhaps a missionary, lonely and discouraged—well, there is our field of service. During our preparatory time in the quiet, we shall, as in Ezekiel 3:15, sit where they sit, until God-given understanding and sympathy is ours.

If, in deep humility, we will get under their burdens, and in some cases number ourselves with transgressors, as suggested in Isaiah 53:12, we become, not only people ready to make intercession for such, but the Master may graciously entrust us with one of His pens, and O that it might be a quill from the wing of the Holy Dove.

By our letters, our sympathy, our prayers, our kindness, we who are elderly or house-fast, and the other readers too, will thus make a way for the inflow of God's love into needy and loveless lives.

The Miscalculation of Modern Man

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Modern man has conquered nature more successfully than any previous generation. But he has had no marked success in getting along with his fellowmen.

We live in a world of broken communities. We have not merely failed to organize a world community. That failure might be excusable, since the task has never been attempted before. But we are also failing to preserve the smallest, most intimate and oldest of all human communities: the family.

When modern man tries to explain these failures he usually asserts that they are due to our tardiness in applying the technics by which we conquered nature to the affairs of mankind. I should be more inclined to believe that our failure in getting along with our fellowmen is partly due to the fact that we use precisely the same technics by which we conquered nature in our human relations.

We think of our fellowman as a kind of guinea pig who can be manipulated and experimented with. We apply psychological technics to persuade him into causes which we regard as good for him. We tend to treat him as we treat the things and forces of nature.

Meanwhile our fellowman is a person. He is not an object but a subject. He has his own discrete identity and dignity which we have no right to violate. Each person is unique and can therefore not be understood through the scientific generalizations by which we know nature. Something of poetic insight is required to understand the complexity of his motives. And the clairvoyance of love is required to understand the mystery of his internal life. Relations between persons are not made easier by "scientific technics."

There are, of course, necessary political and social technics, required for the regulation of the common life of mankind. We need more, rather than less, scientific intelligence in trying to adopt our social institutions to the needs of a technical age. But in the ultimate instance personal relations are not governed by the mind.

Persons confront each other in the totality of their minds, hearts, and wills. The wisdom by which they understand one another is the wisdom of love and not of science. The love by which they overcome the frictions between one another must be informed by the spirit of forgiveness, rather than by the spirit of scientific objectivity.

Perhaps we are failing in our human relations because our conquest of nature has made us too proud and too filled with the sense of power. The spirit of love which oils the frictions of life must be prompted by humility.

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin

Charles W. Sheerin made an outstanding contribution to the life of the Episcopal Church during his all too short ministry. His career was a meteoric one. His abilities were quickly recognized, and he served a number of great parishes in Texas, in Virginia and finally in the nation's capital. His influence, however, went far beyond the parochial ministry. He was editor of The Southern Churchman from 1932 to 1938. His editorials were constructively evangelical, carrying on the great traditions of this magazine.

As vice-president of the National Council from 1938 to 1942, there was probably no diocese of the Church into which he did not go. He possessed a great flair for such promotional work, and he was recently called again to use his talent by serving as chairman of the campaign of the Virginia Theological Seminary for funds to rebuild and expand that great old institution.

His sudden death from a heart attack at the early age of fifty is a warning to the Church. We burn up our clergy by the impossible loads we place upon them. Our Episcopal Church is grossly understaffed. Though communicants have doubled since the turn of the century, the number of active clergymen has remained practically the same. An average Roman Church of comparable size to one of our larger churches will have three or more priests assigned to it, in addition to a number of nuns. A like Protestant Church will have a staff of four to eight trained full-time assistants to work with the pastor. We think such a parish is doing well if it has a curate and a director of religious education.

The Church militant has lost a devoted presbyter to the Church expectant. May God grant "Sherry" "continual growth in His love and service," and to his family, courage and consolation!

Radio And Television

On the whole, the Churches of America have failed in their use of radio. The recent broadcast of the Presiding Bishop was an ingenious, finely-conceived single broadcast. But the great sweep of radio has passed religion by. Feeble "Morning Devotions" unenthusiastically sponsored by local ministerial groups; the commercialized evangelism of fundamentalist groups; and the broadcast of actual church services, ill-adapted to the air, make up the great bulk of Protestant religious broadcasting. Time devoted to religious programs has the lowest listening audience of any programs on the air! The average person has little idea of the techniques and responsibilities of broadcasting and so misuses the time given to him by a local station, which, incidentally, probably does so only to be able to report this to the Federal Communications Commission as time given to "public service," over the anguished protests of the sales-manager of the station who groans trying to sell the following half-hour! All of which explains why religion gets such poor time on the air, and is constantly shifted about.

There is real hope in the recent organization of a "Protestant Radio Commission" formed under the leadership of the Federal Council. It is, however, greatly to be hoped that this new commission will work with (and possibly merge with) the already well-established "Joint Religious Radio Committee" which has done notable work both in setting up Radio Workshop groups for ministers and in producing outstanding religious programs, such as the first rate "All Aboard for Adventure" series for children, and "To You In America," produced for Church World Service. The Churches which formed the "Joint Religious Radio Committee" are all members of the Federal Council group.

We trust that the cooperation of our Church in this work will be whole-hearted, and that the proposed Episcopal network program will be coordinated with the planning of other Churches. If every Church sets up a separate denominational hour, there will not be enough hours of time available on the air, no matter how much money we might have to spend.

And now television is coming along! Unless the Churches wake up and move with unprecedented speed, we will be left out of this entirely! There have been sporadic telecasts, such as the one from the Washington Cathedral when the Presiding Bishop was installed, and at least one service from St. Paul's Cathedral in Detroit. But opportunity for such telecasts will end when television networks begin full-time commercial operation. For the expressed attitude of many in charge of net-work television is bluntly, "No place for religion on television!"

The Churches ought to accept this challenge! Radio and television stations often seem to forget that the air waves belong to the American people and not to the stations. The stations are merely licensed to use the air waves in the public interest.

But if the Churches are to receive an adequate amount of time on television, the Churches must do two things which they did not do in radio. They must be prepared to study the techniques of this new art fully, and to use them effectively. Further, the Churches must act quickly. Co-axial cables are being rapidly laid between many cities. Their completion means the beginning of net-work television within a year on a nation-wide basis. Unless we move rapidly, we will be left out and the new miracle will develop without religion. Then it will be ten times as difficult to break into it.

Our Church with its dramatic liturgy has a great advantage in television. It might even be an avenue to a great liturgical revival in all Churches. We hope the new "Protestant Radio Commission" will move immediately into the new field of television, and make long range, sound plans to exploit this miracle of communication for the Kingdom of God!

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

THE LUTHERAN LITURGY. By Luther D. Reed. 692 pages. Muhlenberg Press, 1947.

Dr. Reed's admirable and illuminating book is more than a commentary upon the Lutheran Liturgy. It aims to fit the Lutheran services into proper relationship with the other historic liturgies, or more broadly into their place in the larger story of Christian worship. An introduction on the meaning of public worship is followed therefore by two chapters which sketch that larger story. They do it well. Obviously in such a sketch there can be no long discussion of the many obscure or controverted liturgical problems of the first centuries of the Church's life, but Dr. Reed is judicious in his judgments. It is important to remember that history is a field in which scientific objectivity is never completely realized. But the sketch which brings up to the Reformation is adequate and clear.

We come then to the core of the book and to the field in which Dr. Reed is master. The problems which Luther and the other reformers found in adjusting worship to the new life of the Church, Luther's own views; his attempts, some successful, some not; his influence on the liturgies of other lands Sweden and England especially; the "liturgical disintegration" after the thirty years war and the revision movements in Amercia culminating in the present Lutheran Common Service book—all are skillfully and sympathetically presented. The commentary follows with a vast store of illuminating detail. Non-Lutherans will be particularly interested in the discussion of Luther's handling of the Consecration in the Eucharist, the lack in his liturgy of the prayer which is universal elsewhere and the later Lutheran views on the matter. Episcopalians will be particularly interested in the study of the relation of the German experiments of the 16th century to the English Prayer Book. There are many points of contact.

It remains to note the helpful studies of music, the excellent comparative tables, the selection of Eucharistic prayers, the glossary and the comprehensive bibliography. The book is definite and authoritative in its own field and a welcome addition to liturgical learning.

THE ARTS OF THE CHURCH. By Richard H. Ritter. Pilgrim Press. $4.00.

Here is a book on church arts which may be used profitably by individual readers, study groups, committees on music and drama and worship, and by college and theological students. This is the announced object of the book, and the author has fulfilled his purpose. It is profusely illustrated, and has an interesting text. A philosophy of common worship undergirds the specific chapters on architecture, furnishings and fittings, music, literature, drama and the dance, painting and sculpture, and "the artist himself."

PRAYERS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE. By Abigail Acker Johnson. Westminster Press, 1947. $1.50.

MORNING, NOON, AND NIGHT. By Frederick Ward Kates. Morehouse-Gorham Co., 1947. $1.25.

Nothing is harder to write than a good book of devotions. What may appeal to the author is only with difficulty and considerable alteration applicable to the devotional needs of another. One common fault must be said of both books —many of the prayers are far too long, and are rather essays than prayers. One can only compare them with the standard of all prayers—the Lord's Prayer—to sense their verbosity. Mrs. Johnson's book does have the merit of great simplicity of style, but it is very doubtful whether either book can serve the purpose which the author intended.

STOP LOOKING AND LISTEN. By Chad Walsh. Harpers. $1.25.

This is an imitation of C. S. Lewis, and a bad one at that. It scolds, it is dogmatic, and it assumes that if these unargued positions are not accepted the reader is a dolt. The author has just come out of unbelief, and as a new Christian he has all the answers. Perhaps you will like it.

CHRISTIANITY AND PROPERTY. Edited by Joseph F. Fletcher. Westminster Press. $2.50.

Those who know Dr. Fletcher will recognize immediately that this book is full of dynamite. It is dedicated to Vida Scudder, and this provides an additional fuse. And the writers inclue Bishop Emrich whose reputation is built on his sound and radical Christian interpretation of society; Frederic Hastings Smyth, who combines an ultra-Catholic liturgical system with a Marxist view of society; Charles L. Taylor, Jr., the popular and liberal dean of the Episcopal Theological School; Edward R. Hardy, Jr., the expert historian; Charles Duell Kean, the energetic follower of Kierkegaard and Niebuhr; Paul Louis Lehmann, the only non-Episcopalian and a fine scholar; Miss Scudder and Dr. Fletcher. This is a sound, scholarly and penetrating book, the first to come from this school of thought which is likely to be widely read. Here are the uncompromising standards of a Christian society in relation to property, worked out without regard to the capitalist prejudices which have wrecked havoc on the modern Church. It is an historical treatment, beginning with the Old Testament and carrying down to the present day, providing information available in no other single volume.

THE CHRISTIAN HOPE OF IMMORTALITY. By A. E. Taylor. Macmillan. $2.00. 1947.

Here at last we have an American reprint of a book published in England some years ago, and which unfortunately had been but little known in this country. The author was the Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, and was one of the greatest Platonic scholars of the past generation.

The reviewer knows of no book which so decisively and sharply brings out the distinctive contributions which the Christian Faith has made to the problem of immortality. It is a book which all clergymen should read and reread, and alert laymen will also profit much from reading it. The content of Eastertide preaching would be very different were the teaching of this book mastered. For all its depth of meaning the book is simply written, and once started the reader will want to finsh it.

THE CHURCH'S MESSAGE

Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson, Toronto

With the picture as we have drawn it in the two previous articles clearly in our minds we accept the challenge and answer three important questions:

1. Has the Church a message for this day and age?

2. What is the message?

3. Can she put it across? and how?

1. WHAT DO WE MEAN BY THE WORD "EVANGELISM"?

(a) It is more than an intellectual presentation of truth. You may know the truth but not obey the truth. People must be made to know the truth, not what they think is the truth.

(b) It is more than applying the power of Christ through the Church to social questions. It does not properly rule out an aggressive attack on the evils of the day; not even on political and economic questions. International policies and affairs are keenly followed —the Church's influence and weight, is thrown on the side of right moral principles; but this is not enough.

(c) It is more than moral reform. A good woman may reform a bad man and probably will keep him on the narrow path. Many other splendid agencies are working magnificiently for the uplift of the fallen and degraded. Alcoholics Anonymous is one of these. The modern trend of Social Agencies, many under state control and others financed by our Community Chests, are doing a wonderful work, but in all of these there is something lacking if there is no strong religious foundation, and this is both the despair and hope of many who are leading in these good works.

(d) Having given the negative side now let us accept and study a positive definition. "To Evangelize is so to present Christ Jesus in the power of the Holy Spirit, that men shall come to put their trust in God through Him, to accept Him as their Saviour, and to serve Him as their King in the fellowship of His Church." The world wide Anglican Communion has generally accepted this definition first formulated 25 years ago, and we still put it forth as our answer to the first question, "Has the Church a message?"

2. The second question, "What is the message", requires the whole of the next article of this series.

3. Can the Church put across the message?

Once we are sure of our message we seek and find ways of putting it across to others. What works in one place may or may not work elsewhere. Personality enters into the situation—what one man does easily may be impossible even for his friend, but out of many efforts in many different kinds of places and with varying types of leadership certain principles of action have been discovered and are really successful when energetically attempted.

The most important discovery is that while we may preach to a crowd we must speak to the individual. Men are still "won one-by-one". When once we have understood this then we seek, as good physicians of the soul, to diagnose each one's individual need and then to apply the healing treatment suitable to the need. The prayer of many a faithful pastor today is not to be made a great preacher or a good organizer or leader, but "God make me a soul-winner; a workman who needeth not to be ashamed".

CXVXXI

The General Confession for Communion Service

This prayer is of very ancient origin, and its use is of great interest. According to Evan Daniel in his book on the The Prayer Book page 369, "In the primitive Church at this point in the service, the priest confessed his sins in silence; so did the people. In the medieval English Church the priest and people confessed aloud." About the eleventh century adoration of the Virgin Mary and of other Saints had become so common that the Confession was addressed to them as well as to God. A very interesting sample of ancient English is found in Dr. Daniel's book on this same page, and we give a little of it as an illustration of the development of our language as follows: "Also ye shall knell adown apon yowr kneys, seyyng after me, y cry God mercy, and our lady seynt mary, and all the holy company of hevyn, and my gostelyche fadyr, of all the trepasse of syn that y have don in thowte, word, other (or) yn dede, fro the tyme that y was bore (born) yn to this tyme."

This prayer almost in its present form was included in the first Prayer Book of 1549 except that it was then to be said by the priest alone for the people. In 1552 it was provided that "a member of the congregation or one of the ministers should say it together". In the revision of 1662 its present use by the clergyman and all the congregation was introduced.

Its form is very similar to the general confession in Morning and Evening Prayer, except that in some respects it is not so much in detail, and is more fervent.

In spite of its antiquity the origin of our sins in "thought, word, and deed" follows modern psychological teachings, that this is the regular order of the development of conduct, and more and more we are realizing that deeds and habits go back to the realm of thought, and are the result of ideas or impressions that have been implanted in the mind, sometimes unconsciously.

In this way we come unexpectedly upon the realization that, even in its most ancient parts the Book of Common Prayer is amazingly up to date.

TWO OR THREE TOGETHER

The other day at lunch several of us were talking about "Prayer Groups." It all happened because there was serious illness in a friend's family. This young woman said how wonderful it was because she could call this group of Intercessors in her Church and ask them to pray for this person.

There are many such small groups of Intercessors in our Churches. It is too bad that there are not more groups available for all when we need prayers for others. A group could easily be started if you wished to make this your contribution to the Church.

In one city there is a downtown chapel open from ten in the morning to five in the afternoon reserved for "quiet prayers". There are many groups here and there. Sometimes they meet in the Church and sometimes in the home. It might be a good idea to meet in a home where there is a shut-in. Many times this shut-in could feel that this is one great contribution she can make in the fellowship of the Church. We should use them more than we do.

The Southern Churchman has printed a selection of prayers in leaflet form for the use of such groups or for individuals. Copies may be had for the asking through the office, 101 N. Jefferson St., Richmond, Va. These suggested prayers, along with the Book of Common Prayer, may help you in forming a group of your own.

One of the things that I remember in England in the summer of 1939 was the many chapels marked for "Private Pray Use Only". Unless you wished to use them for prayer you were not, as a "sightseer", welcome. It was one place set aside for prayer.

I wished that we Protestants would use our churches during the week as our Roman Catholic friends do. It is

RESOLUTION PASSED BY REGENTS

Meeting of Board, University of the South

Sewanee, Tenn.—At a special meeting of the board of regents of the University of the South April 1-2, the regents discussed at length the international crisis and the threat of war and passed the following resolution which was telegraphed to the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church and subsequently released to the press. The full text is as follows:

"We, the board of regents of the University of the South at Sewanee, protest the feeling throughout the country of the inevitability of war.

We hold and proclaim that America must take the lead in stopping the spread of Communism, in preserving individual freedom and personal liberty, and in upholding the dignity of man. We must hope and strive to the utmost to accomplish this without recourse to war, and we must have faith that this can be done.

We must put our hearts and minds to the urgent task of studying the facts, finding a plan, and following a course that will attain these ends. We call ourselves, our faculty and students to this high objective.

For ourselves we regard the following as fundamental:

1. Acceptance by the United States of responsibility for leadership in world affairs.

2. A clearly defined foreign policy for the United States.

3. A strong Army, Navy, and Air Force.

4. A declaration of our deep desire for peace, but also of our determination to fight if necessary for the preservation of liberty and justice.

5. Economic aid to the non-Communist European countries as provided in the Marshall Plan.

6. A World Federation of Nations really capable of settling international disputes, stopping war and aggression, and preserving peace.

We reaffirm our belief in the redemptive power of the Christian faith, and we pray that we may know and do God's will.

CHAPEL OF THE NATIVITY

Second of Grace Cathedral's Beautiful Chapels Dedicated

San Francisco, Cal.—During brief but richly impressive services the Chapel of the Nativity, the second of Grace Cathedral's beautiful chapels in San Francisco, was dedicated on March 16, together with the chapel furnishings. of California, pronounced the prayers The Rt. Rev. Karl Morgan Block, bishop of dedication and made a short address. Assisting the bishop was the Very Rev. Bernard N. Lovegren, dean of the Cathedral.

The chapel furnishings include the mural, "The Adoration of the Virgin," painted by Jan Henrik De Rosen; a bronze and wrought-iron chancel rail; four large Gobelin tapestries made in France; a marble altar; a carved wood and gilt reredos flanked by four women saints, the statuettes of which were designed and modeled by Mary Emma Flood, daughter of Mrs. James Leary Flood, the donor of the chapel furnishings.

The chapel is dominated by the mural. Mr. De Rosen, the artist, is considered the greatest living muralist working in the medium of gold and silver. The artist describes the mural in part as follows: "The entire work is a revelation inciting to prayer. The Virgin Mother is enthroned against a dark blue sky flecked with tiny stars and her countenance is beautiful according to ancient eastern standards. Enthroned between heaven and earth, she unifies both and offers to the world her new born Son. There appear in the painting the three shepherds and the wise men offering incense, gold and myrrh, symbolizing the three stages of prayer —the worldly prayer, the inspired prayer, and the contemplative prayer. St. Joseph is portrayed in the manner and style of the early middle era of European history as he is shown carrying burning coals which turn into flowers, after a medieval French legend. The glacier in the picturesque landscape is a symbol of paganism. It melts under the radiant sun of Christianity into the clear water of life, satisfying the thirsty."

The marble altar and the reredos are surmounted by the pelican, symbol of Christ's own sacrifice on the Cross. The four women saints on the sides of the reredos represent Dorcas, who made garments for the poor; Lydia, the patron saint of dyers; Priscilla, whose hospitality was extended to the Apostle Paul, and Phoebe, who bore St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans.

In his address Bishop Block expressed the hope that the sanctuary would be used especially for private worship and meditation in the name of all Christian children and women, and that the chapel itself with its mural would be an inspiration not only to the members of the Cathedral but to the wayfarer who enters its portals.

The furnishings were dedicated in memory of James Leary Flood, Jr., the son of the donor.

CONSTRUCTION OF WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL MAY BE RESUMED

Washington, D. C.—Tentative plans for the resumption of building of Washington Cathedral were announced by Dean John Wallace Suter, chairman of the building and grounds committee, following a special meeting of the committee with the Cathedral Chapter on April 11. Final decision will not be made until detailed architect's plans and construction costs have been obtained, but it is hoped that work may be begun this summer.

The proposed building would mean further construction of the South, or Patriots' Transept, up through the triforium level, and would include the War Memorial Chapel. As tentatively envisioned this would mean continuing the present building from the east side of the present-portion of the transept, and include the Memorial Chapel.

The last building to be done on Washington Cathedral was the North Porch, entrance to the transept exactly opposite the proposed construction. The porch was dedicated in May, 1942, by the late James Edward Freeman, third bishop of Washington, under whose leadership large portions of the present edifice were erected.

During the war all plans for a building program were postponed, but in the late fall of 1945 plans for completing the South Transept and erecting the War Memorial Chapel were made, and over the intervening months this project has taken form. In the spring of 1946 the completed portion of the South Transept was formally designated as the Patriots' Transept and hallowed as the site of the Memorial Chapel.

The cathedral architect is Philip Hubert Frohman, successor to the firm of Frohman, Robb, and Little, whose revised designs and working drawings of the cathedral have been used since 1920. The original drawings, accepted in 1907, called for a cathedral of the Renaissance style, but the first Bishop of Washington, Henry Yates Satterlee, determined that the cathedral should be Gothic, believing that this style is "far more conducive to the thought of prayer and worship than that of any other period, and unlike other styles owes its development entirely to Christian influences."

The War Memorial Chapel will enshrine the National Roll of Honor wherein are inscribed the names and service records of thousands of men and women who have served in the armed forces and allied services in the recent and past wars. Daily, names to be enrolled in this, the only known national honor roll, are received at the cathedral offices.

Many patriotic and veterans organizations have enrolled the names of all their service members. Every state in the union, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii are represented. Although there is no requirement, other than the desire of the veteran or his next of kin, for inclusion in the National Roll of Honor, many of the stones which will be used in the actual construction of the chapel, have been given in memory of, or as a thankoffering for, the return of a serviceman whose name appears on the National Roll of Honor.

UNTRUE REPORTS ISSUED

New York, N. Y.—Shortly after 11 A. M. on Saturday, March 13, a grenade exploded in Saladin Street, Jerusalem, a few feet from the rear gate of St. George's Hospital, and a few inches in front of an Arab sentry box. So reports the Rev. Dr. Walter C. Klein, American chaplain, to the National Council.

Dr. Klein added that the missile, though noisy, inflicted no damage, but the Arabs were exceedingly vexed because at first it seemed self-evident that the grenade had been thrown from the roof of the hostel. The Arab spokesman, invited to inspect the premises, satisfied himself that there were no Jews on the roof and departed, expressing the opinion that the grenade had been tossed from Nablus Road over the relatively low roof of the northwest wing of the hostel. Early in the afternoon Arab snipers took up positions within the enclosure of the Tombs of the Kings, on Saladin Street, and opened fire on the Beit Israel Quarter. The firing continued until mid-afternoon." The next morning the following report appeared in the local newspaper:

In The Palestine Post: "About the same time (afternoon) Arabs were seen firing from the roof of a building in St. George's Close toward the Beit Israel Quarter. The fire was not returned by Jewish guards, but a mortar bomb fired by the troops landed in Shmuel Hanavi Street. There were no casualties."

In a later edition the report was corrected and said: "There has been no shooting from any part of St. George's Close in Jerusalem, The Palestine Post was told authoritatively yesterday, in contradiction of a report that the Arabs had fired from the Close at Jews.

"The Anglican authorities have taken every precaution against such things happening, we were informed, both at St. George's Cathedral and at the Bishop Gobat School on Mount Zion.

"There has been firing from the Tombs of the Kings, near St. George's, it was stated, and this may have caused the locality to be mistaken. The Arabs are maintaining a roadblock behind the Tombs.

"St. George's has also heard the equally untrue report from Arabs that Jews had been firing mortars from the roof of the Cathedral."

CANADIAN AND AMERICAN YOUTH WORSHIP TOGETHER

Detroit, Mich.—A significant meeting of young people of the Episcopal and Anglican Communions took place in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on Sunday evening, April 4, when the annual service of the Episcopal Games League of Detroit was held. More than 150 members of the Anglican Young People's Association of Windsor, Ontario, attended the service, bringing the attendance to more than 400. The Episcopal Games League of Detroit sponsors interparish recreational activities. It is believed that this is the first time in at least local history that young people of these branches of the Anglican Communion have worshipped together.

The preacher at the service was the Rev. E. Charles Brown, rector of All Saints' Church, Windsor, who likened the American and Canadian youth living in good neighborliness along an undefended border (an example to the world of international harmony) to the two men walking along the Emmaus road together, unaware that Christ walked with them. He stated that the youth of these two great nations cannot walk beside each other and successfully emerge from the troubled conditions of the world unless they walk beside Christ. Youth has no future apart from Christ, he declared. To speak to them of anything or anyone without Christ is to talk of the thunder without the lightning, of daylight without the sun, of happiness without love, and of peace without purity.

Participating in the service also were the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Ph. D., bishop of Michigan, who delivered a brief address of welcome; the Very Rev. John J. Weaver, dean of the Cathedral, who conducted the service; the Rev. Canon Robert D. Bohaker, of the Cathedral; the Rev. Gordon Matthews, executive secretary of the diocese; the Rev. R. M. Blachford, chaplain of the Games League, and the Rev. Max M. Pearse, Jr., assistant minister of St. Columba's Church, Detroit.

An inter-racial touch was the reading of the lesson by the Rev. Miodrag D. Mijatovich, pastor of the Serbian Orthodox Church, whose young people are affiliated with the Episcopal Games League and are active in the basketball events.

Following the service, a social hour was held under the auspices of the York Club of the Cathedral, and an interesting panel discussion took place, presided over by John Booty, delegate of the National Youth Council to the Oslo Conference last summer. Speakers from the A. Y. P. A. went thoroughly into the work of that organization, and urged a coming together of the Anglican Young People's Association and the Episcopal Games League for worship, service and recreational activities. Speakers for the Games League gave a resume of the League's work and endorsed the suggestion of the A. Y. P. A.

A small committee representing each group will meet early in May to plan a permanent organization of the Anglican Young People's Association of Windsor and the Episcopal Games League of Detroit, with the hope that a similar movement may spring up in other places. Mr. Cliff Musson, counsellor to the Youth Council of the Canadian Diocese of Huron, and Mr. Lawrence E. Pickup, secretary of the Games League, were responsible for working out the details of this service.

PROTESTANT RADIO COMMISSION ORGANIZED

To Encourage Intelligent Use of Radio for Religious Purposes

New York—Formal organization of a Protestant Radio Commission, a cooperative agency of 15 major denominational and eight interdenominational bodies, was completed recently at the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America's headquarters.

Commission spokesmen said the major purpose of the newly created organization is to encourage a wider and more intelligent use of radio for religious purposes; to maintain Christian standards of public decency and good taste in commercial programs; to serve as Protestantism's representative before the Federal Communication Commission; to represent Protestantism on inter-faith broadcasts; to further cordial relations with the radio industry; and to help ministers and church leaders to make more effective use of radio.

One of the first projects of the Commission will be to institute a comprehensive research study of the field of religious radio, and its relation to the church, it was announced.

A statement outlining the purpose and function of the Commission stated that for the first time in history the church has in radio "a God-given instrument whereby the Gospel of Christ may be brought to all men."

"In this day of crisis and opportunity, the church must speak with a united voice," the statement said. "A divided and competing Christianity cannot bring a united world. Earnest-minded Christians in all the Protestant denominations are calling for a concerted program of witness of the Lordship of Christ."

FAMILY WEEK ENDORSED BY PRESIDENT

Chicago—President Harry S. Truman said in a letter endorsing National Family Week released here today that the place of God in family life needs to be emphasized more than ever.

Scheduled for May 2-9, National Family Week will be observed for the sixth consecutive year by Protestants, Catholics, and Jews.

The president's letter is addressed to an interfaith committee which sponsors the observance and was released here by Dr. Gerald E. Knoff, associate general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, representing 90 per cent of Protestantism in United States and Canada.

"The most perfect economic and social environment conceivable cannot assure a sound home life where the spiritual foundations of the family are weak," Mr. Truman declared.

The chief executive referred to the National Conference on Family Life that will be held in the White House during Family Week (May 6-8). He observed that although the churches can use much of the material that will then be developed, their real contribution to the home will come in keeping its spiritual forces vital and vigorous.

"There is greater need today than ever in our history for emphatic emphasis on the place of God in our family life," President Truman stated. "National Family Week would, therefore, seem providential."

PHILIPPINE BISHOPS ISSUE STATEMENT

In Consecration of Three Bishops Independent National Church Is Secured

Manila—Three bishops of the Philippine Independent Church were consecrated Wednesday, April 7, in the Pro-Cathedral Church of St. Luke, Manila, with the Rt. Rev. Norman S. Binsted, bishop of the Philippine Islands, as consecrator, and the Rt. Rev. Harry S. Kennedy, bishop of Honolulu, and the Rt. Rev. Robert F. Wilner, suffragan bishop of the Philippines, as co-consecrators.

The Bishops consecrated are: Mons. Isabelo de los Reyes, Jr., Obispo Maximo, of the Iglesia Filipina Independiente and Bishop of Manila and Quezon Cities; Mons. Manuel N. Aguilar, Bishop of Lagune, and Mons. Gerardo M. Bayaca, Bishop of Tarlac and Zambales. On the day of the consecration a "Statement" was released, jointly by Bishop Binsted and Bishop de los Reyes. Full text of the statement follows:

This service marks the end of a quest, which began even before those who founded the Iglesia Filipina Independiente severed their connections with the Roman Catholic Church. The foremost leaders of the movement, including Don Isabelo de los Reyes and Mons. Gregorio Aglipay, never intended to forfeit their catholic heritage. It was only after earnest efforts to win reasonable privileges for the Filipino priesthood and to bring about certain desired reforms which would secure to their people a degree of liberty of action consonant with the intellectual and political developments had failed, that they and their followers reluctantly decided to declare their independence of Papal authority and to organize a national Church.

The Church in the early days of its history was influenced by the sudden impact of scientific, philosophic and modern religious thought and espoused certain tenets which were later discarded as inconsistent with the catholic faith. And, although it welcomed truth from whatever source it came, the Church generally never departed from the fundamental catholic faith as set forth by the Ecumenical Councils of the undivided Church. The doctrinal position of the Iglesia Filipina Independiente has been clearly restated in the Declaration of Faith and the Articles of Religion unanimously approved by the General Assembly of 1947.

The Church from the time of its organization has always had the threefold ministry of bishops, priests and deacons, but as at that time there was no living Filipino who had been elevated to the episcopate by the Roman Catholic Church, there was none to secede with the priests and laity and bring to the new Church Apostolic Succession, which had been retained by the historic branches of the Catholic Church, such as the Anglican, Roman and Greek Orthodox. This deficiency was recognized at the time and overtures were made by Bishop Aglipay to the Anglican Church and the old Catholic Church of Europe in the hope of obtaining Apostolic Consecration for himself and the other bishops of the Church. However, for various reasons these early negotiations were never carried through and the Church has waited until today to make up this deficiency in its orders. Today, through the action authorized by the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A., one of the Churches of the Anglican Communion, this gift of Apostolic Succession is conveyed to the Iglesia Filipina Independiente.

While the Iglesia Filipina Independiente will always cherish and maintain its independence and take pride in the record of its people in laying the foundations of national as well as ecclesiastical independence, it rejoices that in this service of consecration the validity of its orders is secured and very close cooperation with the Episcopal Church made possible. It is expected that in the future by action of the two churches, a concordat may be concluded between them authorizing inter-communion. In the meantime the Episcopal Church has welcomed into its Theological Seminary the Seminarians of the Iglesia Filipina Independiente, and a Commission has been appointed by the Obispo Maximo to revise the Book of Offices of the Church to bring it more in line with those used in other branches of the Catholic Church.

The Iglesia Filipina Independiente, strengthened by the blessing of Apostolic Orders, faces the future with faith and confidence, resolved to continue its work in the spirit of the Blessed Apostles for the spiritual and moral elevation of the people of the Philippines and the general welfare of the Republic.

SECURE LABORERS WITH HELP OF C.A.R.E. PACKAGES

New York, N. Y.—Late in 1947 Chaplain (Major) James H. Terry, senior chaplain at the 97th U. S. Army General Hospital, wrote from Germany telling that the old Catholics in Frankfurt had secured materials for a church building, but that "since the Germans are on such low rations, laborers consider a job on the basis of getting an extra meal. Laborers for this job could not be secured because Fr. Pfister could not get the extra food in sufficient quantities, though his parishioners, mostly elderly folk or youngsters, supplied what little they could."

The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief was able to get a shipment of CARE packages, and the prefabricated church building, sent from Sweden, is now being erected and will be ready soon for dedication.

PLANS FOR SPECIAL CONVENTION CANCELLED

McKinney, Tex.—After a survey of the financial resources of the diocese and a careful canvass of the parishes and missions, Bishop C. Avery Mason, of Dallas, has cancelled plans for a special convention to elect a suffragan bishop as proposed in his charge to the diocese at the last annual Convention in January. He is considering the appointment of an archdeacon or the use of a general missionary. Army chapels have been secured for the missions at Commerce and Garland, and are being renovated and rebuilt by these congregations for permanent use. Commerce is the center for a fine student work at the State Teachers' College, and Garland is a suburb of Dallas, which is growing rapidly and is an important addition to the Episcopal strength of the larger Dallas area.

NEW DEAN ELECTED FOR ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL

Los Angeles, Cal.—Word has just come from officials of the Diocese of Los Angeles and St. Paul's Cathedral, of the acceptance of the Rev. John McGill Krumm to become the new dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles. He was elected by the vestry of St. Paul's in March, and will take over his duties as dean on April 20, the day before Bishop-Elect Bloy is consecrated. He will not be installed on this date, however, but will become dean officially at a date to be announced later.

The new dean was born in South Bend, Indiana, in 1913. Graduate of Pasadena Junior College; graduate of University of California, L. A., B. A.; graduate of Virginia Theological Seminary, B. D., 1938; graduate of Yale Divinity School, 1941-1943. Ordained to priest, December, 1938, by the late Bishop W. Bertrand Stevens, was vicar of St. Timothy's, Compton, Cal.; St. Ann's, Lynwood, Cal.; St. George's, Hawthorne, Cal. Was assistant at St. Paul's, New Haven, Conn., 1941-1943. Lecturer at Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn., 1942-1943. Visiting lecturer at Virginia Theological Seminary, 1942. Has been rector of St. Matthew's Church, San Mateo (Diocese of California) since 1943.

MICHIGAN ELECTS REV. RUSSELL HUBBARD SUFFRAGAN

Detroit, Mich.—The Rev. Russell Sturgiss Hubbard, rector of St. Saviour's Church, Bar Harbor, Maine, was elected Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan at a special Convention called for the purpose of such election, held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on Thursday, April 8. Mr. Hubbard was elected on the second ballot.

The Standing Committee of the diocese, augmented by the addition of four other persons, was made a committee to receive nominations for Suffragan Bishop, and prior to the Convention had issued a report to the clergy and lay delegates, indicating that it would place in nomination the names of the Rev. Mr. Hubbard and also, from within the Diocese of Michigan, the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, and the Rev. Gordon Matthews, executive secretary of the diocese.

A preliminary "nominating ballot" was taken at the beginning of the business session of the Convention, following which a number of men withdrew their names.

The Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, bishop of the diocese, presided at the Convention.

Earlier in the day, at a service of Holy Communion in the Cathedral, Bishop Emrich had been installed as the seventh Bishop of the diocese by the Rt. Rev. Benjamin F. P. Ivins, D. D., D. C. L., bishop of Milwaukee and president of the Province. The Rt. Rev. Herman R. Page, D. D., bishop of Northern Michigan, was the celebrant. The sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore, D. D., bishop of Western Michigan.

Bishop Whittemore spoke of the great need of a teaching ministry and a learning people. He mentioned the gift of teaching which Bishop Emrich has, and dwelt upon the need for such a gift just at this time when a new life is stirring the Church. He also spoke of the present "time of shock and crisis" in the field of religion, with the unfortunate action abolishing the teaching of religion in the schools, which he said "ignores the realities of the situation." "The whole emphasis of public education begins to be," he declared, "'Ye shall live by bread alone.'" In charging Bishop Emrich, Bishop Whittemore stated, "Never was there a greater chance for leadership, and my prayer for him is that he will use his gifts and power for the upbuilding of both the Church and the State."

Other Bishops present were the Rt. Rev. Richard A. Kirchhoffer, D. D., bishop of Indianapolis, and the Rt. Rev. Reginald Mallett, D. D., bishop of Northern Indiana. In the procession were also representatives of the mayor and Common Council of the City of Detroit, a number of clergy of other communions, representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the A. F. of L., C. I. O., Detroit Council of Churches, numerous diocesan organizations, and others.

Bishop Emrich was presented to Bishop Ivins by the Rev. James G. Widdifield, president of the Standing Committee, who also, on behalf of the diocese, presented Bishop Emrich with a beautiful sterling silver crozier, given in memory of the late Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., fifth Bishop of the diocese, by Mrs. Leslie H. Green. The crozier was made by the well-known ecclesiastical silversmith, artist and craftsman, Arthur Neville Kirk, who was at one time associated with the Cranbrook Academy of Arts. It carries the seal of the Diocese of Michigan.

WORTHWHILE CAUSE

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, Editor of The Southern Churchman and rector of St. Mark's Church, Richmond, Va., contributed this:

Mr. Warnecke was obliged to leave the service immediately after Bishop Sherrill's broadcast on February 29, to catch a train. The local station, WRVA, had sent one of its engineers to supervise the installation and to handle the public address system. As Mr. Warnecke passed the engineer, the latter put his hand in his pocket and made his contribution of $4.00. He is not a member of the Episcopal Church, but he said, "This seems like a worthwhile cause."

WINDOW DEDICATED

Harrisburg, Pa.—A chancel window was dedicated on Palm Sunday at a special service in St. Andrew's Church, State College, Pennsylvania, to the glory of God and in thanksgiving for almost thirty years of faithful and devoted service to the parish by the former rector, the Rev. Canon Edward M. Frear, and Mrs. Frear. The window, given by members and friends of the parish, depicting in eight medallions the great events in the life of Christ, was designed and made by the Henry Lee Willet Studios in Philadelphia. A reception in honor of Canon and Mrs. Frear followed the service.

NAVAJO INDIANS CONTRIBUTE

New York, N. Y.—Bishop Stephen C. Clark of Utah has told the National Council that $6.00 of Utah's contribution to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief came from St. Christopher's Mission, Bluff. This is a Navajo Indian mission. The people have scarcely any money, and many of them are actually on the verge of starvation. Said Bishop Clark, "When they will give for suffering in other parts of the world, it is a great tribute to their generosity and to Fr. Harold B. Liebler's devoted leadership."

MARRIED

Miss Edith C. H. Brown, of Chestnut Hill, Penn., daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Henry P. Brown, Jr., became the bride of the Rev. Carter Stellwagen Gillis, rector of Christ Church, Washington Parish, D. C., on Saturday, April 10. The double ring ceremony, held at the Church of St. Martin in the Fields, Chestnut Hill, was performed by the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, bishop of Washington, and the Rev. Philemon F. Sturges, rector of St. Martin's.

Dr. Brown, father of the bride, formerly Chief of Surgeons of the Presbyterian Church Hospital in Philadelphia and for four years in the South Pacific during the war with the Navy, is now a medical missionary at the Episcopal Hospital in Kunming Province, China. In his absence the bride was given in marriage by her brother, Henry Brown III. Her sister, Charlotte, was her maid of honor.

Miss Brown, a graduate of Radcliffe College, has been Bishop Dun's secretary for the past four years. Mr. Gilliss became rector of Christ Church, Southeast, two years ago, after serving four years as an army chaplain. He spent 16 months in the European theater of operations.

The Rev. and Mrs. Gilliss will return to Washington at the end of April to take up residence at the rectory of Christ Church.

Deacons

Harry Ellsworth Chandlee was ordained a deacon by the Rt. Rev. John Thomas Heistand, bishop of Harrisburg, in St. Paul's Church, Harrisburg, Pa., on Saturday in the Octave of Easter, April 3. He was presented by the Rev. Wayne M. Wagenseller. The preacher was the Rev. Powel M. Dawley, Ph. D. of the General Theological Seminary. The Rev. George H. Boyd read the litany. Mr. Chandlee is to be an instructor in St. Andrew's Theological Seminary, Manila, P. I.

The Rev. John Robert Orpen, Jr., was ordained deacon on 31 of March, 1948, at St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I., by the Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, D. D. He was presented by the Rev. Paul Van K. Thomson, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Norman Pittenger, of the General Theological Seminary, New York. Mr. Orpen will remain at the General Theological for graduation in May.

The Rev. Carl Hazard Richardson was ordained deacon on 1 April, 1948, by the Rt. Rev. Granville Gaylord Bennett, D. D., at the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, R. I. The Rev. James Green, Canon Precenter, Cathedral of St. John, New York, presented the candidate, and the Rev. William M. Bradner, rector, Trinity Church, Newport, R. I., preached the sermon.

DEATHS

Rev. B. G. Burt

The Rev. Bates Gilbert Burt, a retired priest of the Diocese of Michigan, who had been in charge of St. Mary's Church, Emmerton, Maryland, for the past several months, died of a heart attack in the rectory of that parish on Monday, April 5.

Mr. Burt was rector of All Saints' Church, Pontiac, Michigan, from 1922 to 1947. Before coming to the Diocese of Michigan he had been dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Marquette, in the Diocese of Northern Michigan, for 18 years, for a part of which time he was chaplain of the Marquette Branch Prison.

He was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, in 1878. He attended schools in Ironwood, Michigan, and graduated from Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio. He was graduated as a special student from Seabury Divinity School in 1902, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1904 by the late Bishop G. Mott Williams. During World War I Mr. Burt was a chaplain in France. He was a past grand chaplain of the Royal Arch Masons in Michigan.

Mr. Burt made many contributions to the life of the parish and community wherever he served. He was a prolific composer of church music.

The funeral service was read at Emmerton on April 8 by the Rt. Rev. Noble C. Powell, bishop of Maryland. Interment of the ashes following cremation at Emmerton will be held in Marquette at a later date.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

impasse was circumvented when the bishop-elect, as a last resort, went to Scotland and received consecration at the hands of the Scottish episcopate (November 14, 1784), which was not bound by the legal restrictions Seabury had encountered in England. With Bishop Seabury's return to his State and diocese, the first Protestant episcopal jurisdiction in the United States formally came into existence, and the episcopal churches in Connecticut became the Church in Connecticut. The new bishop was in no sense, however, a bishop for all the American churches and could rightfully exercise no authority beyond his diocese. The problem of establishing the episcopal system was in no way solved; in fact, it was made even more complicated.

The major obstacle to preserving continuity with the English Church was removed when an Act of Parliament was enacted to permit the consecration of bishops who were not English subjects (1786), an action motivated at least in part by the desire to forestall further American consecrations by the Scottish bishops. The way was now open to further diocesan organizations in the new States; William White and Samuel Provoost were elected bishops by the churches in Pennsylvania and New York respectively, and were consecrated in London on February 4, 1787, by four bishops of the Church of England, including the two Primates.

Three dioceses had now been set up in the United States, co-terminous with the States in which they were located; but a very real danger was perceived of the possibility of independent diocesan entities which would anticipate a Church for the nation as a whole. Certain significant steps in the direction of a more general organization had happily been taken, however, even before White and Provoost had been consecrated. A convention of the Maryland churches in 1780 had adopted the appelative "Protestant Episcopal", a term which was already "in the air". As an appropriate name for an episcopal church which protested catholicity of faith, it was later accepted by general consent as agreeable to all schools of churchmanship; to Seabury as to White.

SIXTY YEARS' SERVICE

Sir: I am glad you were able to use my article in your Easter issue and in a good place.

I am fairly well, but have been kept indoors most of the time since Christmas as snow and ice made it slippery and I did not like to risk getting a bad fall, but I hope to be able to get out more now that spring is about here.

I shall have been here sixty years in May and at a home-coming service last fall at St. John's I gave a talk to the people and I said that I expected that there were some present who had also been present at the service which I first held up there in the summer of 1888 and were then children, but were now grandparents.

After the service a woman came to me and told me that she had been present then as a child or quite young, and now had greatgrandchildren!

Rev. Mr. Semmes of Richmond is now at the Nursing Home near St. John's. I have seen him several times.

The Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge is in fine shape with Bishop Mason in charge. We have a clergyman in every district.

I am glad I have lived long enough to see it doing so well and being so well taken care of.

SERIOUS SITUATION

Sir: Regarding the decision of the Supreme Court, and your editorial in the April 3 issue of The Southern Churchman, may I add that the most serious point in this situation, to me, is the basis on which the Supreme Court acted, namely, that the Constitution of the United States prohibits any unit of the Government, national, state or local, from doing anything to "aid" any religion. If this is carried out logically—and may we not expect the atheists to try to have this done?—it will make a spiritual revolution, backward, in our national religious life. It would mean no prayers in public schools, even at commencements; no government chaplains in either the armed forces or in government hospitals; no verse in our "Star Spangled Banner" having in it the words, "In God is our trust"; and of course, the withdrawing from circulation of all our coins with the words "In God we trust" engraved on them. Also there should be no more Thanksgiving Proclamations from the President and from State governors, for those proclamations do not urge us to give thanks to the nation—but to Almighty God!

So I say that this is a serious situation.

REV. THOM WILLIAMSON.

Lambeth and Church Unity

THE VIEW OF THE CHURCH IN U. S. A.

By The REV. F. W. DILLISTONE, D. D.

This article is reprinted from "The Record," a magazine of the Church of England. Its author is a distinguished member of our own Protestant Episcopal Church. In printing the article, the editor of "The Record" added this introduction: "The following article by the Rev. F. W. Dillistone, D. D., is of special importance in view of the forthcoming Lambeth Conference. Its subject matter is a book by Dr. Louis A. Haselmayer, recently produced in America and shortly to be republished in this country. Anxiety is felt that it may be accepted as representative of the Episcopal Church in America, and thus do considerable damage to the cause of reunion. From a number of sources in the U. S. we have received assurance that this is not so, and that it represents only a section.—Editor."

Under the editorship of the Joint Committee on Doctrine of the American Church Union and the Clerical Union for the Maintenance and Defence of Catholic Principles, a book has been produced in preparation for the Lambeth Conference next July. The writer of the study is Dr. Louis A. Haselmayer, one of the younger scholars of the Protestant Episcopal Church who was for a time an Instructor at the General Theological Seminary in New York. As the Introduction makes clear, he writes as representing the "Catholic" group within the Church and, indeed, the two Unions under whose auspices the book appears represent the most extreme elements of Anglo-Catholicism in America. It must be realized at the outset, therefore, that "Lambeth and Unity" presents the convictions of only one section of American Episcopalians.

After an introduction which is in the nature of an apologia on behalf of the "Catholic" school of thought within the Anglican Communion—an apologia which speaks of being "harried and badgered since 1920 in every province . . . by a host of ill-conceived, hastily prepared and sentimentally fostered schemes for union between provinces of our Communion and particular Protestant bodies," of "having been through twenty years of distress of soul, mind, and spirit," of having been "forced by the circumstances of the times to become a party of apparent reaction, obstruction, and isolationism"—the author goes on to develop his party's approach to the problem of Christian unity in three parts. First comes the history of the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral. This section of the book contains valuable historical material, showing how the Chicago Report of 1886 came to be framed and how the bishops at Lambeth in 1888 drew attention to it and adopted it in slightly modified form. Then the pronouncements of succeeding Lambeth Conferences are surveyed and the thesis advanced that there has been a general defection and loosening of standards since 1886 so that today "no clear theological or historical point of view about the Episcopate" exists.

Part II is entitled "Anglican Formularies: The Source of the Faith and Order of the Church," and this source is set out in a two-fold way. First there is "the Catholic faith of the historic Church as represented in a continuous and unbroken tradition up to the independence of the Church of England in the sixteenth century": secondly, there is "the explicit statement of Faith and Order set forth in the official formularies of the Anglican Communion itself." Further it is argued that "all doctrines touching upon the Faith and Order of the Church which have been promulgated in Canon Law (and by this is meant all pre-Reformation canon law with merely those exceptions effected by statutory enactments touching upon the Royal Perogative) are legally binding upon the provinces of the Anglican Communion"; quotations are given from the Canons and Constitutions of various provinces to support this view and its relevance to problems of reunion is pointed out. Finally, the "official formularies" are explicitly defined as (a) the Book of Common Prayer; (b) the Constitutions and Canons of the several provinces; (c) the 39 Articles (though these "are to be interpreted in the light of the teaching of the Book of Common Prayer"); and (d) the Catechism. "No doctrinal statement of Faith and Order can be Anglican unless it is drawn from Anglican formularies or consistent with their teaching."

Part III deals with "The Lambeth Quadrilateral and the Faith and Order of the Church." The main purpose of this section is to argue that the famous Quadrilateral must never be regarded merely as a reunion-formula. Rather it must be set within a particular doctrine of the Church and seen as part of the vital structure of the living sacramental organism which the Church in fact is. The doctrine of the Church, that is to say, must be authoritatively defined at the very outset: only so can the Quadrilateral be properly interpreted and explained. This leads to a very important paragraph which seems to me to constitute the core of the author's argument.

"The doctrine of the Catholic Church as a wondrous mystery proceeding out of the Incarnation of our Lord, a living sacramental organism, carrying its own authority in an historic continuity, a unity in which the Canon of Scripture, the Creeds, the Sacraments and the Apostolic Ministry are the constitutional form developing organically out of the germinal commission of our Lord, is the only justification for Anglican insistence upon the preservation of the Quadrilateral in a reunited Church."

The remainder of the book is devoted to a consideration of each of the four parts of the Quadrilateral in turn. By what can only be called a mixture of logic, literalism, and legalism, the attempt is made to commit Anglicanism to a fixed interpretation of Scripture and the Creeds, to an acceptance of the traditional Seven as Sacraments of the Church as well as to a rigid interpretation of the doctrines of Baptismal Regeneration, the Real Presence, and the Eucharistic Sacrifice, and finally to a particular theory or "theology" of episcopacy. In the last section great reliance is placed upon Bishop Kirk's book, "The Apostolic Ministry," and the conclusion is reached that the Catholic Ministry is "a sacramental life-giving organism safeguarding and reproducing in successive generations the reality of Catholic doctrine, discipline, and worship."

In my first reading of the book I gained the impression that the author was arguing for a rigid insistence upon the Quadrilateral as being essential to the very existence of the Church and I felt that even this was more than an Evangelical Anglican could allow. Now, however, on a second reading I find that Dr. Haselmayer wants far more than this. He is convinced that there has been a steady deterioration through successive Lambeth Conferences in the use made of the Quadrilateral. "The goal (i. e., in matters of union) has been changed from the restoration of unity by a return to the undivided principles of the Apostolic Church in which four inherent elements—the Quardrialateral—are absolutely essential and beyond question, to the manufacturing of union out of the diverse strands of modern Christendom in which the four points form a basis for discussion." To be quite blunt, what Dr. Haselmayer and his colleagues desire is that Lambeth shall commit the Anglican Communion unequivocally to the Chicago Quadrilateral. "The goal (i. e., in matters of theological definition or interpretation, and shall make it clear to all other Christian bodies that they must either come into the fold of the true Church on these terms or not at all. What the difference in principle is between the doctrine of Papal infallibility and the doctrine of the inerrancy of the Catholic Ministry I find it hard to see.

The fact is, as I have already suggested, that Mr. Haselmayer employs two chief methods in his work. The first is the method of a strict logic. Assume that the Church is a sacramental organism: it follows that whatever is true of an organism must be true of the Church; therefore there must be unbroken continuity of life, unbroken continuity of structure, unceasing differentiation of its parts and so on. Again and again it becomes clear that the underlying philosophy of the book is a philosophy of organism worked out in a strictly logical way. But as Dr. Charles Lowry has recently pointed out in a review of another book dealing with the subject of Apostolic Succession, formal logic becomes progressively less applicable the further removed any given subject matter is from the purely mental or abstract, especially when it comes to history and life, traditional logic is inadequate. (He refers to Temple's treatment of the whole matter in the Fourth Lecture of "Nature, Man, and God.") Thus even if Haselmayer's assumptions could be accepted (and I at least could only accept them with qualifications) it would still be questionable whether his conclusions must necessarily follow from his initial starting point.

His second method is the method of legalism, and when this is joined with a strict logic the result is certainly something hard to break. A constitution has been given by our Lord to His Church: that constitution must be codified and continued by the methods of constitutional law: a legally binding framework must be set up from which the Church must on no account deviate. This as least is the impression I gain from Dr. Haselmayer's argument. It is true that he allows, where possible, for varieties of interpretation and for primary and secondary standards. But generally speaking he seems to me to be saying that here is the law of the Church: depart from it at your peril!

In the light of the present world situation nothing is more distasteful than controversy among Christians. Though at first "Lambeth and Unity" may have stirred certain feelings of indignation, a more mature judgment is one of sadness or disappointment. It is so hard to see how any progress can be made in face of a manifesto of this kind. That it represents only one wing of the Protestant Episcopal Church I am convinced. (A reading of Canon Wedel's "The Coming Great Church" should be enough to show this.) At least we can feel that the book has brought out into the clear light of day the kind of position which Anglicanism must adopt if the methods of strict logic and rigid literalism are allowed to determine its nature, its constitution, and its final goal. Let us hope that Lambeth will make clear on its part that these are not the methods which belong to the true genius either of the Christian faith in general or of the Anglican tradition in particular.—The Record, March 12, 1948.

MOODY ALUMNI SERVING IN 88 COUNTRIES

Chicago, Ill.—With more than 2,000 of its alumni now serving as foreign missionaries in 88 different countries, Moody Bible Institute is well represented around the world. But a recent turn of events would seem to indicate that soon the world will also be well represented at the Institute.

Within the last few weeks applications for admission have come to 153 Institute Place from Costa Rica, Greece, Philippines, Egypt, Lebanon, Australia, Jamaica, Bulgaria, South Africa, China, Holland, Austria, Guam, Scotland, England, British Guiana, and Canada. While some of these countries are already represented in the present student body, enrollment also includes Hawaii, Guernsey Island, Ireland, Korea, India, and South America.

From the term beginning April 29, newcomers are expected to arrive from Holland, Hawaii, South Africa, Canada and Costa Rica.

Meditations In His Presence

"It is more blessed to give than to receive." (From the Offertory Sentences.)

Some would debate that statement. The receiving end is a wonderful location, especially in childhood. Times of gift-getting loom large in the eyes of the young. Perhaps, because the young must grow up and possess before they are able to give. Since selfishness is natural to us all it is not surprising to find adults with this question hanging close to the tip of their tongues, "What do I get out of it?" Much of the ruthless history of the business world can be described in terms of "get all, give nothing." But Jesus made it personally direct when He said for us to answer from experience or from foresight, "for what does a man profit if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" (Matthew 16:26.) Jesus taught that only by giving can we receive food for soul growth.

Why is it so much more gainful to give than to get? I do not mean that poverty is more wonderful than riches, but I do mean that getting and having alone, often builds up walls around us so high we can see no one else beyond ourselves, and we die of spiritual poverty. The instinct for sharing, for meeting the needs of others, is a Christian instinct which comes only from rebirth—being born again from above, filled with new life, the Spirit Power of God possessed. This new life is like a spring of living water, welling up and spilling over, producing an over abundance of love and insight and joy, which must be shared.

To give—whatever we have, of money, of time, of talent, of wisdom, of experience—and to see that gift work its wonders in another or to imagine its far-reaching influence, such as money sent to a distant place, is to reap the quiet satisfaction of life usefully spent. What blessing could be greater or sweeter than to know we've been an instrument in God's hands for the spread of His Kingdom; that someone has received sufficient impetus from God through us to carry on, or to meet some hazard with courage and poise, or to walk into the dark of sorrow or frustration unafraid and not alone. Such blessings may abound for us all—when we grow beyond self as center and "gimmie" as a life philosophy.

Jesus Christ came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life for all who have need of Him. We are His disciples and we must believe, and live to the full flow of that belief, His words as Gospel and true: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." And we prove it by giving it a try.

J. W. KENNEDY.

Evangelicals and Lambeth

By The REV. CHARLES D. KEAN

President, The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship

Traditionally the Anglican Communion has nearly always appeared in the best light in its Lambeth Conference pronouncements. It was the 1887 conference which placed our whole world-wide fellowship on record as taking a positive approach to the problem of the divided church. It was the 1920 Lambeth Conference which issued "The Appeal to All Christian People." The 1930 Conference gave the green light to the United Church of South India.

While the actual pronouncements may look a little cautious from the hindsight of years, nevertheless it must be admitted that the statements listed above, and others, are prophetic compared to what Anglican Churchmen are yet ready to accept in practice. In other words, through the years Lambeth has borne witness to our faith in Christian Unity more adequately than the actual implimentation by the several Anglican churches of its pronouncements has done.

Evangelicals in the United States and elsewhere look forward to the 1948 Lambeth Conference for another great outpouring of the prophetic spirit in our Communion. We look for a strong re-affirmation of support for the United Church of South India, which we regard as the greatest achievement of Christendom since the Reformation. We hope for a solid, realistic and understanding statement on the subject of marriage, which will have some practical relevance to the pastoral problems we encounter. We hope for an approach to intercommunion with other Protestant churches which will be immediate and mutual.

The 1930 Lambeth Conference added the weight and influence of our world communion to those who believe that in a Christian family children should be planned for and provided for. We hope the 1948 Lambeth Conference will be even more forthright in its endorsement of what is a practical application of Christian respect for human personality.

In this era of world uncertainty, the Lambeth Conference can provide a badly needed note of moral stability, demonstrating to the world the conditions which must underlie any true peace. We look forward to a re-affirmation in terms relevant to our generation of the great social principles for which Lambeth has been famous which may point the way, in Christian fellowship, from the morass of the present to a brighter future.

The evangelical movement has always claimed to be the central tradition of Anglicanism. Any reading of the record of the past Lambeth conferences will bear this out. What the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship stands for in the United States is no irresponsible disavowal of the traditions of our Church, but their preservation and application to the needs of our day.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America feels itself part of a wider movement of common tradition, and it understands that tradition—as far as it can be articulate on controversial matters—as that of a liberal spirit seeking to relate the love of God to the needs of men. The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship seeks to express that spirit concretely and specifically in programs and policies called for by our contemporary situation.

Evangelicals throughout the Anglican Communion have looked to Lambeth as generally expressing their faith on an international level. Evangelicals in America hope for the same results from the forthcoming Lambeth conference, and we hope also that the Bishops who attend it will understand and appreciate our great tradition of prophetic, creative, evangelical leadership.

International Relations and The Personal Touch

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

A little item in the daily press a few days ago had a special ethical interest to at least this reader. It recorded that Mr. Henry Ford, II., having returned from a tour of his various factories in Europe, came to a very humane conclusion. He decided that the workers in his English, French, and German factories were not receiving enough food and that he would therefore send all of them supplementary rations.

I have no doubt that this is a good business proposition and that production in these factories will rise. Also, there is likely to be a long waiting list of those seeking employment in Ford factories.

It is doubtful, however, that young Mr. Ford embarked upon this venture purely as a business proposition. More probably he was moved primarily by sympathy for those who were working in his factories with inadequate rations. He was touched because he saw the situation with his own eyes.

Unfortunately we cannot all go to Europe or Asia to experience and see the difference between American abundance and the world's need. We have to rely upon our imagination; and our imagination has difficulty in envisaging situations beyond our direct experience.

This is one of the primary reasons why it is so difficult to achieve and to preserve a minimal degree of moral and humane relations between nations. The moral difficulties in which we find ourselves are partly due to the fact that modern technics have made nations and peoples dependent upon each other to a much larger degree than the same technics have brought people knowledge of one another.

No easy solution for this problem presents itself. There is a possibility that we will confront disaster long before the body of the world community is filled with anything which might be called its soul.

One immediate contribution which can be made to the problem is that those who have a more direct knowledge of the world's needs should not only act as Mr. Ford acted, but should also prompt the nation to a more responsible action toward the world than the average citizen would be inclined to countenance.

Passage of the European Recovery Program represents a genuine moral achievement in this direction, even though some of the motives which prompted it are not purely moral. On the other hand, we reduced taxes in the same week, and proved thereby that we hardly understood what kind of a world we are living in, how great our responsibilities in that world are, and what disciplines will be required to meet them.

The average citizen could hardly know this situation vividly enough to outweigh his natural desire for lower taxes. But our representatives must have known. Instead of helping to educate those who did not know, they submitted to the general pressure. That is not a proper functioning of "representative" government.

A Brief History Of The Protestant Episcopal Church In The United States Of America

By MR. GEORGE V. BLUE, Washington, D. C.

Part III.

The first inter-State meeting of the episcopal churches was held in New Brunswick, New Jersey, in May 1784, at the instigation of the Reverend Abraham Beach, rector of the parish there. A second meeting took place in New York in October of the same year, when it was resolved that a general convention comprising clerical and lay delegates alike should be held in Philadelphia in 1785, and that as a preliminary step, State, i. e., diocesan conventions be organized. (The winds of unity were in motion; two years later, the national Constitutional Convention, brought about in much the same manner, assembled in the same city.)

The Convention of 1785 and its successor in 1786 grappled with the problems of a general convention and prayer book revision. The results of the latter were not liked by the laity, and the proposed constitution was unsatisfactory to the New England churchmen, none of whom, including Bishop Seabury, attended either convention. The mind of the Church was gradually taking form, however, and the Convention of 1786 performed one very important act in signing the credentials of bishops-elect White and Provoost, who had not yet gone to England.

The year 1789, it is worthwhile to observe, is notable as the date when crisis in both national and ecclesiastical unity was successfully bridged. The nation adopted the "New Roof" of the Constitution, and a federal organization for the country as a whole, bringing together the dioceses of the Scottish and the English lines, which for two years had been independent the one of the other, was effected by the Episcopal Churches. Constitutional concessions of a conservative nature were made to the New Englanders by the Convention of 1789 at its first session; the Constitution was accordingly accepted by the bishop of Connecticut and the delegation from that diocese, who thereupon took their place with their brethren. With Provoost absent, Bishops White and Seabury then met to form the first House of Bishops.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America thus became the duly constituted ecclesiastical body for all congregations throughout the federal union who adhered to the traditional Anglican faith and order. The danger of a severalty of Churches was avoided, and one communion of ecclesiastical citizens was created similar to the common citizenry of the secular commonwealth under the national Constitution. The national Church was a voluntary union of sovereign dioceses, and the mutual independence and equality of the dioceses has been consistently maintained in the constitutional structure. The thesis may reasonably be advanced, however, subject to further research for confirmation, that the scheme of union which came into operation for the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1789 more closely resembles that which obtained for the States under the Articles of Confederation than under the Constitution, with its implications of centralized power which were to have an intensive development.

The new Constitution of the old Church, although necessarily a document drawn up to meet the exigencies of the time and circumstances (like the fundamental charter of the State) was an admirable example of draftsmanship. It deserves careful study. The expansion and extension of the Church have brought about certain changes that represent a development of basic features, but not departure from its radical principles.

Provision was made for a General Convention, to meet every three years, as the highest ecclesiastical authority of the Church. The Constitution and the canons enacted pursuant to it by General Convention are the supreme ecclesiastical law, and together with the Book of Common Prayer determine the Church's position on worship, doctrine and discipline. No bishop or diocese is above or beyond these authorities, which are at once primary and final.

General Convention itself was made to consist of the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies; the latter comprised two equal orders, Lay and Clerical. Legislation had to receive the assent, not simply of the two Houses, but of the three constituent elements, voting separately; although at first an unconditional negative was not conceded to the Bishops, the "veto" of the episcopal House was later recognized by action of General Convention. The House of Deputies was composed of an equal number of clerical and lay delegates elected by diocesan conventions, thus assuring strict equality among the dioceses. It was provided that diocesan conventions consisting of the clergy and elected representatives of the parish congregations should meet yearly under chairmanship of the bishop. As episcopal elections were to be by similar conventions of the clergy and lay delegates, the representative principle was thus fixed at the outset in the polity of the Church.

In 1790, the consecration in London of a third bishop in the English line brought the membership of the American episcopate to four. By an understanding with the Archbishop of Canterbury when White and Provoost were consecrated, any question of continuing the episcopal succession through consecrations by the bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church was now removed. The first consecration in the United States was that of Bishop Claggett of Maryland (1792), in which, at the invitation of that diocese, the four American bishops took part. This was the only consecration in which Bishop Seabury participated, but it effectively cemented the union of the two lines of episcopal succession.

TO ANTICIPATE POSSIBLE CONFUSION

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive secretary of the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, has sent a letter to the Bishops of the Church "To anticipate and clarify possible confusion about the participation of the Church in the current fund-raising drive for American Overseas Aid-United Nations Appeal for Children (AOA-UNAC).

"In some communities," Dr. Pepper pointed out, "local campaign directors may ask the churches as such to accept quotas or assume special responsibilities because of the participation of Church World Service in the AOA activities. You should know that no special responsibility rests on the churches because of this participation.

"The inclusive program of AOA-UNAC should make a strong appeal to the generosity of all Americans. At the same time Churchmen who have contributed to the Presiding Bishop's Fund which allocates its funds through Church World Service, should know that they are not being asked to contribute twice to the same program. The CWS participation in AOA is an important extra in a total appeal which is worthy of general community support. In this sense our clergy and laity may well give their support to the general community appeals."

The Viewpoint Of A Few

Dacre Press, the English publisher of "Lambeth and Unity," doubtless wants to sell books, but when it advertised this little volume, however, as "The American Viewpoint on Unity," it either felt that anything goes in advertising, or it was trying to mislead readers in the Church of England.

Few Americans are mediaevalists. Few Episcopalians, clerical or lay, refuse to accept the evolutionary nature of all historical phenomena—nations, institutions, industries, and even churches. While this book is reviewed elsewhere, it can be stated here that its premises are accepted only by a minority of the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church. We don't think in these terms.

Dr. Louis Haselmayer's book is actually the opinion only of the author himself and of the little group which share his position on the meaning of the Church and the nature of Church History. Episcopalians may not have agreed as yet as to the achievement of Church Unity, but few believe that our Church has a monopoly on all saving truth. Even fewer believe the unity movement since the Quadrilateral in 1886 represents a deterioration in churchmanship. Rather most of us feel it to be the modern earnest of the outpouring of the Spirit.

"Lambeth and Unity" has been widely circulated by the "American Church Union," and the "Clerical Union for the Maintenance and Defense of Catholic Principles." Copies have been sent to every Bishop likely to attend Lambeth. The appeal abroad has been on the grounds that this book represented a substantial section of American opinion. Actually, we have seen an amazing application of the art of propaganda to the Church.

There is no reason why those who oppose the United Church of South India and the other forward steps of the Anglican Communion toward a more inclusive fellowship should not express their opinions. We believe that freedom of opinion applies to the internal life of our Church. But misrepresentation is another matter. Dr. Haselmayer's book should not be described abroad as if it represented something we know it is not. Through it, a small reactionary group are trying to prejudice the decisions of the forthcoming Lambeth conference? We hope that our American bishops will remember at Lambeth the great longing in our Church for Christian unity!

DISTINCTIVE IDEAS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Norman H. Smith. Philadelphia, Westminster, 1946.

This book, by the tutor in Old Testament languages at Wesley College, Leeds, is a strong plea for a new type of approach to the Old Testament. The author feels that having passed through a long period of analytical, historical criticism, it is now time for us to take a synthetic view. Again and again he points out that the religious value of the Old Testament lies not primarily in its Semitic backgrounds and origins but in the final outcome of an understanding of God which was vouchsafed to Israel; that the methods and purpose of the book's editor are fully as significant as the sources which he used; and the Hebrew religion, whatever its past, finds its supreme value precisely at those points where it departs from its background to achieve new and distinct insights. The carrying out of this thesis, however, is confined to an etymological study of particular words in the Old Testament, words such as holiness, righteousness, judgment, etc. These investigations, while exceedingly interesting and often bringing out the development of the several ideas involved, do not actually bring the reader to such new or brilliant concepts as the opening thesis of the book seemed to warrant. The volume remains, therefore, rather a compendium for the linguistic study of the Old Testament than a definitive statement of Old Testament theology.

A minor point is the author's impatience with liturgy and ritual. This expresses itself partly in an antagonism to the Anglican Communion and partly in a coloring of the author's Old Testament interpretations.

THE HEART OF THE YALE LECTURES. By Batsell Barrett Baxter. Macmillan. $2.50.

For seventy-seven years, the greatest preachers in the world have been giving Beecher Lectures on preaching. In this volume, the distilled essence of these lectures is provided with a running commentary on the art of preaching. The great series on content are ignored, but here can be found the best advice of the finest men of the pulpit concerning one of the most difficult arts of mankind: mediating God to men through the pulpit by means of personality.

GEORGE MACDONALD: AN ANTHOLOGY. Edited and with preface by C. S. Lewis. Macmillan. $1.50.

This little book contains 365 choice selections from the writings of a Scottish cleric named George Macdonald, who was a failure as a preacher, a second-rate novelist, and a great Christian who has been the prime inspiration of C. S. Lewis, whose writings have had quite an impact on the religious thinking of Britain and the United States. These extracts contain a great deal of wisdom, some of it homely, some of it what would be expected of a writer in the past century, and some of it sufficiently unusual to merit the praise which Lewis gives it. But there is little of epigrammatic brilliance, and while it will help a sermon occasionally to quote from it, there will be no feeling that "this quote is a shining pearl." Followers of Lewis must have it, of course, and it is a good book for all who like anthologies.

JESUS: WHAT MANNER OF MAN. By Henry J. Cadbury. The Macmillan Company. $2.25.

Henry J. Cadbury is already well known for his work, The Peril of Modernizing Jesus. In his latest volume, Jesus: What Manner of Man (Macmillan, 1947, $2.25), he does a splendid job of analyzing the teachings of Jesus. He does this by always keeping in mind his own warning: We must remember that Jesus lived, thought, and taught in a specific place and culture.

This book is the published form of the Shaffer Lectures for 1946, an annual series of lectures of the Yale Divinity School, but the method of handling the subject is far from a cut and dried academic discourse. It combines sound scholarship with a vivid and interesting style, which will appeal to all readers. The book is documented with references which should be readily available to anyone wishing to pursue the subject further. Dr. Cadbury avoids the incongruity, of which many authors are guilty, of writing a book for laymen with references which would tax the resources of the best theological library.

Dr. Cadbury's approach is new. As he says in the preface, he has deliberately chosen to follow the less familiar and less travelled roads. He has devoted the study to "how Jesus thought rather than what He thought." The book is written as an answer to several of the questions which are asked concerning Jesus in the Gospels: Whence this wisdom? Why speakest thou in parables? What is this new teaching? By what authority? etc. The answers given will help any reader to gain a fuller understanding of the Founder of the Christian faith.

While it must be remembered that the Biblical account of the life of Jesus has many gaps, which a modern biographer would have filled, we are reminded by Dr. Cadbury that these omissions are not as serious as many have claimed. Recent understanding of the life and contemporary literature of Jesus also helps us to formulate a better picture of our Lord than was believed possible a few years ago.

Particularly of value is the reminder that Jesus was using contemporary Jewish rabbinic thought forms and teaching methods, especially in His use of parables and His apocalyptic teachings: His basic assumptions were those of His age. These teachings are then shown in their universal applicability, and with a meaning for the present day.

On the last page of this all too brief volume, Dr. Cadbury reminds us that Jesus must remain an enigma which can never be fully fathomed, but certainly this book will repay any reader with a clearer understanding of Jesus and His teachings.

PROPHET IN THE WILDERNESS: THE STORY OF ALBERT SCHWEITZER. By Hermann Hagedorn. Macmillan. $3.00.

This is an almost unbelievable story of a modern saint who never lost his zest for life although he retired from the European world for an African post where he has labored for years as a medical missionary among the natives. A renowned authority on Bach, on the life of Jesus, on the meaning of history, Albert Schweitzer has fulfilled his destiny and become the outstanding Christian of modern times by his self-sacrificing work in the jungles. It has not been easy; it has been the most difficult kind of work; and he has stuck to it through all kinds of temptations. Mr. Hagedorn tells the story well, and the reader's attention never wanders. His great religious philosophy of "reverence for life" has come from his observations of the disintegration of European culture. Schweitzer was not surprised by Hitler's success because he could see symptoms of what Hitler stood for in every corner of the world. The book begins and ends with the unusual device of "Albert Schweitzer speaking," in which his most pertinent statements are placed together to focus on the judgment and hope which the Christian religion offers to mankind.

THE ABOLITION OF MAN. By C. S. Lewis. Macmillan. $1.25.

When one knows of the sufferings and sacrifices of C. S. Lewis, one wonders how he finds the time to write so much about so many things (unless a lot had been written before he hit the literary "jack pot"). This book is a stimulating treatment of literary criticism which hides behind a dangerously subjective value theory, and points to a universal objectivity of value found in the major religions of the world. The "abolition of man" refers to those who reject a theistic view of values. An appendix indicates the "way" (Tao) of life based on quotations from various religions.

The Curate's Column

A MAN WITH A HOE

There is something about the smell of freshly turned earth which does things to us. It happens every spring when we pass the first plowed fields. We feel an irresistable urge to dig in the ground and plant things. We know that gardening isn't all fun It has its headaches and its heartaches—as well as those which settle in the back and legs. We know there will be hot days when weilding a hoe, or pushing a cultivator will be sheer torture. There will be rainy seasons when the weeds will get so far ahead of us that it will be a back-breaking job to get them out. Beside these there are the legions of bugs, beetles and worms which do their best to devour the fruit of our labors before we have a chance to taste them ourselves.

In spite of all these obstacles and difficulties, we get our tools together every spring, prepare our ground and plant a garden. In spite of heat and drought, and rain and weeds, and the ever-present bugs, we hoe and harrow, rake and spray all the summer through. The funny thing about it is that, in spite of everything, our garden always pays off.

Oh, it doesn't save us a great deal of money. Nobody expects that. Still, the vegetables you raise yourself always taste better than those you buy at the store. The radishes are more pungent, the lettuce more crisp, the carrots sweeter, and the tomatoes—wonderful. Then, there is the green corn. It is one of the greatest delights in life to set a pot boiling, then gather the ears of corn, plump them into the pot, boil them three minutes and eat them (well buttered) while they are hot. If you haven't done that, you haven't lived.

Raising a garden does a lot for your body—but it does even more for your soul. All the while you are planting, cultivating and gathering the fruits, you are working absolutely with God, and you are working in God's own way.

When you are raising a garden, you can't hurry things. You have to have the patience of God in waiting for nature to take its course. The seed time and the harvest are fixed and you cannot change them. Moreover you can put as much time and energy into the cultivation as you wish, but, unless God gives the sunshine and the rain in proper proportion, the effort is vain. Raising a garden has to be a cooperative proposition. You have to work with God in God's own way, or you don't get to first base.

Working together, you have the certainty that your work with God will bring you succulent vegetables. More than that, it will bring you the knowledge that you are sharing with God in creation.

We shall plow our ground this spring and plant a garden, for we know that, in spite of all adversities, we shall be helping God create something new and living; and that which we shall create will help Him to sustain and nourish those who shall grow to be like Him. It may even help us to be more as he would have us be.

SPRING JOURNEY

Out of this freeing door,
Through which for many months I have not passed,
I now fare forth at last—
In a wheel-chair—a new world to explore.
O, high adventure, joyous journeying!
Into the open air, into the Spring.

How wonderful—no roof except the sky!
I had forgotten that it is so high,
So high, so purely blue;
And that the view
Of field and wood and stream
Unlimited by window-frame could be
So wide. As in a dream, I see
A million grass-blades make the fresh-sprung lawn.
Renascent world, I, too, shall be reborn;

Jonquil, my spirit blooms with you;
Robin, my heart sings praise with you;
Brown elm, red maple, poplar clothed anew
In young, green lace—
My soul aspires with you,
Unfolding to your grace.
Cool wind is breath of Heaven on my face.

THE GLORY OF THE GARDEN

Everybody loves a garden. When we have dug, and planted, and watered, what a joy it is to watch things grow. How much we enjoy their beauty, and rejoice to gather flowers and fruit. It may be said without undue exaggeration that the Bible is a garden book. It begins with a garden. It opens with Eden, that paradise of flowers and trees and human souls in their new-born virginity, that divine pleasance from which our first parents went forth with an awful ban upon them. The Bible ends with a garden. In the closing chapter of the book, St. John has a final glimpse of heaven, to some of us the fairest and tenderest of all his visions. It is a sweet place of lawns that slope down to a river's brim, where grow, on either side, trees whose shade is peace and whose leaves are healing.

Poetic Drama

The Bible begins with a garden and ends with a garden. But consider this also, that the intervening space between these two is adorned at many of its chief stages with gardens. The Old Testament is composed of histories and poetry and prophecies. In all its histories is there any point so critical and romantic as the time when the spies bring back the great cluster of grapes upon their shoulders? In all its poetry what lovelier passage is to be found than that love-song called Canticles, which, be it a bridal drama or a mystical allegory of God's love of His Church, is supremely beautiful; and it is set in gardens and fragrant with vines. In the books of the prophets is there any more momentous appearing that the coming of Him who advances from the wine-press; or is there any more exalted image of the coming of God, to which all God's seers pointed, than that in which the wilderness is seen to blossom as the rose and the desert as a garden of the Lord?—From the Scottish Guardian.

PRAYER BOOK PAGE BY PAGE CXXII

The General Confession for Communion Service

The language of this Confession sounds highly exaggerated and if we consider it as individuals it really is so. Probably no one who comes to the Holy Communion at the usual church service is so burdened by their sins that the load is "intolerable."

Perhaps some revision of this language would be wise, because, as it is it is apt to create the impression that we say a great many things in our prayers that we do not really mean.

Of course, however, the reason for this form of expression is that we are making a general and not a personal confession, and are referring to the sins committed by all mankind, which would include the horrors of concentration camps, and the wickedness of the most vicious criminals.

One advantage of this apparent overstatement in connection with our feelings about sin is that it affords the opportunity of impressing upon us the depth and tenderness of God's mercy.

Also the last clauses remind us of the real purpose of the whole Communion Service, which is to give us strength for the future and make as it were a new beginning in our spiritual life.

This thought is too often overlooked by persons who are inclined to think themselves "not good enough" to take the Holy Communion.

Of course no one is "good enough" to do so in the sense of being as good as we ought to be. On the other hand every one is good enough who has a sincere and earnest intention of trying to lead a better life, for the word "new" does not necessarily imply a completely different life, but only the strengthening of the good qualities of the life we are now leading.

The fact that we address God twice in this short prayer as "Father" reminds us too that we may expect of him those qualities of love, consideration and forgiveness that we know and depend upon in an earthly parent.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL MESSAGE?

By Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson, Toronto

In our previous articles we have tried to present:

1. A clear idea of the world in which we live, both as man sees it and as God sees it.

2. A clear idea that the Church's job is to present the Gospel of Salvation to a lost world.

We now ask ourselves the question, "What is the Gospel Message"?

It is the good news from God to man. Not teaching about God, or sin, or the way of salvation, but a simple declaration of great facts which are true. John gives it to us in his two introductions. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God and the Word was God . . . and the Word became flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1: 1 and 14): "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon and our hands have handled of the Word of Life, that . . . declare we unto you." I John 1: 1, 3. The gospel message is a short simple statement of facts which all have to do with God, man, sin, and salvation.

(a) God is, God is love, God loves me. There is a God. He is a person. His will is goodness, justice, righteousness and mercy, and all this is for and on behalf of me. His purpose runs through all of life and His purpose is Love.

(b) God saves me from the penalty of my sin in the past. He does what I cannot do. My sin stays with me in memory and in fact. I may deplore it, mourn because of it, loathe it, but I cannot get rid of it—only God can do that. He has done (past tense) what no man can do for himself. God not only has forgiven my sin but He cleanses me from all unrighteousness.

(c) God saves me from the power of sin in the present. With new life comes new power. With a clean start temptation is more severe, more sus-

Consecration of Rt. Rev. Wilson Hunter

Laramie, Wyo.—When Bishop Winfred Ziegler "took over" Wyoming in December, 1936, he came with the blessing of many who gave him the watchword of WIN WYOMING. And that is what he did. He never spared himself in his eternal quest of winning souls for Christ. It is, therefore, fitting that the man who now wears his Ecclesiastical mantle should also be so well-named—a Hunter; for Wyoming is a game-country, large game and small game—"wild life". And souls, too, come in that category of game. We are confident that this well-chosen man will continue the perpetual vigilance for the Kingdom so well begun by Bishop Ziegler, and will be a true hunter of souls.

April 7 was an historic day in Wyoming. Down the long roads, undeterred by mud holes of every spring, by flurries of snow, rain, and sleet, cars of laymen and clergy from all over this Missionary District converged on Laramie. By plane and train, too, came many dignitaries of Church and State. In St. Matthew's Cathedral, built by Bishop Talbot, the "Cowboy Bishop," a new bishop was to be consecrated—James Wilson Hunter—as Bishop Coadjutor of Wyoming, assuming the duties of Bishop Winfred H. Ziegler, whose ill health has forced him to relinquish the responsibilities of this jurisdiction.

On the evening before the consecration, hundreds foregathered at an informal reception for the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill. Two blanketed Indians, Arapahos, mingled with other laymen as they also welcomed Bishop Sherrill and bishops of many neighboring states, and their own beloved Bishop Ziegler, fortunately able to be present.

On Wednesday, the 7th, a hushed and reverent throng filled the Cathedral to overflowing when the Service of Consecration took place. A colorful procession (though rather wind-blown—for Laramie gave them a sample of its best!) of more than a hundred marched through the Church to the chancel and sanctuary to open the ceremony. Taking part in the procession, in addition to the bishops and other clergy, were Governor Lester C. Hunt, Governor of Wyoming; Dr. G. D. Humphrey, president of the University of Wyoming; the Cathedral vestry and the lay members of the Council of Advice, which has had interim authority in the district during Bishop Ziegler's absence in California since late November.

The Epistle was read by Bishop Stephen C. Clark, of Utah, and the Gospel by Bishop Conrad Gosner, of South Dakota. The Rev. Frank F. Kraft, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Rawlins, and Mr. G. R. McConnell, chancellor of the Missionary District of Wyoming, and the Rt. Rev. Lane W. Barton, of Eastern Oregon, read the various testimonials. The presenters were Bishop Clingman, of Kentucky, and Bishop Keeler, of Minnesota, and the attending presbyters were the Rev. Wilfred B. Myll, of St. Mark's, San Antonio, and the Rev. Marcus B. Hitchcock, of St. Mark's, Casper, Wyo. The Presiding Bishop was consecrator, with Bishop Ziegler and Bishop Jones, of West Texas, as co-consecrators, assisted by the seven other bishops present.

Although the solemn traditional ceremony is centuries old, it did not seem unrealistic, nor did it ignore the instability and gloom of the present-day world. Rather, the thoughtful sermon preached by Bishop Haines, of Iowa, pointed the way to the Only Power capable of guiding churchmen through these difficult times. "Because Christ has chosen us," he assured the 44-year-old Marylander, bishop-elect, "we possess the right to ask, in His name, that POWER be given us. A courier who travels into strange and dangerous country carries with him, as his security, credentials which carry the power of his native government. An American citizen on alien soil in the hour of his need has the right to summon to his aid all the power of his native government. Are not we, too, couriers of a King—citizens of heaven? Remember that you carry in your person the credentials of The King. Show them wherever you go. Let the disbelieving world know whose authority you bear, and by using your own right of access freely, introduce men to the unfailing Source of their unlimited power."

Realizing that these words were true, if in a lesser sense, of any sincere churchman, the congregation joined with fervor in the litany, led by Bishop Brinker, of Nebraska, and in the challenging message of the hymn

Go labor on! spend and be spent!
Thy joy to do the Father's will:
It is the way the Master went;
Should not the servant tread it still?

The beautiful, almost unearthly music of the Veni, Creator Spiritus, was sung over the bishop-elect as he knelt, having donned his new Episcopal habit. Bishop Haines sang the versicles.

With the solemn laying-on of hands the consecration was complete, the service of Holy Communion was resumed, and administered to the new bishop and his family. The service was greatly enriched by the dignified and beautiful singing of the Cathedral choir.

Chaplain to the Presiding Bishop was the Rev. Donald G. Smith, rector of St. Peter's Church, Sheridan, Wyoming, and the Rev. Samuel O. Capers was deputy registrar. The very efficient master of ceremonies was the Very Rev. Dudley B. McNeil, dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, assisted by the Rev. Canon Raymond H. Clark, student chaplain at the University of Wyoming, Laramie. Following the service, a luncheon honoring the new bishop and his wife was held at the Wyoming Union of the University. Dr. J. H. Holland was toastmaster, and introduced the speakers: Bishop Jones, of West Texas, from whose jurisdiction Bishop Hunter has come; Bishop Sherrill, Governor Hunt, Bishop Ziegler, and finally the newly consecrated bishop—Bishop Hunter. The appropriate and often amusing remarks of all speakers were received with enthusiasm. Deeply sincere tribute was paid to Bishop Ziegler for his great work in Wyoming the past eleven years. All expressed the hope that his health would soon be completely restored.

A tea honoring Mrs. Hunter was held at Ivinson Hall in the afternoon.

DIOCESAN MITE-BOX OFFERING HUGE SUCCESS

Fayetteville, N. C.—The diocesan service for the children of the Church schools of the Diocese of East Carolina which was held at St. Mary's Church, Kinston, N. C., on Sunday afternoon, April 11, under the auspices of the diocesan department of Christian Education succeeded even beyond the most optimistic hopes and dreams of those who planned it. A large number of the schools of the diocese were represented, there being particularly a large delegation from St. James' Church, Wilmington. The church was filled to overflowing and many had to remain on the outside.

The purpose of the service was the Lenten Mite-Box Offering for 1948. It represented the first of such services in the diocese, and by unanimous vote of all present a similar service will be held next year, possibly in a larger church or perhaps at Camp Leach.

The service was in charge of the Rev. Stephen Gardner, rector of St. Peter's Church, Washington, who acted as master of ceremonies in the place of the Rev. James F. Ferneyhough, chairman, who had to conduct burial services that afternoon and was unable to attend; the Rev. E. F. Moseley, rector of St. Mary's Church, Kinston, who superintended the arrangements and the music, and the Revs. Mortimer Glover, rector of St. James' Church, Wilmington; Harvey Glazier, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Wilmington; John Hardy, rector of the Church of Advent, Williamston, and Roscoe Hauser, rector of St. Paul's Church, Greenville. Bishop Wright delivered a very moving and inspiring address which will long be remembered by all who heard him.

The total amount of the Lenten Mite-Box Offering reported at this service was $3,751.11. The parishes represented and the amounts reported were as follows: St. Paul's Beaufort, $73.97; St. James', Belhaven, $239.64; St. Paul's, Clinton, $17.79; St. Stephen's, Goldsboro, $70.00; Church of the Holy Cross, Aurora, $41.06; St. Thomas', Bath, $30.33; St. John's, Fayetteville, $330.20; Christ Church, Elizabeth City, $336.32; Christ Church, New Bern, $380.00; St. James', Wilmington, $389.00; St. Peter's, Washington, $300.00; Holy Innocents, Seven Springs, $30.80; St. Paul's, Vanceboro, $26.75; St. Luke's, Roper, $64.41; All Saints' Mission, Leland, $10.00; St. Paul's, Edenton, $32.00; St. Andrew's, Wrightsville, $18.50; St. Paul's Church, Washington, $10.00; St. Matthew's, Yeatesville, $169.00; Trinity Church, Chocowinity, $15.25; St. Paul's, Wilmington, $150.00; St. John's, Wilmington, $205.90; St. Mark's, Roxobel, $16.71; Zion Church, Washington, $75.00; St. Paul's, Greenville, $308.45; St. Mary's, Kinston, $209.22; Holy Trinity, Hertford, $71.30; Christ Chapel, Kinston, $50.70; Grace Church, Plymouth, $64.86; St. George's, Pikeville, $13.95; All Soul's Mission, Leland, $10.00.

STATEMENT

By the Committee of the Christian Union of Palestine Addressed to All World Religious and Political Bodies

The painful and regrettable situation now prevailing in Palestine has prompted representatives of all Christian communities of the various denominations to hold a joint meeting for the purpose of discussing the abnormal position which the country has reached, realizing, as they did, their responsibilities towards members of their respective communities, spiritually, morally and materially. The meeting was attended by representatives of:

The Orthodox Patriarchate,
The Latin Patriarchate,
The Armenian Orthodox Patriarchate,
The Custodian de Terra Sancta,
The Captic Patriarchate,
The Vicar of the Melkite Patriarchate,
Metropolitan of the Syriac Orthodox Community,
The Vicar of the Armenian Catholic Patriarchate,
The Arab Evangelical Episcopal Community,
The Vicar of the Syriac Catholic Patriarchate,
The Arab Lutheran Community in Palestine.

Having given careful consideration to the situation now prevailing in Palestine, they decided to address this statement to all world religious and political bodies, in which they seek to give expression to their deep sorrow and strong indignation at the lamentable situation in which the Holy Land, the cradle of peace, has been placed as a direct result of the erroneous policy which has been imposed on the country and which has culminated in the partition plan.

It is our firm conviction that peace will not be restored nor would any endeavors made for the promotion of the "peace of Jerusalem" be crowned with success unless those bodies who undertake the determination of the future of Palestine would remove the causes which had made a battlefield of the Holy Land, re-establish the principles of justice and maintain the right of self-determination as envisaged in the charter of the United Nations Organization.

The Christian Union wishes to declare, in unequivocal terms, that they denounce the partition plan, being of the strong conviction that this plan envolves a violation of the sacredness of the Holy Land which, by its nature and history, is indivisble and represents an encroachment on the natural rights of the Arabs, the people of the country.

The Christian Union wishes further to declare that any attempt to enforce the erroneous policy by force will inevitably be doomed to failure, for "right" is a stronger weapon than "might."

In view of our close contact with the various classes of our communities, we deem it our duty to draw the attention of all responsible authorities to the fact that the Christian Community in Palestine of all denominations is in complete agreement, in principle and deed, with their Moslem Brethren in their endeavor to resist and ward-off any violation of their rights or any encroachment on their country.

We, therefore, appeal to all those in power and authority to make their best endeavors for the restoration of peace and tranquility to the Holy Land by revoking the partition plan, ensuring the unity of Palestine and promoting the welfare and prosperity of all its people.

Jerusalem, the 3rd of March in the year of our Lord 1948.

(Signed by): Representatives of:
The Greek Orthodox Patriarchate,
The Latin Patriarchate,
The Armenian Orthodox Patriarchate,
The Custodian de Terra Sancta,
The Coptic Patriarchate,
The Vicar of the Melkite Patriarchate,
Metropolitan of the Syrian Orthodox Patriarchate,
The Vicar of the Armenian Catholic Patriarchate,
The Vicar of the Syrian Catholic Patriarchate,

EVANGELISM PUT INTO PRACTICE

Columbia, S. C.—During Lent, 1948, the laymen of St. John's Church have made a serious effort to put into practice the Presiding Bishop's program of Evangelism.

Sponsored by the parish Committee on Evangelism, forty men of St. John's Church gave daily a five minute Lenten devotional period on radio station WKIX, consisting of a Bible reading, a brief talk, and several closing prayers. Most of these men had never appeared on the radio, and many of them had never before conducted a service in public.

The subjects varied according to the choice of the speakers, though "Forward" for Lent was the general guide. A typical portion of one of the broadcasts by one of our laymen was as follows: "I was in the office of a very prominent and successful business man some time ago to audit his books. He was not in when we arrived, so my coworker and I began our work. Shortly thereafter the boss returned to his office. After removing his hat and coat, he came over to us and asked if we cared to join his staff in their customary moment of prayer. He thereupon conducted a prayer of one or two minutes' duration, offering thanks for the many blessings of this life and asking divine guidance for the day. My first reaction was to dismiss the subject from my mind with the unspoken observation that here was a man who carried his religion too far. However, I could not get the incident out of my mind, and since then I have come to a conclusion that was shocking to me. It was that I had not gone far enough with my religion rather than the other way around. Of course, there must be a time and place for business as well as prayer. Neither is a substitute for the other, but it is most assuredly a fact that they are complimentary to each other, and that the hand of God is present wherever we go and is responsible for the many blessings of this life. The time and place for us to acknowledge our gratitude and thanks should be the focal point of our daily life."

The laymen held the Wednesday night Lenten services, using the Presiding Bishop's book, "Revive Thy Church, Beginning With Me." One of the six lay readers of the congregation held the devotional services, and another layman discussed the book, which was divided into five parts. These services were well attended and impressively managed.

Growing out of a discussion of visitation, the Committee on Evangelism decided that the members needed to know more about what they were attempting to do and so voted to establish a School of Evangelism. Since there was no pattern and no circular to go by, we have had to feel our way along. At first the committee felt that it was necessary to do something new in a concrete way. But it has gradually grown on the group that evangelism is the expression of the spiritual side of our life and, therefore, our first step was to quicken the Holy Spirit within ourselves and then the Lght kindled thereby would, of itself, shine and and lighten the way for others.

Various phases of evangelism have been taken up at these meetings, which are held Sundays at 7:30 P. M. in the parish house. A typical discussion was "The Approach to Evangelism Through Prayer." Both the devotional part of this meeting and the following discussion were conducted by women, but generally men and women take part. Then five or six present read special prayers. At the conclusion the rector summed up the final approach through prayer in about ten minutes.

This meeting, like the others, lasted one hour. And, after the final hymn, those present stood around and discussed their mutual experiences.

The rector of St. John's Church is the Rev. J. Kenneth Morris.

THEODORE M. JONES.

DIOCESE OF HANKOW ELECTS BISHOP

New York, N. Y.—The Very Rev. Stephen Hai-Sung Tsang, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Hankow, China, has been elected bishop of the Diocese of Hankow in the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, according to a radiogram received by the Overseas Department of the National Council. Tbe bishop-elect is now in the United States, but expects to return to China in the very near future. He will succeed the Rt. Rev. Alfred A. Gilman, who retired upon attaining the canonical retiring age, but has been in charge of the diocese pending election and consecration of his successor.

APPEAL FOR PROTECTION OF JERUSALEM

Addressed to Austin, U. S. Delegate to U. N.

New York, N. Y.—Measures for the protection of Jerusalem as the Holy City were urged by Charles P. Taft as president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in an appeal, April 15, addressed to the Honorable Warren R. Austin, head of the United States delegation to the United Nations.

Mr. Taft's plea, sent on the eve of the special meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations, was made in behalf of the churches cooperating in the Federal Council. It strongly supported the proposal for a truce in Palestine as a whole, but at the same time focused attention on immediate steps to avert the particular danger of the destruction of Jerusalem.

"We have an especially deep concern," Mr. Taft wrote to Mr. Austin, "for the Holy City of Jerusalem, sacred around the world to those of all three faiths, and containing places whose destruction we cannot accept as permissible."

The Federal Council president asked that Jerusalem immediately be given the character of an 'open city," while the efforts to arrange a truce are continued.

As a specific measure for dealing with the problem, Mr. Taft proposed that the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations "be assigned immediate authority over the city with a corridor of free access from the outside to insure the inhabitants their life blood." He also asked that the necessary police force be provided through the United Nations.

Copies of Mr. Taft's letter were also sent to Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations and to Francis B. Sayre, President of the Trusteeship Council.

REV. G. R. MADSON CRITICALLY INJURED

Moultrie, Ga.—The Rev. G. Ralph Madson, rector of St. Paul's Church, Albany, and editor of the diocesan paper, The Church in Georgia, was critically injured on Tuesday noon, April 13, when his car, in which he was driving alone, crashed into a truck that came out of a side road. Mr. Madson was carried to the hospital at Moultrie, where, due to severe head and chest injuries, very little hope is held out for his recovery. However, at this time, he is holding his own and has shown some little signs of returning consciousness.

LITURGICAL CONFERENCE

Dallas, Tex.—Leaders of the Second Liturgical Conference to be held at Camp Crucis in the Diocese of Dallas, May 11-13, are to be the Very Rev. William H. Nes, dean of Nashotah House; the Rev. Dr. William H. Dunphy, rector of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, and the Rt. Rev. C. Avery Mason. The subjects of the Conference will be "The Sacramental Principle in the New Testament" and "The Sacramental Principle Today and Tomorrow." This will be a follow-up of last year's Conference, led by Dom Gregory Dix, and the unifying factors in Holy Baptism, Confirmation, and Holy Eucharist will once more be stressed. One hundred clergy, laymen and laywomen fro msix dioceses attended last year.

The Conference will start at noon Tuesday and terminate after lunch Thursday.

In September another Liturgical Conference will be sponsored, with the Rev. A. G. Hebert, of the Society of the Sacred Mission, Kellum, England, author of "The Parish Communion," as leader.

The Rev. Theo P. Ball, Athens, Texas, will be registrar for both Conferences, May 11-13 and September 22-24.

BRONX CONVOCATION HOLDING REGIONAL MEETINGS

New York, N. Y.—The Convocation of the Bronx is devoting three Monday evenings, April 12, May 3, and May 24, to a study of the general topic, "Your National Council." The large regional meetings are being held in the Church of the Holy Nativity, Bainbridge Avenue and 204th Street, and are sponsored by the Bronx Convocation Committees on Religious Education and Men's Work in cooperation with the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work.

On April 12 the Rev. Dr. C. Rankin Barnes, secretary of the National Council, spoke on the general theme, "Your National Council." On May 3 Lewis B. Franklin, D. C. L., treasurer of the Council, will speak on "The Program of the Council," and on May 24 there will be two speakers, Robert D. Jordan, National Council Director of Promotion, will speak on "The National Council and Promotion," and the Rev. Frederick A. McDonald, assistant secretary of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, will speak on "The National Council and Evangelism."

This is believed to be the first time such a number of ranking National Council officers have joined in such a project, endeavoring to acquaint a large number of Church people with the operation, program, and organization of the Council itself.

CONDEMNS FALSE STANDARDS

London.—"There is not the slightest reason why our method of advertising the Gospel should be either blatant or vulgar," declared the Bishop of London, the Rt. Rev. and Rt. Hon. John William Clark Wand, D. D. "Nevertheless," he continued, "it must be always fresh and sometimes new. I have no doubt that when printing was first used in Europe it seemed rather cheap and nasty to those who had learned to love the old illuminated manuscripts. Nevertheless the Church speedily took possession of the new method, and the Bible was one of the first books to be printed. Indeed it did not become widely known as a whole until it was printed. We live in an age which has invented a whole series of new methods of publicity."

BONN BISHOPRIC TELLS OF FINANCIAL AID

New York, N. Y.—Mailed from Bonn, Germany, the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief has received a communication from the Bishop's Office of the Bonn Bishopric, telling of financial and material aid received from the Episcopal Church, and of uses made of such assistance.

"Through the World Council," said the letter, "during the past year we had $15,000 designated for the Old Catholic Church by the Episcopal Church. This money made it possible to build a barracks church in Frankfurt; to get clothes for our pastors; to motorize six workers who have especially extensive jurisdictions; to pay for a pastor for refugees; to rebuild the parsonage in Cologne, in which the pastor has been exposed to wind and weather; and to make some provision of food to the pastors, who indeed have suffered actual hunger. You can see that the material aid placed at our disposal has helped to make our reconstruction possible.

"But we are still only at the beginning. The economic situation has not yet improved. The burdens of the Bishops are many and heavy. One must have a thousand hands and much more aid to dispose of, in order to meet the pressing needs of reconstruction.

"In Bonn and Munich, churches must be built again quickly if the life of the congregation is to continue. In Munich a part of our church is standing. The dean hopes soon to start building. In Bonn the Bishop and Church officials have approved an undertaking to build the seminary along with the church, parsonage and parish hall, as a unit.

"If we are not to lose countless refugees out of east Germany and the Warnsdorf Bishopric (Sudetenland) who today are widely dispersed in the Reich, the motorizing of pastors must be pushed vigorously.

"So it is very much a problem that we can solve only with the help of our brothers and sisters abroad. Indeed our Church has suffered great loss as our members are mostly city dwellers, and you know how severely the cities suffered in air raids. Since 1945 the Bishopric has had no income from its funds, nor have the members, who are impoverished. Payment of rents has not yet been resumed. How can we even lay the foundation of regular pastoral care if help does not come from our brothers? So I beg that you will extend our thanks to all who have helped us and will help further."

CALIFORNIA SEMINARIANS HOLD STREET SERVICES

Berkeley, Calif.—Theological students from the Church Divinity School of the Pacific have started a program of open-air preaching, calling it "The Episcopal Wayside Mission." After a period of prayerful preparation the open-air street meetings were undertaken in downtown Berkeley.

Following a short service in the nearby Church of the Good Shepherd, the group assembles around a portable organ, for a service of singing, preaching and prayer is held. Students and local clergy deliver the short sermons, and the order of service is varied in order to determine the effectiveness of the work.

PROPERTY RECENTLY ACQUIRED

Salina, Kan.—Several hundred thousand dollars of property have recently been acquired by the Church in the District of Salina.

Buildings nearing completion at the present time are the new Euclid Hall of stone construction at Christ Cathedral, the new gymnasium at St. John's School, and the new St. Andrew's Church at Liberal, Kansas. The new 40 acre unit of the St. Francis Boys' Home at Salina has recently been purchased for $9,000, including a building formerly occupied by the County Poor Farm. Its estimated value is nearly $100,000. This second unit of the Home will formally be opened on completion of a campaign now being carried on for renovating and for equipment. The campaign seeks $85,000 which includes an item of $10,000 for the purchase of the spacious property now already being occupied by lease in Ellsworth, Kansas, comprising the first unit of the Boys' Home, and reported to be "full and overflowing."

Other recent acquisition of the Church at Salina are the Sudendorf Home lying between the old deanery and the new deanery giving the Church ownership of continuous lots south from Christ Cathedral. The new chapel at St. John's School, purchased from the government was recently dedicated. Plans are now being made for the rehabilitation of Vail Hall, main building of St. John's School, partially destroyed by fire in March.

Other major financial campaigns now being initiated in the District of Salina are the new Grace Church at Hutchinson and the proposed parish house and lengthening of the church at Garden City. A new vestibule is to be erected at Christ Church in Kingman.

AUSTRIAN BISHOP GRATEFUL FOR CLERGY VESTMENTS

New York, N. Y.—During 1947, the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief called attention to needs overseas of vestments for clergy, linens, and communion vessels. The response was such that it became possible to make a good-sized shipment to the Rt. Rev. Stephen K. Torok, of the Old Catholic Church of Austria.

After considerable delay in transit, the shipment has reached its destination, and Bishop Torok writes, "We beg to give you our sincerest thanks for all these items which we distributed among our parishes in Vienna, especially those having been damaged by the air-raids and lost their equipment. The cassocks, collars, etc., were given to poor clergymen, especially to the refugees from Czechoslovakia who came to us and were admitted to minister in our Church."

Bishop Torok has written to each American donor of these gifts, and many of the clergymen who received supplies have written personal letters to the donors, as well as to the Presiding Bishop.

BOY SCOUT AWARD PRESENTED

Detroit, Mich.—The special Boy Scout award "For God and Country," won by a comparatively few number of Scouts, was given to Duane Wright, of St. Mark's Church, at the 11 A. M. service on April 11. The award was presented by the rector of St. Mark's, the Rev. Harold E. Wagner.

Duane Wright is a member of Scout Troop No. 246, sponsored by the Calvin Presbyterian Church. He is the first member of his troop to receive this important award, which is the highest of its kind given by the Boy Scouts of America. The award represents a boy-pastor relationship, and requires the passing of tests in Church history and doctrine, and the giving of 150 hours of service to the Church.

The address at the service was made by John Booty, a member of St. Paul's Cathedral. Members of Troop 246 and their Scoutmaster, Mr. E. J. Kempf, attended in a body and marched in the procession.

CHURCH PERIODICAL CLUB CELEBRATING SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY

New York, N. Y.—Sunday, May 2, is Church Periodical Club Sunday. This year the day is of especial significance, for the CPC is celebrating its 60th anniversary.

Begun in 1888, when a small group of women in New York City began to forward their own Church magazines to clergy in remote sections of this country, who did not have access to these publications, the CPC has grown until it is now one of the cooperating agencies of the National Council, with branches in a majority of parishes throughout the country.

Today the CPC plays a vital role in the life of schools, missions and hospitals in this country and abroad. It furnishes books and magazines, technical libraries, toys, games and teaching materials that help countless institutions to carry on their work of teaching and healing. In addition, thousands of individual members forward their own magazines to people in isolated areas.

At the triennial meeting at Philadelphia in 1946, the CPC instituted a special project to replace the books of the Central Theological College in Tokyo, whose library had been destroyed in the war. To date approximately $3,000 has been raised toward this Fund, for which a goal of at least $5,000 was set.

Recognizing that the spread and development of Christian and democratic ideas is of vital consequence in today's troubled world, the CPC faces a greater opportunity for useful service than at any previous time in its sixty-year-old history.

Interested parishes where there may not be a CPC branch may obtain information from the National Office at 120 East 22nd Street, New York 10, N. Y.

SEEDS FROM FRIENDSHIP TREE

Episcopal-supported Hua Chung University in Wuchang, China, is the proud possessor of several seeds taken from a "friendship tree," which is the last surviving of 12 saplings belonging to George Washington.

To perpetuate the idea of friendship that existed in colonial days, seeds of this tree, which was presented to Washington by Col. "Lighthouse" Harry Lee in 1785, are now being sent to all parts of the U. S. and to the freedom-loving nations of the world.

Reports from Hun Chung indicate that the university plans to have a grove of these trees on its campus.

WHAT IS HIS GOSPEL MESSAGE?

tained, more subtle. The daily sins are more loathsome and repentance is more real, but God gives us victory. He is greater than the adversary, garrisons our hearts against every assault of the evil one. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace," even in the midst of the battle of life.

(d) God saves me from the presence of sin in the future. He never promises to keep me from temptation as long as life lasts, but He does promise to keep me in temptation, but beyond the visible life here He does promise me a life with Himself where sin is not and where temptation cannot come. Today heaven is becoming both more real and more practical, because we are getting back to the mind of the Author of all Holy Scripture.

(e) The Gospel offers a new way of life to be enjoyed in the fellowship of His Church. We long for "fellowship." The world offers us "good fellowship" which is a lesser thing. The picture of Acts 2: 41-47, is an extension of Luke 2:52. The heart of man craves the brotherhood of man which can only be found after we have discovered the Fatherhood of God. We want someone to care for us, help us, guide us, warm us, and love us, and we find in the fellowship of the Church both the love of God the Father, the love of the Elder Brother, and the love of all the brethren.

(f) The Gospel offers a new life of service to Christ the King in the fellowship of His Church. We are saved to serve and our service is under the Captain of our Salvation—in His cause, and with the whole company of Christ's Church militant here in earth. God has a purpose and now we share His purpose, and life has a meaning. As our life is not now solitary, so neither is our service a solitary service, and our oneness in Christ Jesus is for action.

Post Haste . . .

RESENTS "PICK-FLAW GRUMBLE"

Sir: In the March 20 number of the Southern Churchman, under the Post Haste title is a letter, "Not Impressed." This communication is about as fretful and peevish an example of the pick-flaws grumble as might be found in a month's reading.

"The news"—is "so staid." No doubt it should have been couched in radio, soap ad. patter.

"The story of the Church of South India," was entirely too long, etc., etc. It is remarkable how short an amount of print about the things of God's Church can bore some who have their names on the church books. Thumb nail sketches even are wearisome.

And so the grouch goes on and on. One wonders how many hundred pages the writer of this complaint could read in a best seller and still ask for more. "Where your treasurer is there will your heart" (and your patience) "be also."

To those who have even a rudimentary sense of Christian proportion, the things of Christ and His Church are the "greatest issue" of time or eternity.

Reinhold Niebuhr also comes in for the respects of "Not Impressed."

I see that in the April 3 number Mr. Niebuhr falls for that hackneyed overworked word "Hysteria." It would seem that if individual or nation shows any more signs of animation than a dead clam its dubbed hysteria. Or if not, the pendulum swings to the opposite extreme which is labelled by that rather overworked detestable word "complacency." Certain words become a fad like a change in women's hats.

With prayers for the Southern Churchman and for the Evangelical movement.

WM. B. RAINSFORD.

Indian Head, Md.

WARNING GOT THE MAN

Sir: Let me thank you most sincerely for putting my WARNING in full in your April 3 edition. Believe it or not, the warning got the man.

I have received a letter from the Rev. Maurice H. Hopson, rector of Emmanuel Church, Bristol, Va., in which he tells me that he had read the article on the Friday night before the Merritts appeared on Saturday morning. He said that he had read my warning "but like so many 'warnings' one never really believes that the person or persons will call on them. After reading the article I forgot completely about it." But when he saw the Merritts the following morning, he was reminded of the article and re-read it and was then convinced that they were the people being sought. However, he had filled their tank with gas and they had already left town before the police whom he called got busy. Fortunately, he had copied the license number and the warning was sent out in teletype to the Virginia State Police.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

A Brief History Of The Protestant Episcopal Church In The United States Of America

By MR. GEORGE V. BLUE, Washington, D. C.

Part IV

The work of the Church was now committed to a truly independent development. Spiritually, there was no lapse from its communion with the Church of England, a fact of greater importance than has always been ascribed to it; rather, it has been taken for granted, but it has afforded a continuing proof that scission is not schism and that a "political" unity is not an essential ingredient in the catholicity of organized Christian fellowships. Securely possessed of an historic faith and order, the Church was launched toward a future of unknown portent, in which responsibility for its lot was (under God) expressly its own.

The Period of Recuperation

The thirty years between 1790 and 1820 constitute that generation in the historical life of the Church between its organization and its expansion beyond the original Thirteen States. The strenuous efforts of churchmen to survive as a Church had succeeded, but a breathing spell was needed for the Church to find itself and for the new institutions to fix their roots firmly if ever they were to do so. From this point of view, perhaps it is as well that the old connection with England had not been closer.

The life of the Church centered in the parishes, for diocesan organization was necessarily at a minimum. The bishop could not be supported independently, and usually continued to be the rector of a parish, with no thought, however, of regarding his church as a "cathedral". Episcopal visitations were almost wholly confined to confirmations and ordinations. Between 1804 and 1811 no new bishop was consecrated, and more than one diocese (New Jersey, for example) remained without episcopal guidance of its own. But the old parishes took on new life and grew; new parishes were founded; scattered communities were not left wholly shepherdless; and out of such experiences as the annual diocesan conventions (which did not always meet!) and the triennial General Convention there began to develop the community of a broader corporate life and sentiment that transcended parochialism. It is true that lassitude and discouragement were not everywhere readily overcome. In a diocese destined to be one of the brightest ornaments of the Church, the persistent attacks of its foes appeared for a time to be too strong to be overborne; Bishop Madison virtually retired, oppressed by difficulties with which it seemed at the time beyond his resources to cope, to the presidency of William and Mary College, which he had held before his consecration.

The well-known comment of Chief Justice Marshall, himself a layman of the Church, that it was useless to try to revive anything so moribund as the Church in Virginia, voiced a pessimism which he lived to see splendidly confuted.

Side by side with the sturdy leaders who were carried over from the Revolutionary period, younger men had to arise in the Church who would aid and one day replace the heroic generation. This growth of new figures and development of new leadership was part of the work of recuperation that merged imperceptibly into another and broader period in the Church's life. The consecration of John Henry Hobart as assistant bishop of New York, of Alexander Viets Griswold as bishop of Massachusetts, both in 1811, and of Richard Channing Moore as bishop of Virginia in 1814, marked the advent of such leaders in the spiritual sphere of the Church when its physical rehabilitation began to exceed itself and become new growth. An example of this renewal is afforded by South Carolina, where no record exists of a single confirmation by the cautious first bishop, Robert Smith (consecrated in 1795). Under his successors, Theodore Dehon (1812) and Nathaniel Bowen (1818), the Church made notable progress. The most decisive manifestation of the Church's vitality, however, was its growth beyond the limits of the old settlements. The press of population westward carried with it a number of Episcopalians, along with others whose departure separated them from former ecclesiastical moorings. The labors of Bishop Hobart throughout the whole State of New York (he became diocesan head in 1816) were so fruitful that the adequate care of souls demanded more constant episcopal oversight. Likewise in Virginia (as well as elsewhere), the revival of congregations and their increase throughout the diocese posed the same problems. It was evident that a living Church was outgrowing the original frame work of institutions that had sufficed hitherto.

General Convention solved the problem by the enactment of constitutional provisions for the creation of assistant bishops and the division of existing dioceses. William Meade began an historic episcopal career in 1829 as assistant bishop of Virginia; Benjamin Onderdonk became Bishop White's assistant in Pennsylvania in 1827; and the diocese of Western New York was set off in 1838 from the original diocese.

In 1819, Philander Chase was consecrated as bishop of Ohio, a truly missionary field. With the advent of the Church's work into the trans-Alleghany country, the period of recuperation of the original seaboard congregations may be regarded as fulfilled. In historical perspective, it is clear that a period of larger responsibility, of missionary expansion was at hand, although it is equally apparent that this development was not prophetically perceived by the Church as a whole. A minority of ardent souls were then as always the vanguard who set the pace to meet the challenge of opportunity.

In the original States there was a further filling in that rounded out one period of progress as it began to merge insensibly with its successor; North Carolina, which was made a diocese in 1817, received its first bishop, J. S. Ravenscroft, in 1823; New Jersey gained its own bishop, John Croes, in 1815, after having waited thirty years as a diocese; and in 1832, Vermont became a separate diocese under the long episcopate of John H. Hopkins. The diocese of Georgia, organized in 1823, still had only three presbyters in 1834; the first bishop was Stephen Elliott (1841). The former Spanish province of Florida, organized into a diocese in 1838, was without a bishop until 1851, when Francis H. Rutledge became its head.

Part II. The Middle Period

The Westward Movement and Internal Development

A point of departure from the emphasis on recuperation may be conveniently fixed at the establishment of the Foreign and Domestic Missionary Society in 1819 by General Convention. It signified that the Church had not only expanded beyond its recovery of lost ground, but looked to further expansion by extension. The period in which "manifest destiny" fired the imagination of the nation, had something of a counterpart in the spiritual field of the churches. To win as well as to hold the frontiers of the country and lands beyond the country itself for the Christian creed became the endeavor of the several Christian bodies on the old States.

A few of the Church's presbyters had already been included in the westward movement, and Bishop Chase, after an energetic episcopate in Ohio subsequently became the first bishop of Illinois (1835). He was succeeded in Ohio by Bishop Charles P. McIlvaine (1832), one of the great leaders in the Evangelical Movement which was now running strongly in the Church, quickening its spiritual life and intensifying its missionary zeal. A better plan for coping with frontier conditions was needed than the uncontrolled and often unaided efforts of individuals, even though devoted, and in 1835 the whole Church acknowledged and assumed the responsibility for a broader institutional organization. General Convention in that year declared the entire membership of the Church to be members individually of the Missionary Society, and effected an important innovation in providing by canon for the sending of "missionary" bishops (elected by General Convention and maintained by the Church) to special areas at home or abroad confided to their spiritual charge.

Thus was instituted in the polity of the Church the distinctively American system of missionary districts. One of its features has been the important provision that a missionary bishop may be moved from one district to another, or elected a diocesan bishop; whereas the translation of the latter from one diocese to another has remained forbidden in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The system deserves a careful comparison with that provided for territories in the political life of the nation and with the English colonial bishoprics.

Bishops had already been consecrated for Kentucky and Tennessee (Benjamin Bosworth Smith in 1832 for the former and James Hervey Otis in 1834 for the latter). The first of a great line of new "missionary" bishops was Jackson Kemper, elected (1835) to shepherd a vast region extending from Minnesota to Missouri, and including Indiana. In 1838, Leonidas Polk was elected missionary bishop for a mammoth southwestern district which included Texas—then a foreign country. Polk later became bishop of Louisiana (1841).

The Church had not been unmindful of responsibilities in other directions. Research has shown that in the southern dioceses particularly (where the problem was peculiarly imminent) there were clergy and laity who did not neglect the care of the souls of the colored inhabitants under their control. In a broader field, education had early enlisted the interest of church-people, particularly with regard to the training and preparation of clergy. After three years of intensive efforts, Virginia Theological Seminary, which began its notable work first as a regional institution, was founded in 1823; on what was intended to be a wider scale, the General Seminary in New York had already opened its doors in 1819; Bishop Chase founded Kenyon College at Gambier, Ohio (1824); Washington (now Trinity) College, Connecticut, was chartered under Bishop Brownell (1823); Hobart College, Geneva, New York, was established in 1822; and Bishop Doane of New Jersey was a pioneer in new fields when he founded St. Mary's Hall, Burlington (1837) for the higher education of women.

In similar vein, the scope of churchly activities was widened through women's guilds; boys' and girls' schools; Sunday schools; societies for missions and for propagating the Christian faith through the distribution of prayer books, Bibles and religious publications. Church periodicals of long or short life were plentiful; among the latter was the officially published Spirit of Missions (now Forth), founded in 1836.

Christian Action in the World Crisis

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Some of us, who get considerable mail from unknown friends and critics, are bombarded with letters at the present time. These letters suggest the kind of action the church or individual Christians ought to take to make a genuinely religious contribution to solving the world's problems and averting, if possible, impending catastrophe.

Some of the recommendations deal not so much with the problems of the world as with the personal problem of how we can live and act in order to extricate ourselves individually from the guilt of all the evil in which the world is involved.

This suggestion poses the interesting question as to whether the primary concern of the Christian man ought to be to free himself from guilty involvement in the moral ambiguities of the world, or whether his primary concern should be to help the world to more health by bearing the guilt.

On the whole, the letter writers prefer the second alternative. They want something distinctively Christian done to save the world. They want a special gesture of trust toward Russia in order to overcome the vicious circle of mutual fear in which we are involved. They want us to stop stock-piling atomic bombs; or they want to resist military preparations in general.

I feel there is a certain merit in these suggestions because it is important to counteract hysteria and to resist the tendency of regarding the problem of the defense of our civilization in purely military terms. Church groups should therefore meet in every part of the country and should earnestly pray and discuss these issues.

It must be pointed out however that the defense of a civilization is, in its very nature, a morally ambiguous task. There are certain lessons we learned in our encounter with nazism which we dare not forget. Insofar as we face military peril we have to counter it with military defense. We cannot simply say that moral goodness is the best defense.

In the case of an individual the matter is a little more simple. For an individual can always sacrifice his life rather than do some things which might be required for its defense. Not many individuals actually choose such an alternative. Yet there are heroes and martyrs who say "Here I stand; I can do no other."

Nations, cultures, and civilizations, on the other hand, seek to preserve their life. We may believe, as I do, that a democratic civilization has the duty, as well as the right, to preserve its values against the threat of tyranny. We cannot deny however that its values are not as pure as it claims them to be and that the means of their defense are not purely moral.

That is why we face greater moral perplexities today than ever before in relating the insights of faith to the necessities of a civilization.

By the PROTESTANT MOTION PICTURE COUNCIL

Picture of the Month: THE SEARCH

A profound sermon or a penetrating lecture can hardly be called entertainment, yet, this is both. "The Search" is in a class by itself because it tells, with few words and very little plot, how a child came to lose himself and how his soul was rekindled and found again. This inspiring, documentary-like story of displaced children in Europe is that of many children in the world today. In presenting it so dramatically, yet withal entertainingly, Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer has performed a real service.

Fundamentally, this is the story of a Czech mother (played by Jarmilla Novotna) and her persistent search for her son. Her nationality is immaterial; she is universal motherhood looking for and loving her child. The search takes her through children's centers all across Central Europe. Disheartened and heart-torn at the fruitlessness of her effort, but keeping her faith in eventual success intact, she loses herself in service to other mothers' children.

Among the nameless and hopeless children who have known suffering and despair such as we can hardly imagine, we see an empty little face, a young boy (Ivan Jandl), fearful, anonymous; as to his own identity, his mind is a total blank. Learning that he and other children are to be sent to rehabilitation centers, he escapes among the ruins of a German city with a French boy who had befriended him. Rescued eventually by a good-natured American soldier, he is gradually brought back to near normalcy. His memory, however, still eludes him until he begins to understand the meaning of the word "Mother." In a plausible and natural way, mother and son are reunited.

"The Search" is sublimely moving in its development, its ignoring of non-essential details in portraying what makes a life worth saving and worth living. Actually photographed in devastated European areas and displaced persons camps, the film has authenticity, is well directed, magnificently acted and well integrated as a story.

It is to be hoped that the work of UNRRA, so well depicted here, will be continued by other means until all the motherless and lost children of the world are again cared for. This becomes the task of all those who believe that the essence of everyday religion is sharing food and shelter with those in desperate need. What greater incentive can the Christian Church have, when observing Mother's Day and Family Week, than to make the love of God known to the motherless children and the childless mothers of the world through the avenues provided for such efforts?

This is a picture for the whole family. Our children should know what others have and are enduring and learn that, as long as children are suffering anywhere in the world, they have the privilege of helping them and sharing with them. A, Y, C.

OTHER CURRENT FILMS

A—Adults; Y—Young People 12 to 18; C—Children under 12

(Films starred (*) were regarded as exceptional by our reviewers.)

*THE PEARL (RKO). With the simplicity and power of a great parable, this picturization of John Steinbeck's short novel is, in our opinion, one of the finest pictures of the year. It has artistic beauty and is acted by an excellent English-speaking Mexican cast, headed by Pedro Armandariz in the role of a poor fisherman who finds the largest and most valuable pearl in the world. The powerfully moving story grows out of what happens to him as he tries to hold this treasure from greedy men, dreaming the while of what his unexpected wealth will bring: education for his son, improvement for his people, a fuller life for all. The film draws a fine distinction between the desirability of wealth for the good it can accomplish, and the lust for it as a means in itself. Photographed on the western coast of Mexico by F. A. M. A. Aguila Films, it has scenic backgrounds and emotional impact of an unusual order. We rate it "exceptional." A, Y.

B F.'S DAUGHTER (MGM). Chronicling a period in our immediate past, this is a dramatic romance with strong human interest. Though basically a serious study in social contrasts and trends, with special emphasis on the evaluation of life in general and the worth of marriage in particular, the film has enough moments of genuine comedy to lighten the tension. The main characters are so well portrayed that "audience identification" is readily achieved. A, Y.

ALL MY SONS (Universal-International). A fine portrayal of what happens to a man who puts his own intense desire to make money for his family above patriotism and love of others. It is a picture of social significance, bringing the ever-timely lesson that no real happiness can ever be achieved at the expense of another's misery. Edward G. Robinson, supported by an excellent cast, plays the difficult role of the misguided father exceedingly well. We feel, however, that a drinking scene is both inexcusable and unnecessary, since it is out of character for the women concerned; also that suicide does not right any wrong, nor does violence need to be resorted to between father and son, even to express rightous indignation. A, Y.

TO THE ENDS OF THE EARTH (Columbia). Two years of effort and tremendous expenditure were necessary to achieve this Kennedy-Buchanan production. Some regulations of the Production Code as related to the portrayal of the narcotic traffic were temporarily set aside to permit accurate filming. The U. S. Treasury Department's employment in the plot adds authenticity to this story of suspense. "To the ends of the earth" goes the U. S. Agent (Dick Powell) to trace the origin of shipments of opium and drugs to this country. He is helped in his search against this well-organized traffic by agents of every country, showing conclusively that we can be "one world against evil" for the protection of the whole human race. Emphasis is laid upon personal devotion to a cause. Good acting, a sustained plot and much excitement make the picture interesting and entertaining. A, Y.

SITTING PRETTY (20th Century-Fox). The trials and tribulations of the parents of three healthy boys in securing a satisfactory baby sitter. When the desired person materializes he proves to be not only a genius (by his own admission) but a specialist in nearly every profession, a yogi enthusiast and the writer of a "best seller." Clifton Webb, as the baby-sitter, handles his satirical role very skillfully, and the result is a thoroughly amusing comedy. A, Y, C.

FORT APACHE (RKO). This presents Henry Fonda as a post-Civil War commander of Fort Apache in Arizona, who leads the regiment in disastrous operations, antagonizes the Indians, and pays with his life for his mistakes. He is remembered later as a hero, and others follow to carry on the tradition. Drinking and rough acting by "tough sergeants" are relied upon for comic relief: much of the action seems to be overplayed, and some of the episodes are unconvincing. Good use is made of the martial music of the period for background effects. A, Y.

DEAR MURDERER (Universal-International). A well-acted murder drama, produced by Gainsborough Studios, which exposes guilty relationships arising from infidelity and leading to crime. A weakness of such stories is that they reveal no feeling of horror or sense of guilt in murder; this is not excusable just because the criminal is eventually punished. A.

LET'S LIVE AGAIN (20th Century-Fox.) If taken as comedy, this might be funny; if not, it could be considered tragic even though it is not meant to be. The story concerns the jealous antagonism existing between two brothers. It leads one of them to the loss of his mental equilibrium. The question of "reincarnation" and its possible consequences is treated humorously. Mental sickness is treated in too light a manner.

A, Y.

THEY PASSED THIS WAY (United Artists). An exciting Western with the usual elements of good men, bad men, gamblers, posses and guns, but with the unusual twist of having not one shot fired, no one killed, no brawls. Ethical issues are clouded at times, but on the whole the film is on the side of service and the better life. Drinking is at a minimum. Beautiful desert photography; excellent musical backgrounds; splendid acting. A, Y.

BLACK BART (Universal-International). The story of a gentleman bandit (if there ever was such an anomaly) of the 1870's who stages a series of stagecoach robberies and eventually finds that "crime does not pay." Elaborately set in beautiful scenery and technicolored, with beautiful costumes, period dancing, skillful riding, this is nevertheless just another Western with trimmings. A, Y.

MAN OF EVIL (United Artists). An English version of the class struggle in the latter part of the nineteenth century, this is full of pathos, tragedy and a love story replete with adventure. It shows class pride as inherently insincere and selfish; it portrays domestic conditions in poor surroundings, and bridges the differences by a courageous love. The evil genius of the plot is James Mason in his most somber aspects, but the real issues are in social values rather than romance as such. Well acted in authentic settings. Too much drinking. A.

THE TALE OF THE NAVAJOS (MGM). Beautifully photographed in Arizona and Utah, this is a simple story of a Navajo boy and the son of a white trader who explore together the ruins of a mesa to find turquoise and discover a way to hidden, rich pastures. It is really too simple, as it gives an unrealistic picture of Navajo life and problems. The old folk-lore and superstitions, elaborated upon in the commentary, are the real stumbling-blocks in the improvement of the Navajos. This picture will not contribute to providing an equitable solution to the Navajos' very real difficulties. Its values are principally in its beautiful photography.
A, Y, C.

MEET ME AT DAWN (20th Century-Fox). This seems to be the English idea of what the French, in political and social circles, were like at the beginning of this century. It is farce-comedy—with emphasis on the farce—and is superficial in the extreme. Mildly entertaining. A, Y.

THE WOMAN IN WHITE (Warner). Wilkie Collins' melodramatic story of intrigue, set in the 1850's in England, has been transformed into a well-written screen play. Suspense is kept up; the musical background is exceptionally good. A "period piece" which may strain the credibility of our contemporaries, but entertaining in its own way. A, Y.

SUITABLE FOR CHURCH SHOWINGS

16mm Film Sources

Listed below are a number of subjects from different sources, all of which, except where otherwise stated, may be obtained through your denominational book-stores your local film library or visual aids dealer. It is suggested that you make your own reference catalog by clipping these reviews as they appear from time to time in these pages and elsewhere.

QUEEN ESTHER (50 min; sound). Recently we reviewed this new picture produced by Cathedral Films. Because of its great beauty and value as a teaching film with high entertainment qualities, we are calling it to your attention again. In these days of religious misunderstanding and prejudice, it is well to see this Bible Drama with its message that God never fails those who love and serve Him. A study guide and film strip are available to be used as teaching aids. Rental, $16.

SEARCHLIGHT ON THE NATIONS (30 min; sound). One of the best of the films recently produced by the U. N. Department of Public Information, this film is a three-reel exposition of the part played by the great media of communication—press, radio, films—in promoting understanding and material progress in the world today. Available in French, Spanish or English. Rental, $4. Address United Nations, Film Section, Lake Success, N. Y.

THE WORLD IS RICH (43 min; sound). British-made film designed to rally support behind the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations. Slow-moving at first, but has definite emotional as well as informative values. Should be effective in showing how all arms of the United Nations must have the support of men everywhere. Rental, $6.

THE WAY OF PEACE (18 min; sound; color). Puppets and miniature sets are used to present this story. Narration, by Lew Ayres, tells of God's love for man and His efforts to overcome man's selfishness. Scenes depict Bethlehem, Jesus' teaching of love, and the Cross of Calvary. Recent events picture concentration camps and rocket-borne atomic warfare, with final scenes of the earth dissolving in space. The film should be followed by discussion or a message giving the positive side of ways to peace. $8.

THERE WERE THREE MEN (10 min; sound; color). About cooperative methods, this film's story is cleverly told by animation. The action involves a farmer beset by failure and the weather and a laborer struggling with the high cost of living who pool their efforts successfully, and thereby convince a skeptic. Order from The Cooperative League, 167 West 12th Street, New York, N. Y. $3.

BOOK OF BOOKS (10 min; sound). Produced under the supervision of the American Bible Society, this film shows how we got the Bible, the history of Bible manufacture, how Bibles were illustrated, copied by hand, then printed one page at a time on crude presses, down to the present modes of production and distributed. There is also a worship service, with the pastor reading Isaiah 34:16. Rental $1.50.

TWO THOUSAND YEARS AGO. A series of five films showing the kind of life lived in Palestine in the time of Jesus. The following subjects are available: The Home, The School, The Day's Work, The Travellers, and The Synagogue. Produced by the Education Committee of Christian Cinema and the Religious Film Society, these religious-educational documentaries can be rented for $6 each. Write to the United World Films, Inc., 445 Park Ave., New York, N. Y.

VISITATION EVANGELISM. Prepared on an undenominational basis, this black-and-white filmstrip with manual can be used to illustrate the procedures necessary in putting on a visitation evangelistic program in the church. Order from the United Christian Missionary Society, Indianapolis, Ind., $2.

THREE FILMSTRIPS (15 min. each). The three filmstrips are: Widening Horizons, showing women of Ginling, Yenching and Cheoloo colleges and their role in the New China: The Woman's Christian College of Japan at Tokyo, demonstrating the place of educated Christian women in the new democratic life of Japan; and Vellore in the New India, portraying the famous institution founded by Dr. Ida S. Scudder where training is given for health work in a land of 388,000,000 people. Order from The United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. $1 rental for set with commentary.

OUR AMERICAN HERITAGE. A series of six teaching filmstrips prepared by The Reader's Digest Educational Department as their contribution to the interest of the tour of the Freedom Train. Historical drawings, photographs, pictographs, cartoons and texts are used for the following strips which make up the series: Birth of our Freedom; Freedom's Foundation; Freedom's Progress; Freedom Today, Vocabulary of Freedom; and Literature of Freedom. Order

The United Negro College Fund

There are in the United States thirty-six accredited institutions of college grade devoted wholly to the higher education of Negroes. These colleges train doctors, social workers, dentists, nurses, lawyers, ministers and teachers. Many of these colleges have very small endowment. Indeed, the total endowment of all of them barely equal that of Princeton University! Nor are their students ordinarily possessed of great resources, so tuition and other charges which contribute to income must be kept at a minimum. Some of these colleges are Church-owned and suffer from the typical financial stringency of such institutions.

Five years ago, under the leadership of Dr. Frederick Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute, tweny-seven of these colleges joined together to form the United Negro College Fund. Today thirty-two Negro colleges belong to the Fund. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who has been working with the Fund since its inception, is the distinguished chairman of the national board.

The purpose of the Fund is not to supply capital funds for buildings or endowments, but to supplement the income of these institutions for their annual running expenses. To state it thus coldly is not to understand that for some of these colleges, the financial support thus received from the Fund is the difference between continuing in operation and closing the doors of the college! Yet the total the thirty-two colleges ask is the almost incredibly modest sum of $1,400,000. This is a bit more than $43,000 on the average for each college! It is unthinkable that the Fund should not achieve full success.

Yet despite protestations throughout the South that education is the highroad to the solution of many of our perplexing racial tensions; and despite the fact all but one of these colleges is in the South, the support of the Fund comes mainly from the North. Here is a way in which every man and woman of good will can help constructively to solve our racial problems. Send your contribution this week to "The United Negro College Fund," 38 East 57th Street, New York City. This Fund must not be allowed to fail!

The Plight of Clergy Widows

Pensions for the clergy of the Church are slowly approaching a decent standard, though if inflation continues, the ability of retired clergy to live on their pensions will be seriously impaired. But in one area, our pension system is grossly inadequate. We refer to pensions for widows and orphans. The problem is particularly stringent when a clergyman dies in active service, leaving a widow with small children.

Widow's pensions in recent years have averaged less than $400 per year per pension. Orphan's grants, by rule, are limited to one hundred to three hundred dollars, depending on the age of the child. The Immediate Grant of $1,000 to widows whose husbands died while engaged in the active ministry has been a great boon for the sudden, unexpected expenses of death, but it does nothing to remedy the long term situation. Unless a widow has private means, she must face the necessity of seeking employment, whether she is qualified for it or not. This may well be complicated by the need of being both mother and father to the children.

The Church Pension Fund is not to be blamed for this. They have scrupulously obeyed the laws of the Church in this matter, and have done all they could to interpret those laws charitably. Increased pensions for widows could only be secured through the Fund by increasing the assessment rate. We doubt if the Church would accept this, though we believe this possibility ought to be explored by the General Convention.

An obvious answer is personal insurance. But in the case of many of the younger clergy, their salaries will seldom allow them to purchase insurance in the amount needed. $25,000, even at the optimistic return of 4 per cent, would only mean $20 a week to supplement a widow's pension. This would seem to be the barest minimum of insurance needed by a married clergyman, yet we venture to guess that only a small number of clergymen have this amount. For most of them, it is far beyond their financial capacity. Ordinary so-called "straight life" insurance in this amount for a man in the early thirties would be about $500 a year. Even term insurance, the basic insurance and cheapest of all, would be about $200 a year.

Recently we heard of a Methodist Church which insures its pastor for $10,000 term insurance, making his wife the beneficiary. Here is a fine solution. Even a small Church would be glad to expend $200 a year to help to relieve its rector of this grim worry. We wish the Church Life Insurance Company, the wholly owned subsidiary of the Church Pension Fund, would work out a possible term insurance policy for the clergy that might be bought by vestries to protect the wives and children of the clergy.

Why not give the amount to be spent to the clergyman as an outright salary increase? Well, why not do both?

St. Stephen's Church to Observe 185th Anniversary

Portland, Me.—Plans are being completed for the observance of the 185th anniversary of the organization of St. Stephen's Parish, Longfellow Square, Portland, Maine, during the coming summer and fall. The observance will take note of the 94th anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of the present church edifice, August 8, 1854, when special services will be held, and the formal organization of the parish in November, 1763. The observance will close with a special service on the first Sunday in December, marking the present rector's 20th anniversary.

St. Stephen's is one of the colonial parishes which combined to organize the Protestant Episcopal Church. It was first organized under the name of St. Paul, which name it bore until 1839 when it reorganized and took the name St. Stephen. Two of its rectors were elevated to the episcopate, the Rt. Rev. Thomas M. Clark and the Rt. Rev. William S. Perry. The parish records are complete from the beginning, having been saved from destruction in Portland's great fire in 1866, and they record the names of many who were prominent in the life of the city and state, and one or two of national and international fame, the most prominent being that of Commodore Preble. Not a few of Portlands streets bear the names of its one-time members.

According to the parish tradition, its earliest feeble beginning long antedated its formal organization. The captain of the first English ship to enter the harbor is said to have set up a wooden cross on what is now Great Diamond Island. It is inconceivable that he would perform such an act in claiming title to the country for his Sovereign without having a prayer, and as these seafaring men were accustomed to carry English Prayer Books, if for no other reason, that they might have a fitting service for burials at sea, the prayer or prayers read would be from the Church of England's Prayer Book. That is the date that Portland claims as its origin, and it would appear that St. Stephen's can properly lay similar claim to the same date. Anglican services were held after that date from time to time until the parish was organized.

Th peresent edifice is the fifth in which the parish has worshiped during its long life. It is of native stone, trimmed with Maine granite, and in an excellent state of preservation. It has been pronounced by Cram and Ferguson "a perfect example of early English Gothic," to which they added, "and it should be preserved forever right where it stands."

From the Portland City Guide, at the Public Library, I learn the following: The distinguished man of letters, Matthew Arnold, English poet, critic and esayist, travelled widely in America in the middle years of the 19th century, and visited Portland to lecture. When he saw St. Stephen's Church he exclaimed, "This is the only edifice of its kind I have seen in all my travels in America." The late Harriet L. Bradley, longtime member of the parish, told the present rector that she well remembered Arnold's visit, and that he stopped his carriage and entere dthe church, for a view of the interior. The architect was Charles A. Alexander, of New York City. Cram and Ferguson, authoritative ecclesiastical architects of Boston, have pronounced it "a perfect example fo early English gothic' and added, "it should be preserved forever right where it stands."

To respond in full measure to this suggestion is the present purpose of the officers and members of the parish. Once a parish of fashion and wealth it is now a "down town" parish, on Portland's principal business street. Its doors are open daily and it is much used by many who are of other communions than the Anglican. The board announcing the hours of services bears the Scriptural legend: "A house of prayer for all."

Historical Facts

In 1623—First English ship entered Casco Bay (Portland Harbor). Cross erected on Gt. Diamond Island.

1632—First settlement, founding of Partland.

1727—Rev. Thomas Smith became pastor of the first organized parish in Falmouth (Portland). He kept a diary, in which are recorded many interesting and amusing events. April 9—Yesterday six Purpoodock (So. Portland) men were put in gaol for their rates for Mr. Clark (the pastor). May 4—Eighteen more men were put in gaol for their rates.

July, 1763—"About this time two of the most respectable members of the new parish quarreled and fought in the street." (By way of getting off to a good start?) "A foundation for a church was thus laid, the pillars tremble."

1775—Our first edifice destroyed by a British war ship.

1791—Articles of incorporation granted by legislature of Massachusetts.

Maine becomes a state (1820). St. Stephen's 57 years old.

1839—Parish reorganized, name changed from St. Paul's to St. Stephen's.

1866, (July 4)—Our fourth edifice, brick, destroyed in the Great Fire.

1913—150th anniversary; Burnham Memorial organ installed.

A local merchant says: "St. Stephen's is a public institution." Most of the pews are made from two boards, one for the seat and the other for the back. Maine has but few if any pine trees today from which such boards could be cut.

The pulpit is of Haytian mahogany, the gift of the women of St. Mark's Parish, Augusta, Me.

The chapel altar of solid walnut, hand carved, is a memorial to the Rev. Asa Dalton, for more than forty-three years rector and for more than a half century rector and rector emeritus.

NEW CHURCH CONSECRATED

Americus, Ga.—On Sunday, April 11, Bishop Barnwell consecrated Calvary Church, a beautiful new brick church. He also consecrated a new wooden altar, given by Uriah H. Davenport in memory of his mother, Mrs. Louisa Harhold Davenport, and of his sister, Miss Mary Caroline Davenport. It was designed by Cram and Ferguson and conforms to the reredos. Bishop Barnwell also confirmed the second class presented this year by the rector, the Rev. William C. Baxter.

Detroit, Mich.—The Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, of Bar Harbor, Maine, has announced acceptance of his election as Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan.

REV. T. N. BARTH NAMED COADJUTOR

Nashville, Tenn.—The Rev. Theodore N. Barth, of Memphis, was elected on April 20, bishop coadjutor of the Diocese of Tennessee, on the eleventh ballot.

Twenty clergymen were nominated for the post. When the final ballot was completed, the Rev. Mr. Barth had received the required two-thirds vote; the Rev. Thorne Sparkman, of Chattanooga, was in second place both in lay and clerical voting, and the Rev. Robert A. Magill, of Lynchburg, Va., was third.

As bishop coadjutor, the Rev. Mr. Barth will be assistant to the present bishop, the Rt. Rev. E. P. Dandridge, and will be his automatic successor.

He will assume his new office when his acceptance has been approved by all bishops of the church. Tentative plans for the consecration services have been made to take place in the fall.

THE GLORY OF THE GARDEN
Part II

A Book of Gardens

The career of its Hero—our Lord Jesus Christ—begins and ends in gardens. It began in Nazareth, and Nazareth was a garden city. Surely all the poets and painters are right who show the child Jesus disporting Himself in gardens and pastoral places! Surely they are right again when they show His mother, Mary, before her time was come, and when it came, among the flowers of her garden. "The lilies stand before her as a screen"; herself, "an angel-watered lily, that near God grows and is quiet." So His career began; and it ended with gardens. We are apt to think of the climax of His career as a tumult of mad and murderous crowds. That is the outward history. Inwardly it is a sequence of gardens, awful orchards, so still that God Himself seemed sometimes to be dumb. It was in these the Atonement was prepared for the final Tree; in an orchard on the slopes of Olivet, in a garden in the valley called Gethsemane, in a garden where His tomb was hewn. It was in a garden He rose in glorious triumph, and it was there that He was first seen by her who said to herself upon her first glimpse of Him, "This will be none other than the gardener!"

A Lover of Gardens

We may say that our Lord's childhood in Nazareth, bedecked on all hands with flowers, as travellers declare it still to be, made inevitable His love of gardens. Again, this love must have been quickened anew and nourished by the literature of His nation. His movements in the crisis of His career reveal it further. But notice also how surely His uttered thoughts disclose His love of gardens. Are not certain of His most important parables grown from the imagery of orchards, and of the flowers and trees in them? We catch a voice therein which spake to those about Him saying, "Look to your gardens, men and women; they grow something more than irises and grapes; they bloom with the very truth of God concerning the heavenly kingdom!" He that hath an ear to hear can catch this further voice, "Even as these gardens is that Realm of the Father which I am come to establish in the earth!" Surely herein lies the fulfillment of His mission from God, the planting of a garden in the world in restoration of that first Eden which man had lost through sin. He would have His disciples as a garden in the earth, and His Church as a garden among the peoples.—From The Scottish Guardian.

REFRESHMENT

It was a wonderful experience coming together with young college women interested in vocational work in the Church. It is one thing that I wish everyone of you could have the opportunity to witness. It is refreshing. We hear on all sides the stories of undisciplined youth. So little is written or said about the young people who are thinking through their Vocation. There are those who are thinking in terms of how they can use their lives for the "Glory of God" and not for selfish ends. These days when all life is thought of in terms of "getting for self," it is refreshing to see some young people thinking in terms of doing for others. Girls from many states and colleges on the Eastern seaboard met together. They had an opportunity to learn about the Church and her work.

Leaders skilled in their own fields as social service, directors of Christian Education, college work, and overseas work gave a fine presentation of their work. These young people spent a good deal of their time in discussing their faith. They are alive to the issues of the day. They wanted to know the "answers." They were keen to find out how they can serve. They were willing to think in terms of their studying and summer experience. It is good to know there are young people interested in the Church's work.

Now it is up to us to try to let our young people know how they can serve the Church. More such conferences should be held. On your local church program this would be a good starting point to stimulate your young people. Many of them do not know how they can serve. They do not know about the Church Army, the Church Orders and the other opportunities in parishes and church institutions.

This can be done in the Diocesan Summer Conferences and Youth Weekends. Let us try to give to our young people, both boys and girls the opportunity to know how they can serve their Church. We need workers. There is a dearth of them and many opportunities. Let us remember there are young people with high ideals and aims. Open their eyes and let them see the Church at work and how they can best serve her.

CXXIV

THE COMFORTABLE WORDS—The second sentence of this group of four gems of comfort is taken from our Saviour's discourse to Nicodemus, as recorded in St. John's Gospel, and the translation is almost identical with the King James Version.

The wording is a little misleading in that it does not sufficiently emphasize the oneness of the Father and the Son.

In this connection it is often amazing the way that a child will bring to our attention something that its elders have overlooked. For instance, once a little girl said to her father, "Daddy, did God send His Son into the world to die for us?" "Yes, my dear, so the Bible tells us." The quick reply came, "Well, I don't believe it, for, if He had been a good man He would have come Himself."

That is the important thing to remember that God did come Himself, for the whole meaning of the Incarnation is that God planted a part of Himself in a man, and took upon Himself our infirmities, and our sensitiveness to suffering, both physical and mental, that He might know every detail of our lives, not by heresay, but by experience.

St. John emphasizes this identity of Jesus with God in many places, but perhaps most strongly and clearly in the opening words of his gospel, "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God, and the Word WAS God," here we see that the oneness of Christ and God was so complete that it fulfilled the little girl's statement that "He would have come Himself." He did come Himself and so knows and feels our every experience, including all the details of bodily suffering and mental anguish which is the glory of the Christian religion.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

WHAT MY CHURCH MEANS TO ME

Before I was born my church gave my parents ideals of life and love that make my home a place of strength and beauty. In helpless infancy my church joined in consecrating me to God.

My church enriched my childhood with the romance of religion and the lessons of life that have been woven into the texture of my soul. Sometimes I seem to have forgotten and then, when else I might surrender to foolish and futile ideals of life, the truths my church taught me become radiant, insistent and inescapable.

Bringing The Message To Meet The Need

By The REV. CANON J. DOUGLAS PATERSON, Toronto

No. V.

To provide the cure for a sick world many people and systems proclaim that they have the remedy and they demand that control be given to them and all will be well. The Communists make this demand and they are both sincere and energetic. The Church of Rome at the other extreme makes its position clear and with good reason. A Labor government in Britain has a program, and, in seeking to gain its ends, it has not hesitated to destroy much that is good and valuable, and to build up what has not yet proved to be a workable system. Our own political parties each believe that they should be entrusted with the problem, and they hold out rosy prospects for "a better day that's coming bye and bye." Last night our (Canadian) radio announced that "Mr. Truman had thrown his hat into the ring." As Christians and as a Christian nation, and as a Church we must do just that. We believe that Christ Jesus alone is the solution and we must present Him as the Healer of the open sores of the world.

We need to be very wise in seeking to present the Lord Jesus.

(a) With Understanding:

Many times we ail because we not only do not know the real need of those we minister to, but we do not even try to learn. Before a physician attempts to treat a patient he diagnoses the case, and only when he thoroughly knows all about the disease does he apply the remedy. It may take a long time and demand deep probing, but no success can be expected until after a most careful and skilled examination. If that is true of the physician of the body does it not equally apply to those who would be the under-physician of the soul. No teacher accepts a new pupil in her school until tests have shown the scholar's grades and ability. The child must not be held back nor advanced too quickly. The teaching given must be suitable to the development of the child. We who would be teachers of God's children must know their spiritual development. Sermons preached to the whole congregation by a wise and skilled preacher will have a word for the child, for the woman, for the adolescent, and for the business man, and all will profit, but to the general dispensation of food there must be added the individual prescription to meet the individual need. The wise pastor or Sunday school teacher knows the spiritual need of each member. There is little value in exhorting that person to grow in grace who has not yet entered into the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is not profitable to keep on preaching, "Ye must be born again" to the sincere believer, who, perhaps long years before, entered into a living fellowship with his Lord. On the other hand it may be very necessary and profitable to speak definitely on the subject of sin in the believer (e. g., Epistle for Lent iii) and so develop a saint from a merely faithful Christian life to a fruitful life in Christ. As a man expects to see the increase of his business from year to year, as our school system sees promotions from grade to grade, as our bodies show the growth and development, or decay, as time passes on, so we must see the steady growth in grace in the whole membership of the Church of Christ. We will see this if we do our Lord's business with wisdom and understanding.

(b) With Definiteness:

The Book of Acts gives us many lessons in successful preaching. There is only one theme, "They preached unto them Jesus." Only on one occasion—at Athens—do we find it otherwise, and that is the only failure. But the preacher learned his lesson so it was not a total loss, and afterwards he said, "I determined to know nothing among ye save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Therefore our message is clear, to the world of unredeemed men and women we have no other message but just the Lord Jesus Christ—the Saviour of the World and the only Hope for the world.

Not only must we be definite in our message, but we must expect a definite decision. We must not be content to present our case and leave people to think it out. We must strike when the iron is hot and demand a clear cut answer. Genesis 24 gives us the example: the story needs 57 verses to give us the wooing of Rebeckah by a wise father (Abraham) and a faithful servant, but it only takes three lines in my Bible to preach the challenge and the decision: "They called Rebeckah and said unto her, 'Wilt thou go with this man?' and she said, 'I will go.'"

Today very many people are ready to be pressed into a decision for Christ and it is very helpful to them if we are wise in pressing our case to a decision.

(c) With Winsomness:

Jesus had a way with people, sometimes very tender and sometimes very harsh; sometimes very vague and sometimes very definite; but He always met a person's real need in His teaching and commended Himself by His attitude. Oh! that we, His followers, were more like Him. God deliver us from cant. We are not to be handing out "softsoap," and "sweet platitudes," or "empty epigrams." Sometimes we must speak out; sometimes condemn an evil thing and say harsh things, but we can always do it in love—we must speak faithfully, fearlessly, and frankly, but love must burn in our hearts even toward those we condemn with our lips.

(d) In the Power of the Holy Spirit:

What we cannot do He can do. "When He the Spirit of Truth is come He will convict the world" (1) of sin, (2) of the righteousness of God, (3) of judgment to come. It is a wholesome exercise for any preacher to sit down and write a sermon which will present to a congregation the loveliness of Jesus or, say, convict his hearers of their own sin. We despair of ever doing these things. Yet it is divinely possible when the Holy Spirit of God takes possession of our bodies and speaks through our lips, for men to be so convicted that they come asking, "What must I do to be saved?" and then again through us find the Saviour, the altogether lovely One. The Lord Jesus Christ is where they find the answer to their every need, and the salvation and rest of their souls.

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION FROM JAPAN

New York, N. Y.—The Synod of the Diocese of South Tokyo, Japan, adopted a resolution conveying to the Church in the United States its thanks and appreciation for help given to the Church in Japan:

"The Synod of the Diocese of South Tokyo, of the Nippon Seikokwai, which is now being held on this 2nd day of February, 1948, being the Feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, expresses cordial thanks for the deep love shown, and the wonderful help given to us by the Mother Church in the United States of America since the end of the war. This Synod wishes to express its resolution to respond to the good will of the American Church by restoring the destroyed churches of our country and by spreading the knowledge of the Gospel with all our strength."

The message was signed by the Rt. Rev. Light Shinjiro Mayekawa, chairman of the Synod of South Tokyo, and the Rev. Goro Hayashi, secretary of the Synod.

In his response, Presiding Bishop Sherrill assured the Japanese Church of continued help, and also that the message will be made known widely throughout the Church here, and "it will mean much in drawing our two churches closer together."

NATIONAL FAMILY WEEK MAY 2-9

Nashville, Tenn.—Problems involving the relationships between parents and their children will be treated in six radio broadcasts over more than 800 stations as a part of the observance of National Family Week, May 2-9. The broadcasts are written and produced by Carlton E. Morse known to radio listeners as the author of "One Man's Family." They are made available by The Upper Room, the world's most widely used devotional guide. On local stations they will be presented as public service features usually with the sponsorship of local church or civic groups.

The theme for this series was worked out last summer at the National Family Life Conference. The series is entitled Families Need Parents. The individual dramatic episodes are The Children's Bill of Rights; By Precept and Example; Keeping Up With the Younger Generation; Junior and the Divine Plan; As the Twig is Bent; and The Importance of Children.

Written from a religious and Christian viewpoint the programs are nonsectarian and non-denominational. Each is aimed squarely at some problem in the field of parent-child relations. The series will be available later for use by churches, church schools and other study groups as an audio aid.

REGENTS UNI. OF SOUTH WIRE PROTEST

New York, N. Y.—The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, releases a telegram to him from the Board of Regents of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., protesting the constant iteration of expectation of war. Said the message:

"We, the Board of Regents of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., protest the feeling throughout the country of the inevitability of war.

"We hold and proclaim that America must take the lead in stopping the spread of Communism, in preserving individual freedom and personal liberty, and in upholding the dignity of man. We must hope and strive to the utmost to accomplish this without recourse to war, and we must have faith that this can be done.

"We must put our hearts and minds to the urgent task of studying the facts, finding a plan, and following a course that will attain these ends. We call ourselves, our faculty, and students to this high objective.

"For ourselves, we regard the following as fundamental: 1. Acceptance by the United States of responsibility for leadership in world affairs; 2. A clearly defined foreign policy for the United States; 3. A strong Army, Navy, and Air Force; 4. A declaration of our deep desire for peace, but also of our determination to fight if necessary for the preservation of liberty and justice; 5. Economic aid to the con-Communist European countries as provided in the Marshall Plan; 6. A World Federation of Nations really capable of settling international disputes, stopping war and aggression, and preserving peace.

"We reaffirm our belief in the redemptive power of the Christian faith and we pray that we may know and do God's will."

The message to Bishop Sherrill was signed by the Rev. Girault M. Jones, of New Orleans, secretary of the Board of Regents; Frank M. Gillespie, San Antonio, Texas, chairman; Edmund Orgill, of Memphis; J. Albert Woods, Jacksonville; J. A. Setze, Augusta, Ga.; W. Dudley Gale, Nashville; Dr. James T.

PLIGHT OF TEACHERS IN CHINA'S CHRISTIAN COLLEGES

New York, N. Y.—Faculty members in many of China's Christian colleges are having to use up all their savings, sell their ancestral property and family heirlooms, or sacrifice prized possessions such as stamp collections, furniture, and professional libraries, in order to exist on salaries which have less than fifteen per cent of the buying power of ten years ago.

According to a report from the United Board for Christian Colleges in China, these professors, because of the inflation, earn less today than coolie ricksha boys. Scores of them are suffering from serious malnutrition and vitamin deficiencies, but the majority of them, despite the offer of more lucrative positions elsewhere, have remained loyal to the Christian colleges.

A few have done manual labor, formerly done only by servants. Others have sold all their clothing, except one suit. Most of them have gone without heat in their houses, even in the coldest weather, and some, despite the loss of "face," have had to let their wives augment their meager incomes by working in stores or schools.

For too many, corn meal, every meal, has been the basic daily fare, and a half pound of meat per week for a family of five has been the rule rather than the exception.

American teachers, who, in these inflationary days are constantly lamenting the low buying power of their salaries, still are more fortunate than their fellow-teachers in China.

CANTERBURY CLUB ORGANIZED

Ashland, Va.—Randolph-Macon College's Episcopal students organized a Canterbury Club in historic Washington Literary Hall on April 26.

Mr. William Robertson, assistant coach at Randolph-Macon, has been designated as faculty advisor of the club, and the Rev. Samuel B. Chilton, of Ashland, and secretary-treasurer of the Diocese of Virginia will serve as chaplain.

The organizing chairman is Randolph-Macon College Freshman Billy Barker, of Richmond, and he has urged all Randolph-Macon Episcopal students to be present for the organizational meeting.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

After serving the clergy, churches and the laity uninterruptedly for the past twenty-three years, J. M. Hall, Inc., regrets to have to advise its many friends that it cannot accept orders for specially-made vestments after May 15. Materials by the yard and other products in stock may be purchased as long as they are available, up to June 30, 1948.

If anyone is interested in purchasing this productive business as a going concern, please write to Mr. James E. Bennet, 140 Nassau St., New York 7, N. Y.

Bishop Clingman Makes Strong Plea For Personal Evangelism

Louisville, Ky.—The 120th Diocesan Convention convened April 13-14 in Calvary Church. The Rt. Rev. Charles Clingman said in delivering his annual address, "that in this 'tragic time' brute force must be met with brute force." "I long ago discarded the last vestiges of pacificism," he told the congregation assembled.

In a strong plea for personal evangelism, Bishop Clingman said that he is even more certain that brute force alone—the force of arms—will not and cannot bring abiding peace.

The Hitlers and the Stalins, he charged, have demonstrated their hatred and fear of the message of the church.

"Do we need another tocsin to call us to war—the unending war of good against evil?" he asked. "Our loyalty to Jesus Christ . . . is the secret of the permanence of all we hold dear."

The Bishop said that he was pleased with increased activities of the laymen of the diocese, calling this work "one of the most hopeful signs on the horizon of the church in my entire ministry, which now covers 40 years."

In this connection he quoted a saying of Billy Sunday: "If the Episcopal Church ever wakes up, look out." There is evidence, he said, that the awakening has begun.

Bishop Clingman called for studies by the Convention of two church practices:

1. Should the Burial Office be read always in the church or home or is it proper to have it read in a "funeral parlor," and should great masses of flowers be brought into the church?

2. Is it proper to have a paid wedding director present at the rehearsal in the church?

New Churches

In September, 1947, he said the new St. Andrew's Church and Parish House were dedicated; the new Church and Parish House of St. Francis-in-the-Fields, Harrods Creek, which is now under construction, would be dedicated in September; and that a new congregation was being organized in the fast growing suburb of St. Matthew's, east of Louisville.

The highlights of the second day of the Convention were elections and reports and the adoption of resolutions presented by the Committee on the Bishop's Annual Address. The outstanding resolution adopted was to procure professionals from our National Headquarters to make a survey of the whole Diocese of Kentucky, giving an overall picture of needed missionary work within the Diocese, integrating into the survey, the need of a Conference Center located in the center part of the Diocese .

The Department of Finance presented a $13,900 diocesan budget which was unanimously accepted.

LIBERIA HOLDS GENERAL CONVOCATION

Monrovia, Liberia.—The 25th General Convocation of the Missionary District of Liberia was held at Trinity Pro-Cathedral, April 14-18.

Convocation opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion by Bishop Bravid W. Harris, followed by an all-day clergy conference led by the Bishop.

The second day was devoted to regular routine business, the Bishop's address, and reports from the Council of Advice, Committee on Missions, the Treasurer, and the Committee on Canons. Reports were heard also from the Archdeacons, from the heads of St John's School, the House of Bethany, St. Timothy's Hospital, and Julia C. Emery Hall. In the evening there was an address by Archdeacon S. D. Yudusie, and reports on the District quota.

Friday was devoted to the Woman's Auxiliary and the General Sunday School Union, with a Communion service, business meetings, presidents' addresses, and reports from Auxiliary Branches and Sunday Schols.

Saturday, April 17, was made a notable day in the Convocation because a pilgrimage was made to the site of the new Cuttington College at Gbanga, and ground was broken for the building. Addresses were made by President Tubman of the Republic of Liberia, and by

R. H. O'Hara Lanier, United States Minister to Liberia.

On Sunday, the closing day, there were Church services morning, afternoon and evening, with final reports from some of the committees, and appointments to various committees for the coming year.

CONFERENCE FOR MEN INTERESTED IN MINISTRY

A three-day conference for young men interested in the ministry will be held at Bexley Hall, the Divinity School of Kenyon College in Gambier, Ohio, April 30-May 2.

Among the outstanding speakers will be the Rev. William Jones Gordon, the young bishop-elect of the Missionary District of Alaska, who will speak on "The Missionary Call." Other speakers will be the Rev. Arthur W. Hargate of Trinity Church, Toledo; the Rev. Robert F. McGregor, of Christ Church, Oberlin; the Rev. Nelson M. Burroughs, of Christ Church, Cincinnati; the Rev. Eugene H. Buxton, of Holy Trinity, Bellefontaine, Ohio; David Loegler, of Bexley Hall; Dean Corwin C. Roach and the Rev. Oscar J. F. Seitz, of Bexley Hall. Almost all the fields of the Church's work will be discussed—college, missionary, rural, and city pastorates.

Last year fifty young men from eight states attended the Conference. It was considered so worthwhile that this year the College Work-Commissions of the dioceses of Ohio and Southern Ohio and the Church Society for College Work join Kenyon College and Bexley Hall in sponsoring the Conference.

MISSIONARY APPOINTMENTS

New York, N. Y.—Appointment of two missionaries for Manila, P. I., and one for Anvik, Alaska, is announced by the Overseas Department of the National Council.

Mr. H. Ellsworth Chandlee, senior at the General Theological Seminary, and soon to be ordained, will be a member of the faculty at St. Andrew's Seminary in Manila. He is a member of St. Paul's Parish, Harrisburg, Pa., a graduate of Dickinson College. He has worked in missions in New Jersey, as seminarian in charge and as student assistant.

Mr. J. Frederick Harriman, another General Seminary senior, will be ordained in the near future, and will go to the Philippines during the summer, for similar work at St. Andrew's Seminary. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. B. Franklin Peterson, also a General Seminary senior, will take up work shortly at Christ Church, Anvik. He is a member of Trinity Cathedral, Trenton, N. J., a graduate of State Teachers' College, Trenton, and will be ordained upon graduation from the General Seminary in the near future. During the war he served as a radio operator with the Field Artillery. Mr. Peterson is a brother of the Rev. Mainert J. Peterson, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Ventnor, N. J. He will be married in June, to Miss Emma B. Huff of Elizabeth, N. J.

FIRST QUARTERLY REPORT OF COLLECTIONS

At the close of the first quarter of this year (1948) the books show a 112% payment of the amount due on Expectations. Although 9 dioceses, 3 domestic missionary districts, 3 extra-continental and 4 overseas missionary districts have paid nothing the generous overpayments of 61 domestic and one overseas field make this good report possible.

In themselves the statistics mean nothing but they carry the assurance that funds will be made available for appropriation payments as needed.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S FUND FOR WORLD RELIEF

The response to the Presiding Bishop's appeal for this world-wide relief fund was magnificent. Many parishes and dioceses have already made remittances. Others are urged to do so as soon as possible because we have already paid out practically all our receipts to Church World Service, and they need more money.

WORLD ASSEMBLY DAY

To Be Observed on Whitsunday, May 16

New York, N. Y.—Protestant and Orthodox Churches throughout the United States will be observing Whitsunday—May 16, 1948—as World Assembly Day, it was announced by Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, associate general secretary of the World Council of Churches.

The observances will be in honor of the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches, meeting in Amsterdam, Holland, in August of this year. 135 churches in 39 countries will be represented at the Assembly, including major Protestant and Orthodox bodies in the United States.

Special interdenominational services will be held on Whitsunday at the National Cathedral, Washington, D. C., under the sponsorship of the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun. Mass religious observances of World Assembly Day will take place in St. Louis, Mo. and Los Angeles, Calif., under the sponsorship of each city's Council of Churches.

"These three services," Dr. Leiper explained, "will be the focal points for smaller ecumenical services in other communities throughout the country."

Pointing out that Whitsunday is cited in the Book of Acts as the anniversary of the Christian Church, Dr. Leiper declared that "in the stretch of Christian history, those hundred and twenty individuals who met at the original Pentecost in Jerusalem have now grown to include the 135 churches representing millions of believers whose delegates will meet at Amsterdam this August."

"We have every hope that this Assembly will mark a great renewal of faith in the original concepts of Christian brotherhod," Dr. Leiper concluded.

FOR THE FUTURE LEADERSHIP OF THE CHURCH

"The Minister is ordered from time to time, to advise the People, whilst they are in health, to make Wills arranging for the disposal of their temporal goods, and, when of ability, to leave Bequests for religious and charitable uses."

—Book of Common Prayer, p. 320.

CALL MEMBERS OF DIOCESE TO PRAYER

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Rt. Rev. Oliver J. Hart, bishop of Pennsylvania, and the Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, suffragan bishop, issued "A Call to Prayer for Peace" to be observed from April 12-17. In the call were these words: "This is a time for Christian people to be on our knees confessing our sins, listening to Christ's commands and asking the God of the nations to preserve us, both friends and enemies, from the consequences of stupid and senseless hate. We plead the Cross of Christ through whose redeeming power the world must be saved. We therefore call upon all members of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, together with our friends and neighbors of other Churches, to join with us in this Vigil of Prayer."

In most parishes the church building was kept open throughout the period, and on April 15 an intensive all-day vigil was arranged with clergy, laymen and laywomen filling assigned appointments for leading in prayers and meditations throughout the entire day. A special litany was written and authorized for use by the Bishops.

Merritt was caught in Lexington, Va., and he is due to arrive here tomorrow.

You will be interested to know that the warning appeared in abbreviated form in other Church papers, but even so, two clergy in the West have written to me of reading the article and realizing that they had been taken in by the same man.

Again thanking you,
Faithfully yours,

Personal Notes

The Rev. Junius J. Martin, rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, St. Louis, Mo., will become rector of All Saints' Church, Brookline, Mass., on June 1. Res. 1789 Beacon St., Brookline 46.

The Rev. Kenneth E. Clarke, assistant to the dean of the Cathedral Church of St. John, Wilmington, Del., has accepted a call to become rector of St. Anne's Church at Middletown, Del., effective April 15. The Middletown church has been without a rector since the resignation of the Rev. Dr. Richard W. Trapnell, Feb. 1 because of illness.

In addition to his work at St. Anne's Church, Mr. Clarke will teach Old and New Testament, Church history, and an introductory course on the Church at St. Andrew's School at Middletown.

Mr. Clarke, a graduate of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., who received a bachelor of divinity degree from the School of Theology there, became assistant at the Cathedral Church last March. He was ordained to the priesthood last Dec. 7, with the Rt. Rev. S. Harrington Littell, a native of Wilmington, and former missionary bishop of the Episcopal Church in Honolulu, officiating.

DEATHS

DR. THOMAS S. GATES

Dr. Thomas S. Gates, lawyer, banker, educator and churchman, died suddenly at his summer home at Osterville, Mass., April 8, and was buried from the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, April 12.

Born in Philadelphia, March 21, 1873, was educated at Germantown Academy, Haverford College, and the University of Pennsylvania and University Law School, where he graduated in 1896. For 14 years he had been President of the University of Pennsylvania, and at the time of his death was chairman of the Board of Trustees. Besides his business and professional career, he found time for active service in many civic organizations as well as in the Church.

In 1946, Dr. Gates served as chairman on Arrangements for the meeting

The False Hope of National Messianism

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

Just before his recent death, the great exiled Russian Christian philosopher, Nicolai Berdyaev, published a book entitled, "The Russian Idea." The book was, in a sense, an anti-climactic end of the philosophical and theological labors of one of the great souls of our time.

It was an examination of Russian Messianism, of the curious belief which persisted in Russia for centuries that the salvation of the world would in some sense finally depend upon Russia. There is, of course, nothing wrong in Berdyaev's historical examination of this idea. What makes the book a disappointing conclusion of a great life is that Berdyaev took the idea so seriously.

His acceptance of the idea betrayed him into a serious discussion of the problem, whether or not Russian Communism represents a true fulfillment of this perennial Russian hope. He came to the conclusion that Russian Communism does not quite fulfill that hope, but that it lays the foundation for its ultimate fulfillment.

These convictions of Berdyaev were, incidentally, responsible for a serious rift in the colony of religious exiles in Paris, who had done so much to enrich the religious thought of our generation. Berdyaev was quite well aware of the fact that most of the Messianic ideas and illusions in the Russian literature of the nineteenth century were the fruits of an uneasy conscience. Sensitive spirits in Russia, who were oppressed by the injustice of Czarist Russia and by the spiritual impotence of the nation, found a curiously illogical satisfaction in dreaming of the day when Russia would become the instrument and organ of world redemption.

Instead of rejecting the idea of world redemption through one nation out of hand, Berdyaev makes the mistake of scrutinizing various forms of this nationalistic Messianism to see which one is most adequate. Actually the idea that a single nation has the one special gift, required for the redemption of the world, is from the Christian standpoint, the final form of sinful pride.

Almost every powerful nation has spawned various forms of this Messianism. Fichte adumbrated a German variety. Lionel Curtis gave us an English version. In the early 19th century De Toqueville reported that our American frontiersmen, who first gave voice to the "American dream," conceived of our own nation as the final fulfillment of the Kingdom of God on earth. Even Poland, despite its insignificance in world affairs, has had the pretension of Nationalistic Messianism.

Instead of taking these ideas seriously, it would have been better if Berdyaev had recognized the tragic irony of the fact that the worst evils come into history through false schemes of redemption and that Communism is merely the latest and most vivid proof of this fact.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

April Meeting of The National Council

By GEORGE LORENZO GRAMES

American Church Institute for Negroes

A resolution adopted by the General Convention, September, 1946, reads:

> "Resolved, the House of Deputies concurring, That the National Council is directed to make a study of the American Church Institute for Negroes as to its corporate status, in its relation to the General Convention, National Council, and the affiliated institutions, and report its recommendations resulting from such study to the next General Convention."

A cloud out of the sea, as small as a man's hand. In compliance with this resolution, Bishop Peabody, of Central New York, presented the report of the Committee of Reference on Wednesday afternoon at the April meeting of the National Council at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., and it proved to be the liveliest part of the two days' meeting. Without approaching the point of acrimony, the discussions following the report were spiritual and frank.

Bishop Peabody prefaced the report by saying that the subject was not inherently controversial, and that the problem is administrative in nature, whether the ACIN is carrying out the task for which it was set up years ago. "The report is going to be critical."

Surveyors with specialized experience, including Bishops Dagwell, Haines, and Mitchell, Rev. Messrs. Magill and West, all National Council members; Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Virginia State College, and Mr. Don Davis, comptroller of Hampton Institute, at the request of the committee, visited the ACIN institutions. The study made was of the ACIN itself and not of the management of its several institutions. Of particular help to the committee was the survey made in 1946 by the George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, Tenn., under the direction of John E. Brewton, and at the request of the ACIN.

A short history of the ACIN is included in the committee's report. As early as 1865 a group of churchmen, both northern and southern, moved the General Convention of that year to awaken the Church to its responsibility for Negroes, through an organization called the Protestant Episcopal Freedman's Commission to Colored People, which a year later became the Commission on Work Among Colored People, and finally the Commission on Negro Work. It was dissolved in 1904 and its duties committed to the Board of Missions. This body enlisted the help of churchmen both North and South in making a special study of the problem, and the result was the establishment of "a small autonomous body of twelve churchmen" as the American Church Institute for Negroes, incorporated in Virginia in 1906. Under the leadership of the Rev. Robert W. Patton, the Institute grew to its present stature. Its offices are in Boston with three officers. The Presiding Bishop is president of its eleven-member board of trustees. Its income in 1947 amounted to $221,966.64 of which $154,142.94 came from the National Council, $35,828.97 from income on investments, the rest from contributions, legacies, and gifts. Appropriations to schools amounted to $143,570.35, transmitted funds to $18,838.53, and administration, $34,183.86. The $625,808 voted from the R. & A. Fund is not included in this.

At various times there have been 23 institutions affiliated: at present, nine. The ACIN's own handbook states that "in some ways it functions like a holding company in the public utility field," and acts as a "visitor" to the institutions.

Illegally-Constituted Board

Close association with the parent body, the Church, was assured in the original (1906) charter by the provision that ALL the trustees should be members of or nominated by the Board of Missions, and that a majority were to be members. In the election of their successors the board of trustees had only a modifying clause, "so far as practicable and legal" to permit any variation from the original provisions. In May, 1920, however, a National Council resolution informed the ACIN that the Presiding Bishop and Council "would in no wise object to the omission from the by-laws of the requirement that a majority of the trustees shall be members of the Council." The subsequent by-law provided that two of the trustees be elected from the Council and/or its officers and staff, one of them to be the Presiding Bishop. The general counsel of the National Council has given their opinion that this by-law, now in effect, is invalid so far as it contradicts the original charter, meaning that for some years the ACIN board of trustees has been illegally constituted, although at the suggestion of the National Council itself. The committee regards this technical illegality serious in that it has resulted in a nominal connection between the two bodies, with no effective control by the Council.

Profound Changes

Since the ACIN was set up in 1906 there have been profound changes, both canonical and structural, in the central administration of the Church. The continuance of semi-autonomous agencies, undertaking to act on behalf of the Church at large, becomes open to question, especially where their functions overlap those of regularly established departments and divisions of the National Council, as does the ACIN. Since most of the income of the Institute is appropriated by the National Council, it should have both authority and responsibility in the disposition of these funds. The National Council, as successor to the old Board of Missions, has taken over and expanded the fund-raising and appropriating functions of the latter, and is acting for the Church at large in a more widely and directly representative capacity than did the Board of Domestic and Foreign Missions. The committee's view is that National Council funds of the size expended by ACIN should not be spent outside of the Council's effective control, especially in view of the high ratio of administrative costs to total expenditures. The present situation is that the Institute is no longer effectively controlled by the National Council or General Convention, except as (1) its trustees are either selected from or appointed by the National Council, a practice not being followed now; and (2) the Council can make or withhold appropriations to the Institute. A change is needed, either by way of a return to the legal basis of 1906, or by moving forward to a relation more in line with the present policies and practices of the Church.

Criticism

Quoting from the Brewton Survey:

"The Episcopal Church was among the first . . . to develop institutions of learning for Negroes immediately following the outbreak of the Civil war. However, these institutions have not survived or developed in proportion to those of other denominations. None of the Episcopal institutions developed to four-year status until St. Augustine's became one in 1927-1928. At the present time, it appears that none of the institutions has achieved an educational status which compares favorably with the outstanding Negro schools of some of the other denominations or with the state institutions. It is possible that a multiplicity of factors could be mentioned as causes, chief among which might be inadequate finance, lack of proper guidance in matters educational, or conflicting viewpoints in planning the school's program."

The committee's report regrets that the Institute has taken so little positive concern in the educational programs and standards of its institutions that only two of them, St. Augustine's and Voorhees, have Class A ratings. "Some of these schools are so substandard as to be a reproach to the Church."

As to religion, the Institute has shown little constructive interest, its two principal officers having expressed themselves as "more interested in education than evangelism."

As regards financial and related forms of supervision, it appears in a number of instances to have been carried into such detail and so arbitrarily as to have hampered building and other operations, and unduly to have restricted boards of trustees and officers in the legitimate performance of their functions. This tight rein on finances, building, and the like is indicative of a fundamental lack of confidence in the trustees and administrations of these institutions, not justified under present day conditions, and also resented.

The ACIN's promotional activities are mainly of a sort that could be done equally well through the regular channels of the Church, with whose fund-raising activities they are competitive.

Negro education, once almost totally assumed by private agencies, is now a recognized and accepted function of the states. The Brewton Survey indicates clearly that we appear to have reached the withdrawal point in all elementary education, and in secondary education below the eleventh grade. "The expenditure of large sums," says the committee, "cannot be justified if the money is to go for schools and colleges which are duplicating, or worse, limiting poorly, secular schools already in existence. . . . We do not attempt to say that the education of Negroes in the areas served by these schools is at so high a level that it does not need help from the Episcopal Church. We do say that wherever the Church is to continue in the field of education, any provision of large sums of money must be made with the assurance that the work is to be of the highest caliber."

Conclusions

The Committee on Reference reached the following conclusions:

1. The functions now carried on by ACIN should be resumed by the National Council, the Church's organic and centralized leadership.
2. The Church should take due cognizance of the current status of the American Negro, and should recognize and encourage local leadership in planning and management of institutions.
3. The Church is justified in maintaining only those institutions which render a unique or special service.
4. The National Council has an obligation . . . to exercise a more positive role in the expenditure of the large sums it grants these institutions.

Recommendations

The recommendations of the committee amounted to a practical dissolution of the ACIN, "with due regard to obligations towards employees and dependents," after the election of a board of trustees by the National Council from its own membership, which would assign the institutions and the affairs of the ACIN to the proper Department. Because Bishop Sherrill felt that the Council should not act precipitately, without giving the officers of the ACIN a chance to present their case, the Council adopted a resolution suggested by him referring the matter to the members of the National Council for study, to Messrs. Dykman and Whiteside for legal advice, to a special committee composed of Bishop Peabody, Dr. Magill, and Mr. Look, who will confer with a similar committee of the ACIN, and report back to the October meeting of the Council.

Much of the discussion that followed the presentation of the report was on the legal aspects of the present situation. Dr. Franklin stated as his opinion that as for any legal or canonical connection between the Institute and the General Convention, there was none. Bishop Mitchell said that its connection is instead with the National Council as successor to the old Board of Domestic and Foreign Missions. Mr. Louis J. Hunter, treasurer of the Institute, who was present and called on to speak, expressed his feeling that an experienced staff had hardly been consulted. He questioned how, after creating a separate organization and electing trustees, the Council could tell them what to do. He is concerned about the 4,000 students and the effect the adoption of the committee's recommendations would have on Negro work in the South.

Col. Dykman expressed his opinion that the Council would be exceeding what General Convention asked it to do, and what the law allows, if it did more than study and report. In the words of Dr. Magill, the Council had abdicated a power it had no right to abdicate.

Following Mr. Hunter's revelation that the ACIN had had the Virginia Legislature amend its charter to conform with the "illegal" by-law, Bishop Mitchell questioned whether an illegal board can change its charter (and that, without reference to the National Council) to make itself legal. "The charter," he added, "could be amended to remove itself completely from the National Council."

Reminding the Council that he is president of both bodies, Bishop Sherrill said, "What we're interested in is a better administration of the ACIN, and since we are not in a position to do anything today, I should like to see it recommended for study and consideration at the next meeting."

Dr. L. H. Foster, who had at great inconvenience accepted the committee's invitation to attend this meeting, was called upon to express his views. He finds much of the Church's slowness in Negro work due to the philosophy behind the ACIN administration. He finds a basic lack of understanding between the ACIN and the boards of the schools. He repeated as a sample of the bad philosophy some of the statements made by its officers: "We are dealing with a different race, an adolescent race. Each man has no concern for the fellow below. The problem is almost as big as after the Civil War (between the States). Educational needs vary in different states. The Southern dioceses don't think of this work as important. They dont' want the Negro educated. The Negro is an optimist."

The Rev. Dr. Niles Carpenter, sociologist, was called on for his testimony. He observed that when one body delegates a job to a specialized body, there is a risk. The National Council, he thinks, is much better prepared and equipped to take over this work. "The World," he said, is moving awfully fast, especially in race relations. No longer are they our own private concern. What we do in our relations with the Negro, is a contribution to our Church and to our Nation."

1949 Budget

Lesser excitement was provided by the adoption of the 1949 budget at a figure of $3,650,000. The maximum authorized by the 1946 General Convention was $3,910,000, another increase of $350,000. Instead there will be only a 3% increase of $90,000 over the actual budget for 1948. "There is a real question," reported Dr. Franklin, "as to the advisability of making a large increase in the budget and the quotas. From those dioceses which are still paying far less than their quotas, an increase in quotas would be discouraging rather than helpful. Some of the dioceses now paying 100% are doing so only with real difficulty, and we have already been advised by one or two of the larger dioceses in this class that any material increase in quotas for 1949 would be a real discouragement to their people. From those now paying far in excess of their quotas no further large advance would be produced by larger quotas. The real gain to be expected from an increase in the total would be from those smaller dioceses which always pay what is asked of them, and that increase would not be large."

Bishop Haines objected to dioceses making up their minds on quotas before the Every Member Canvass. Bishop Sherrill said that "our real problem is the Second Province. Almost all our debts occur in that Province." Bishop Peabody asked, "What are you going to do with dioceses whose record is not good? Adjusted quotas in Central New York got them up by steps." Bishop Mitchell replied, "We have tried adjusted quotas for years."

Bishop Nash reported that his diocesan treasurer is far from optimistic about handling a mathematical increase. And yet it is a very gruesome procedure to make cuts, especially for those on the field.

Bishop Carpenter, referring to the trends in giving, remarked that it isn't pleasant reading. (The trends in giving shows an increase of total contributions for all purposes from $24,314,647 in 1919 to $59,135,048 in 1946, an increase from $22.60 per capita to $36.68. The missionary giving is sorrier: $1,472,949 in 1919 to $3,028,983 in 1926, or $2,420,497 in 1947. The share of communicant dollar for General Missions reached a high of $.0756 in 1921, while today it is only $.0335.) "Give the people the big figure," said the Bishop of Alabama. "Shock them. Do what we are authorized by General Convention. There is definitely an increased enthusiasm among laymen. Get back to giving!"

"How are we going to be better equipped without a better budget?" asked Bishop Haines. "Forty per cent of the people do nothing on the red side," observed Bishop Whittemore. Dr. Magill sees nothing sacrosanct in the figure given by General Convention. The small dioceses are going to have to make up the deficits of the larger ones, he added.

Henceforth the treasurer, by resolution adopted, will be authorized to pay travel and moving expenses out of current contingent funds, reporting same to the Council. This replaces the time-consuming business of a resolution for each such item.

Dr. Franklin reported that the purchase of surplus war materials, without which the Council couldn't have rebuilt our hospitals, amounted to $1,650,000. Legally a further payment is due, but rebates are expected.

Thanks to Mr. Henry Budd, order has been brought out of chaos in the accounts in China of appropriations and expenditures for the Church's Mission there. A final reconciliation of balances due chiefly to the confusion incident to the rapid changes in the rate of foreign exchange will not be possible, but an adequate system of accounts is now established and monthy reports are received. A resolution of appreciation to Mr. Henry Budd was adopted on Bishop Mitchell's motion.

A gain of $246,020.09 in the market values of invested trust funds since December 31 was reported by the treasurer.

A Rare Treasurer

Bishop Bentley presented a resolution for the release of $100,000 from the R. & A. Fund for the use of Huachung University in its building program. Dr. Magill and Bishop Sherrill were opposed to risking so large a sum in that area of China lying in the shadow of Communism's advance. Dr. Francis C. M. Wei was reported to be skeptical, but felt it would be a tremendous help to him. Dr. Franklin rose to disagree with the Presiding Bishop and Dr. Magill. "We have been taking risks," he said, "ever since we went into China. This is a calculated risk instead of a wild risk. I am willing to risk dollars. We can risk dollars, bricks, and mortar." Which led Bishop McKinstry to remark, "We have just been treated to the extraordinary spectacle of a treasurer proposing risks." When Bishop Bentley's resolution passed, there was applause. (This sum had been designated specifically for this purpose in the R. & A. Fund.)

Bishop Bentley announced that there is to be a public presentation in thirty cities of the progress of missionary work in Columbus, Ohio, on June 1 and 2. The National Council expects to have two representative members attend the Columbus presentation.

West Indies

Mr. Alexander Whiteside paid a two weeks' visit to the West Indies last winter, and made good use of the opportunity to take a look at our Church's work there. He returned with an enthusiastic approval of the work of Bishops Voegeli and Boynton and the Rev. J. Arthur Swinson. Bishop Voegeli has won the confidence and admiration of the native people, and only because of this the moneyed white people have gone so far as to apply the communist label to him. In Haiti he found that the majority of people won't go to any Church. A great many of them are voodoos; and in contrast to the practice of the Roman Catholic Church, Bishop Voegeli demands that converts give up all voodooism.

One of the resolutions adopted by the Council involved the withdrawal of $9,750 from the Stewart legacy to complete payment on the construction of the rectory now being built at San Pedro de Macoris, Dominican Republic. This follows previous appropriations for that rectory totaling $24,000. Bishop Voegeli is distressed and disturbed, as the Council was, but it was the only solution to the "extraordinary problems encountered." An accompanying resolution requests Canon Beer to make a report as to why the cost has doubled (originally $18,000). In connection with this, Mr. Whiteside said that the missionary houses could be sold today for much more than they cost.

Dr. Kuebler had also been to the West Indies and in an informal report confirmed Mr. Whiteside's good impression of our missionary work there.

Hankow

Bishop Gilman informed the Presiding Bishop that a certain property in Hankow belonging to the Church of England, maintained for fifty years by the American Church Mission, is likely to be sold to the Roman Catholic Church. Hopeful of the possibility that the Church of England will transfer this property to the District of Hankow of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, Bishop Gilman has requested Bishop Sherrill to take the matter up with the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Presiding Bishop doesn't want to make a request for the gift of it in a letter, and feels somewhat embarrassed about doing so when he is to be the guest of His Grace at Lambeth, but he will present the matter to him.

Bishop-elect T'sang

The Very Rev. Stephen H. S. T'sang, bishop-elect, was invited by the Presiding Bishop to address the Council. He spoke beautifully as "a child coming to his parents." He declared that the gate is open to the Church in every part of China. Students who before the war were anti-Christian now feel the need of Christ.

Youth

Bishop Carpenter's first booming voice about youth elicited so many smiles that he stopped to ask, "What is the matter?" Contributing to his pride and joy was the appointment of two Episcopalians to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches, the United Christian Youth Movement, Philip Zabriskie, a student at Princeton, and the Rev. William K. Crittenden as an adult adviser to the Youth section.

"To the Wolves"

Reporting for the College Division, Bishop Nash said that they had gone into the matter of publishing a scholarly religious journal for students and faculties in colleges, but feared that without its being interdenominational there might not be enough resources to keep it at a level that would win the respect of non-Church scholars and scientists. It would have to be better than the best in several fields. At present, no action, but the matter has been gone into.

They have "thrown the Canadians to the wolves" in that there are now enough Canadian Canterbury Clubs to have their own organization, which the College Division hopes will increase in number and remain in fellowship with those in this country. There is to be a college edition of "Forth" in the fall.

It was on the agenda, but when the report of the American Church Institute for Negroes was called for, there was much merriment, as though enough had been said on that subject under the report of the Committee of Reference. Bishop Bentley stated that building and equipment needs for schools have changed, and costs have increased since allocations were made.

Thursday

In a room on the top floor with six beds, your correspondent had but one roommate, whose night was pretty sleepless after tiptoeing in so as not to awaken me. I don't think I snored. It was in the morning that I learned the cause for his fitful slumber: the Diocese of Florida had elected him, Hamilton West, Bishop Coadjutor. Judging from his troubled reaction, I know this high office and ministry is something he never sought. Would that all dioceses could be as fortunate in their choice of bishops with this prime quality of not seeking the episcopate as a reward. The Presiding Bishop's congratulations started off Thursday's proceedings.

From the reading of the minutes of Wednesday's session, I learned that the executive session yesternoon was about the Episcopal Radio Hour.

$1,500 was appropriated for resource materials in the Department of Christian Education for the work on the curriculum. The Presiding Bishop's appointment of the Rev. Vesper O. Ward as editor of curriculum was confirmed by the Council.

By 1943 the National Council adopted a resolution providing the supplementing of the Rev. Artley B. Parson's pension upon his retirement. With his retirement on June 1 from active service, the Council will supplement his pension, appropriating $1,075 annually on such sum as to give him $2,475 a year.

The Council approved Bishop Roberts' request for the restoration of partial cost-of-living bonuses for China missionaries to the amount of $56,000 to be drawn from legacies designated for foreign missionaries. This is 25% of salary and children's allowances, and will be retroactive to January 1. Few of the Churches have as low salary schedules for their missionaries in China as ours.

The request of Christian Education for 2% of the 1948 Lenten Mite-box Offering for the promotion of the '49 offering had to be denied, because it presented difficulties. Credit for it is given to dioceses and parishes on their quotas. 2% would take it out of the budget. A plan has to be devised so that it will really go to the purpose for which it is raised. The matter of the Lenten Offering was referred for further study to the departments of Christian Education, Promotion, and Missions. Bishop Sherrill said, "The best way to call attention to anything in the National Council is to ask for an appropriation."

The Presiding Bishop finds that the problem of Seabury House's finances is always in his lap. $145,000 has been raised, of which $100,000 was for the property, and $50,000 spent for needed repairs and alterations of houses for staff members, leaving a deficit of $5,000. Fixing over the houses is almost as good as an endowment, because all tenants pay rent, and if enough dioceses could be interested in building ten houses as memorials, it would almost solve the endowment problem. The immediate objective is to find $75,000 to carry over to General Convention.

Evangelism

Bishop Sherrill has sent letters to all bishops on the subject of Evangelism, and their replies are almost all identical. The attempt to do anything was very spotty last winter, but the response was very worth while where anything was done. Bishop Gesner wrote of the wonderful response in the cathedral at Sioux Falls, S. D. "Nobody," said Bishop Sherrill, "wants to keep pushing programs on the clergy, but we don't want to lose what has been gained. We hope to build up a constituency within the Church which will go out with conviction and fire to bring others into the Church."

Bishop Carpenter said the program in Alabama had three objectives: 1. Return of the lapsed; 2. Bringing in the heathen; 3. Emphasis on family prayer.

Mr. Samuel S. Schmidt favored action rather than instruction, which latter, he thought, might lead to "Churchianity" instead of Christianity. Drs. Higgins and Kuebler disagreed with Mr. Schmidt, the latter proposing that next year the Church concentrate on schools of religion. Bishop Nash gave his definition of education: answering questions which no pupil has asked. The Presiding Bishop said, "We have roadblocks," meaning the bishops and other clergy who can stop evangelistic programs by ignoring them. The radio appeal on February 29 got past such clergy by talking directly to the people. The cash receipts on that amount to $1,012,836.60.

Bishop Bentley proposed tieing in the program with the 400th anniversary of the Prayer Book, and Dean Carman thought it ought to be with the findings of Lambeth. Dr. Franklin favored an emphasis on learning to pray, which is something definitely planned, announced Bishop Haines, by the Department of Christian Education.

Dr. Huess said that our educational principles should be aimed at the family. The Department has two plans for next year:

1. Materials for a school of Christian Marriage and the Christian Home for the Epiphany season, with a statement on each of four subjects and a method of discussion.
2. A Lenten series of five similar study programs on the Prayer Book.

Communications

Communications arrived late, and included one of appreciation from Puerto Rico for the appointment of new missionaries, for the visits of N. C. members, which they hope will be a regular program, and for the increase in the salaries of missionaries. One came from Chicago expressing appreciation for the R. & A. Fund grant of $50,000 for the new Saint Edmond's Church, now ready for consecration.

Mr. Lindley Franklin, Jr., reported on the guest house at White Plains, given in a wonderful way for a special purpose, as a place of rest and refreshment for clergy and paid Church workers, and no strings attached to the gift. Brugler House can be used as long as it serves the purpose, and its disposition is in the hands of the National Council.

A resolution of appreciation to Mr. Jordan for his work and vision in setting up the Presiding Bishop's radio appeal was the final action of this meeting.

Mother's Day

The early Christian Church frequently took pagan festivals and converted them to Christian purposes. The Church today might well do the same thing with Mother's Day. It is futile to ignore this popular festival, or to decry it because it is so often observed sentimentally and commercially. It has caught the fancy of America. It has, moreover, an innately fine basic ideal. The Churches might well make use of it. Indeed, this was the way the Church calendar grew in ancient times. Why should it not do so again today?

Then Mother's Day might develop into a time of concern for the Christian family and the life of our homes. There are trends in this direction already. The Federal Council annually calls for the keeping of this week as Christian Family Week. At this very time, a national conference on family life is being held in the White House with more than 120 national organizations sponsoring and participating in it.

Let Christian children and fathers consider whether they honor their mothers and wives more by gifts of flowers and candy, or by expressing a sincere willingness to strengthen the life of the home by bringing the creative Presence of Christ more fully into it. Make your mother a gift of Family Prayers this year! Offer her your concern that your home life may be more Christian. For under God, all good life has its roots in the family. Perhaps our failure to find secure world peace goes back to our failures in home and in family life! Let Christians not keep Mother's Day with sugary sentiment, but with high purpose to make our homes centers of Christian life.

"Doors Of Opportunity"

"In its missionary work, the Church has made no advance for years. An Advance Work Program is adopted by each General Convention. In each Triennium the Church gives barely enough money to carry on existing work. The Cross stands still. It is not being carried into new territory, winning new fields. There is no advance work except that provided for by specific gifts, legacies and the like."

Those words were written by the Rev. John W. Irwin in 1929 in a publication of the National Council. They might have been written today, for they are still tragically true. The Council has just issued a leaflet entitled "Doors of Opportunity." The title is misleading. It should be "Closed Doors of Opportunity." For the leaflet tells of the specific items which the Church had to take from its budget because parishes failed to meet their missionary quotas and dioceses their expectancies. Twenty-two dioceses filed pledges less than their quota! The total deficiency was over $300,000. Add to this emergency additions to the budget of more than $50,000, and keep in the background of your mind the fact that our Missionary Bishops asked for $254,835 above the budget to meet opportunities and needs in their fields! The Church actually could use $600,000 more in missionary funds this year than it will receive!

Turn next to the items which had to be cut out of the budget. The very first is a priest for St. Mark's Church, Nenana, Alaska! We called Bishop Bentley from Alaska to head our Overseas Department. He made the sacrifice of leaving a work he loved to head the challenge of the greater Church. Then we greet him with a cut of $1,523 for a priest for the very place in Alaska where he had lived!

We have just sent a new Missionary Bishop to Brazil, the Rt. Rev. Louis C. Melcher. Almost on the same ship on which he travelled went a letter saying that three workers would have to be cut from Brazil's appropriation!

Altogether, thirty missionaries abroad were cut out of the budget. Schools, hospitals and work at home were called to take decreased allotments at a time when every cost is going up. The leaflet truly says that in our domestic missionary work we "must merely mark time or go forward with halting steps when the real need is for courageous advance."

Finally, all the departments at "281" were cut, and the proposed Secretary for Evangelism which General Convention put into the budget was completely taken out. These are not light cuts, for they cripple our administrative leadership.

The hope of the brochure is that individuals and parishes will make gifts for these items, either designated for a particular one, or general. If you can give in this way, ask your rector to show you his copy of this leaflet, "Doors of Opportunity," or write directly to Lewis B. Franklin, Treasurer, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. But this is a haphazard and wrong way to balance our missionary budget. It may restore some of these items. It will not provide the large increase in giving we need if the Church is to meet the call of the world for Christ's saving gospel. Our missionary giving needs to be increased at least one million dollars per year over present giving.

That this is possible is seen in the response to the Reconstruction and Advance Fund, and to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. There ought to be an all-out campaign for missionary giving. We have the financial resources in our Church. We need to be called by the Church to give largely for missions. The present quota system apparently cannot be expanded to take care of our needs. Let us then frankly ask for a "Million for Missions." It will be given!

A Brief History Of The Protestant Episcopal Church In The United States Of America

By MR. GEORGE V. BLUE, Washington, D. C.

Part V.

When the form and development of an ecclesiastical body are under study, its spirit and character as well as its institutions require consideration. The first half-century of the independence of the Church (i. e., to about 1840, a period almost spanned by Bishop White's episcopate) possessed a basic unity, even a harmony, in spite of numerous discordant cross-currents, which may be questioned to have existed in any later like period. Political differences of the Revolutionary era which had continued in the persons of such men as Seabury and Provoost, faded with time but had been succeeded by the tensions of the old High and Low schools of thought. The one emphasized the indispensable institutional continuity of the Church through episcopal succession; the other its evangelical character; but both rested firmly on the Reformation settlement. If, on the one hand, Hobart stressed the "catholicity" of the Church, in the tradition of Laud, he was also like the Archbishop in remaining a Protestant High Churchman.

Both parties were slow to welcome the "higher criticism", whether directed at ecclesiastical institutional tradition or at the literal inerrancy of Scripture; in the case of the former, a conservative, even reactionary attitude (tending in its extreme form to exaggerate the concept of the episcopate) has been persistent in contrast to the generally accepted verdict against literal biblical infallibility.

In their extreme expression, "high church" views were not calculated to endear a Church of some thirty thousand souls (as computed in 1830) to other communions of Christian faith in the United States whose greater numbers and equal zeal were sufficient evidence in their eyes that they too were recipients of divine grace. It is a fact that must be taken into consideration in appraising the position of the Church during this period, that it was long regarded with some suspicion in many quarters of the Protestant community; that this view was largely due to misunderstanding can hardly be gainsaid, but the misunderstanding itself arose, at least in part, from an aloofness on the part of the Episcopal Churches generally which can not be denied to have existed but which was mistaken for something more serious than actually it was. In more recent years (as will appear) a broader recognition of Christian fellowship has been manifest.

It must also be recognized that a "high" view of order, regularity and responsibility gave a needed tone, a tonic quality of intense conviction to a small, struggling body aware of its singular position and sensible of its particularity; one which, all things considered, was inherently capable of better things than either sectarian snobbishness or spiritual sluggishness. Likewise, it would be wanton error to assume that the Low Churchmen held the Church any less dear than the Hobartians did; the former were also possessed of a vision of its mission. The fact that these early Churchmen were not compartmented by their churchmanship into any rigidity of mutually incompatible systems is attested by the experience of such men as Bishop Moore of Virginia, whose views on the order of the Church were as firm as those of Hobart himself, while he gave emphasis doctrinally to a Calvinistic line of thought; and by Hobart, who did not repel from the Communion Table professed Christians of other confessions of faith. Or again, by Bishop Whittingham of Maryland (consecrated in 1840), who combined many Anglo-catholic views with a distinct aversion for the outward ritualism usually associated with them.

The lines for graver cleavage on fundamentals were drawn by the Oxford Movement, the influence of which began to be noticeable in the Protestant Episcopal Church not long after its inception in the English Church, and particularly so circa 1840. All of the early leaders of the Church had passed from the scene except Bishop Griswold (died 1841). Their successors, both clerical and lay, faced new times in which the foundation devotedly laid over the course of half a century was to be tested by external political dissolution and by internal schism.

Expansion, Division and Unity

The fifty years after 1840 (again an arbitrary demarcation, but possessed of certain convenient attributes) saw a marked physical development of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In this period there was a ten-fold increase of communicants to five hundred thousand. Although the region between the sea and the Appalachians remained the Church's stronghold, its administrative jurisdictions had covered the continental United States and had gone beyond it.

The line of the Church's march was similar to that of the nation; indeed, in the foreign field its advent was earlier, for in the decade 1830-1840 the first missionaries were sent to China, Liberia and the Near East. A solid body of dioceses now occupied the country east of the Mississippi; Missouri (1840) and Louisiana (1841) were the first dioceses to attain full ecclesiastical stature among the missionary jurisdictions west of the River.

The transcontinental advance across the Plains was anticipated by the orderly occupation of the Pacific seaboard. In 1853 Bishop William I. Kip was sent to California (organized as a diocese in 1850) and Bishop Thomas F. Scott to Oregon in 1854 (diocese constituted in 1889). On a new northwestern frontier extending to the Rocky Mountains, Bishop Joseph C. Talbot succeeded Kemper in a missionary field of imperial dimensions when Kemper became Wisconsin's first bishop in 1859. In the same year, Minnesota and Kansas were admitted as dioceses, the last to be erected before the ecclesiastical division resulting from the Civil War between the States.

Barely a month before the fateful presidential election of 1860, Bishop Polk of Louisiana had laid the cornerstone of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee. The University is a lasting monument to the episcopate of the soldier-bishop (he was a graduate of West Point, and met his death as a general in the Confederate Army); under his leadership a fund of half a million dollars had been raised for the foundation.

It is not astonishing that in secular matters the views of churchmen were generally in accord with those which prevailed in their section. The dioceses in the eleven States which seceded, 1860-1861, quite naturally accepted the new national establishment and proceeded to form a new ecclesiastical body, autonomous, under the title "Protestant Episcopal Church in the Confederate States of America". This institutional separation should be looked upon as a physical scission, not as a spiritual schism. Questions of faith, order and discipline were not at issue, and with the collapse of the Confederacy in 1865, the Southern dioceses were received back into organic relation with the Northern and Western dioceses with a manifestation of charitable feeling on both sides which could have been a model for emulation by the political state.

A less happy outcome resulted from a religious tension that had been increasing in the Church; doctrinal differences had become acute regarding the sacrament of baptism and ceremonial practices intended to inculcate certain tenets of belief flowing from the Oxford Movement and from a derivative line of thought that had been gaining ground in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States.

In 1873, the Right Reverend Edward Cummins, assistant bishop of Kentucky, resigned his jurisdiction and organized a geographically widespread but numerically small section of "evangelical" clergy and laity into the "Reformed Episcopal Church". The historic episcopate was continued through consecrations by Bishop Cummins. After three-quarters of a century the regrettable division still persists, though the "Reformed" Church has failed to draw to it any continuing line of accessions from the older body. So far, however, it represents the one permanent secession in the history of the Protestant Episcopal Church, although individual and sometimes group defections, chiefly to the Roman communion, have accompanied its development in the century that has elapsed from 1840 to the present.

The Church absorbed the shock of the Ritualist Controversy by a willingness to test the principle of "comprehensiveness" (not to be confused with "toleration") persuasively defended by a High Church presbyter, Dr. DeKoven, in the General Convention of 1874. The same period saw the rise of the "Broad Church" movement, a major theological endeavor (comparable to a similar movement in the English Church) to bring into line the thought of the Church with the findings of objective science and Scriptural study (the "Higher Criticism"). The great leader of the movement in the United States was Phillips Brooks, bishop of Massachusetts (1891-1893). Viewed at first with misgiving by protagonists of the Oxford Movement and the older Low Churchmanship alike, the Broad Churchmen can hardly be said ever to have assumed the cohesion of a party group, but their influence both clerical and lay has been pervasive and continuous.

The Church had not ceased to extend its activities within and beyond the national boundaries. At home, by action of General Convention in 1871, a special missionary jurisdiction known later as the Niobrara Deanery was established for the Indians of the Northwest. A quarter of a century after the advent of Bishop William Hobart Hare in 1873 as shepherd of souls for this aboriginal flock, some ten thousand baptized persons were counted in a total Indian population of twenty-five thousand. Abroad, in the Caribbean, the somewhat curious history of the Church in Haiti, which became a missionary district in 1913, actually dates from 1861. In India, as elsewhere, American churchmen cooperated with Anglican bodies operating in the same field. In 1887, twenty-two years after the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church was founded in Japan, a Japanese Church was organized by union with similar British and Canadian missionary plantings. In China, the Church continued responsive to missionary opportunity by the establishment of schools, colleges and hospitals as a manifestation of Christian good works.

The widening scope of the Church's interests was also signalized by the participation of its bishops in the Lambeth Conferences (the first held in 1867) at the invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Although wholly devoid of legislative function, these assemblages of bishops from all the Churches of the Anglican communion have promoted a sentiment of corporate unity and have given expression to opinions which challenge the consideration of the Churches represented. The famous Lambeth Quadrilateral (1888), adumbrated two years earlier at General Convention in Chicago, set forth a four-point basis for organic unity among the Churches of Christendom: (1) The Holy Scriptures, as revealing God's word; (2) baptism and holy communion, as essential symbols of the Christian fellowship; (3) the Apostles' and the Nicene Creeds, as sufficient statements of the Christian faith; (4) the historic episcopate, as a common basis of church order. It may be deemed, perhaps, the most provocative (if fruitful) utterance of the Lambeth meetings.

The Muhlenberg Memorial, a plan for extending, with greater liturgical freedom, the Church's ministrations to certain sections of the population which hitherto had been hardly aware of its existence, was presented in 1853 by a distinguished presbyter, the Reverend W. A. Muhlenberg, to the House of Bishops for consideration. Although the Memorial led to no immediate action by way of experimentation, various details, in one or another form have come into practice in the Church.

The responsiveness of the Church, however, to the fact that its liturgy is vital and not static, and that a living faith will neither remain everlastingly becalmed nor veer with every wind that blows, was shown in the mild revision of the Book of Common Prayer accepted in 1892.*

Institutionally, a marked increase, following the Civil War between the States, in the number of new dioceses took place by the division of the existing state-wide dioceses; for example, in 1887, Quincy and Springfield were set off from Illinois, which in 1884 had changed its name to Chicago. The area in which missionary districts remained the prevailing type of ecclesiastical jurisdiction was the vast region running from the Canadian to the Mexican border between the Rocky Mountains and the tier of dioceses that fringed the west bank of the Mississippi River.

NUNC DIMITTIS

Companying with Simeon, the reminiscent mood finds encouragement. To linger in his song, to hear him say, "All people . . . Gentiles . . . Israel," brings to mind other good days in one's pilgrimage. To be a member of a congregation where evangelism was constantly stressed and practiced, either through a One-by-One Working Band, or through a corps of sparetime layworkers such as Church Army evolved, or by a live chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, or a Gleaners' Union—that indeed would be a privilege today, and the writer has been associated with five such parishes, and has known many others.

Where parish evangelism was not periodic or spasmodic, overseas missionary work became a normal feature of the life of the parish, the light shining far, because so bright at home.

It is scarcely necessary to say that Expository preaching was much in evidence in those parishes. The entrance of God's Word gave light. Occupied by one who placed his with-drawing room ahead of his drawing room, the pulpit presented deep spiritual messages, full of missionary conviction and passion, giving pre-eminence to the gospel of the Lord Jesus, and the mission of the Church. Then were the worshippers glad when they saw the Lord in the preacher; heard of His programme, and learned that "the field is the world"; and that the first century imperatives had not been cancelled, that it was still incumbent upon us to "Go and make disciples of all nations," and to "preach the gospel to every creature," and that we were ourselves to be, or to send, witnesses "unto the uttermost parts of the earth." We learned that evangelism was all one, whether in the parish or beyond parish borders.

If we were present at a service of preparation for Holy Communion (and we met once a month for that specific purpose), we would be reminded to underline the words, "for many"—"My blood which is shed for many." If the

THE EVANGELIZING CHURCH No. VI

By The Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson, Toronto

The latter verses of Acts 2 gives us the picture and the secret of the Early Church in which the Holy Spirit dwelt and through which the Holy Spirit was manifested in power. To such a church new members were at first "added", but soon the addition gave place to "multiplication"—What was this secret?

1. The membership was a converted membership. V. 47: "The Lord added to the Church those who were being saved." It was through Christ to the Church, not through the Church to Christ. So must it ever be. There may be seekers in the congregation, but The Church is only those who are first of all "Members of Christ". The local Church on earth as we know it may be and, indeed, must be, "a birthplace for souls and an armoury for saints," but the true Church is made up of those who, having been redeemed, have now entered by the Door, which is Christ, into the fellowship of His Church.

2. They were a worshipping company. Their eyes were Godwards; their hands reached out to the brotherhood and their hearts yearned for all mankind. Within the company there were the four notes of the true Church: a. doctrine; b. fellowship; c. breaking of bread; d. prayers.

(a) Doctrine. They had suddenly come to the place of conversion; they had accepted the new way of life, and they had become members of the Church and congregation. Now they had to be built up in the faith and practice of Christ's religion. They had to be instructed both in the teaching of Jesus and of the implications of the new life. We need more doctrinal teaching; our members must be taught far longer than the child and Sunday School period of life. The great truths of God, sin, redemption, the Holy Spirit, and eternity, are interesting and people want to know what they should believe. We need an instructed membership in the Church. (In not a few churches today short teaching courses are being given in the most definite way and are proving both profitable and popular. e. g. A Lenten series on The Holy Spirit, an Advent series on "The Last Things", a course on "How We Got Our Bible".)

(b) "The Fellowship." This has been the cause of success or failure of many churches. A cold, unfriendly congregation is too great a handicap for any minister, but a church that is only friendly may be no better than a lodge or a club, and the Church is more than that. A minister's remark at an alumni gathering had a lot of truth in it when he said, "There is too much good-fellowship here, but no fellowship". The fellowship of Christ's church gives us not only a brotherhood who cares for bodily needs and happiness, but also has a tender care for the souls and the things of the spirit. The soul of man is not only lonely for God but craves the fellowship in spiritual things of his brother man.

(c) "The Breaking of Bread". This is the sacrament of our redemption, and whether in a great cathedral or in the home of an aged shut-in member, it is the bond of unity. It reminds us of our forgiveness for past unfaithfulness, and gives us the spiritual food which makes us strong to face the battle of life. It ties us to our fellows at the same table, and it links us with the Church triumphant. It strengthens us to meet temptation and it speaks to us of the victory of those who overcame. Our breaking of bread is here on earth, but our hearts are thereby lifted to Heaven where He is who is the "Bread of Life".

(c) "The Prayers". We miss a point if we do not see in this the reaching out of the hearts of the faithful few for those who did not yet know the Lord Jesus as Saviour. Their words might be weak but their prayers were powerful. Our attack may be weak on the non-Christian world which surrounds us, but only if our prayer life is weak. It was from the mighty prayers of the few that power came on Peter, the mouthpiece, and 3,000 were saved in the streets of Jerusalem. The Church must learn to pray and expect results and God will not fail to give His Church a mighty harvest of souls.

A MISSION TO THE JEWS

A few weeks ago I was invited to speak at the New York Gospel Mission to the Jews on lower Avenue B, near Tenth Street. There in the heart of the East Side I found a lighthouse founded many years ago by the Reverend Bernhard Angel, and now continued by his two daughters, Ruth and Esther.

That these ladies are "angels" in fact as well as in name, hundreds of those who have received assistance from their hands will testify. Their "mission" is a model of attractiveness and evangelistic zeal. The ground floor is devoted to a chapel, while the upper floors contain conference and recreation rooms, a dining room, and superintendent's quarters. For many years the New York Bible Society has furnished this mission with Scriptures in the languages required for its work.

Many interesting stories could be told of this place. There is one that gathers about the Bible window, a window which witnesses both by day and night to all who pass. It was this window which first attracted a Roumanian Jewish taxi driver to the Gospel. Though he could not stop to read the opened Scriptures (as he had a fare), he is grateful that the message of God's love was written on a glass sign in letters large enough that "he may run that readeth it."

Returning to the mission he proved a diligent student, as it was explained to him from Scripture that the Lord Jesus is the Messiah "of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write." Subsequently the taxi driver developed into a zealous convert, testifying not only at the mission but in his cab.

Now he receives Bibles from us to help him win other taxi drivers for Christ.—From The Bible In New York.

THE COMFORTABLE WORDS.—In the third sentence the discrepancy between the wording that we have here and the King James Version is quite evident, but it leaves the meaning practically identical. Our familiar translation, the King James, reads as follows, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners"; then St. Paul, remembering his persecution of the church, adds, "of whom I am chief."

It seems a strange thing that St. Paul should have counted himself one of the greatest of the Apostles, and also a chief sinner; but this is a part of the mighty message of Christianity, that a chief sinner can become a great Apostle.

The whole Communion service reminds us too of this tremendous fact, and its chief purpose is to bring home to us this great fact that "through our manifold sins we are not worthy to offer any sacrifice," yet through His all embracive love we can come in Him in perfect trust and confidence.

The real purpose of this sacramental service is to bring this thought to our minds, not only by hearing "comfortable words" but through partaking of bread and wine that makes the remembrance of the Saviour's supreme sacrifice all the more poignant and vivid.

This sentence is for the special comfort of those who feel themselves unworthy through any sin of commission or omission to be present at the Lord's table.

It was written by Paul in that letter to his friend and son in the gospel with whom he was the most intimate of all his acquaintances.

Interim Report

OF THE RT. REV. J. I. BLAIR LARNED, D. D.,

Bishop in Charge of the American Episcopal Churches in Europe

Geneva, Switzerland.—Since the resignation last fall of the Rev. Mr. Rowland from the rectorship of Emmanuel Church, Geneva, I have had to assume the active leadership of the parish. In addition to these duties, I try to be present in my office at the World Council as much as possible, and to attend the many conferences of the representatives of the various churches, held here and elsewhere. These conferences have multiplied greatly for me since my appointment to the Scholarship Committee and to the Chairmanship of the Refugee and Displaced Persons Commission—all in addition to the meetings of the Board of Governors of the Ecumenical Training Center, of which I am a member. As a result of these constant and so important calls it had been difficult to arrange visits to other parts of Europe. The comparatively recent completion of trips to France and Italy, and post-Easter reports from our own churches, at last permits me to give an interim report of progress in our work at Paris, Nice, Florence, and Geneva.

In spite of the continued strain which is entailed through the uncertainties of the political situation in Europe, and despite serious handicaps due to physical limitations of plant and church facilities, Saint James' Church, Florence, under the Rev. Sturgis L. Riddle and Saint Paul's Church, Rome, under the Rev. Hillis L. Duggins, have, during these past months, been rendering invaluable services to their constituencies and communities. As Mrs. Larned and I look back upon the visits we have recently made to these cities, we are more and more humble as we recall the spirit of courage and sacrifice we have witnessed. Providentially, this has not been a severe winter over here, and yet coal is scarce and very costly, and heating plants are worn out or completely broken down. But apparently one can still worship in heavy coats and even blankets, and likewise one gets used to the lack of hot water—for our clergy and people have been doing just that in both Italy and France. In fact, in Rome, it was necessary to transfer Sunday worship from the Church to the guild room of the rectory.

Then there has been the constant worry due to political uncertainty, accentuated greatly since the denouement of Czechoslovakia. Indeed it is fair to say that few of us in Europe are inclined to make far-reaching plans until after the elections in Italy on April 18 and 19. In the meantime it takes patience and courage to carry on in the face of the merciless bitter, anti-American propaganda. Some posters show the United States as a fearsome octopus, stretching out its ugly tentacles to embrace countries all over Europe. Others seek to caricature the proverbial picture of "Uncle Sam" by inserting a cruel face and placing under the picture some caption such as: "This is the warmonger coming to kill your children." Constant and irritant effort is put forth to controvert the fine efforts of our Ambassador Dunn and his staff to publicize the amount and nature of our gifts for relief by their words and presence upon the arrival of our gift-laden ships—the four hundredth of which arrived in early March. Posters tell the story. But hardly are they displayed before the captions on them are blotted out by other printed words, which suggest that the cargoes they bring carry not love, but hate, not peace gifts but war supplies.

Florence

It is difficult to envision Florence with a Communist Mayor. But such is the case. We first met him in his office in the Medici Palace. Later we listened to him and to our own Consul as they joined at an outdoor service on February 22, at which a statue of George Washington, damaged during the war, but finally restored, was re-dedicated. That morning he also graciously attended a tea given at Saint James' Rectory, following our morning service. Yet our Church is drawing increasing numbers of English speaking people. I confirmed a class that day, talked on the needs of Europe, and received an offering of nearly $125 for our Presiding Bishop's Fund. On every hand there was voiced deep gratitude for the re-opening of Saint James' Church, and admiration expressed for the truly devoted, able, and sacrificial leadership of the Rev. Mr. Riddle and his wife, and we are happy to record that in that group of affectionate co-workers are included the Consul and Vice-Consul, both of whom are now included on our vestry.

Rome

In Rome the same spirit prevails. It's almost like a fairy story the way the Rev. and Mrs. Hillis L. Duggins have led Saint Paul's during these difficult days. Our beautiful church has at last revealed the results, not so much of the ravages of war as of the silent attack of time. Leaks in the roof developed to a point where suddenly the safety of our incomparable mosaics by Sir Edward Burne-Jones was threatened. Major repairs were at once initiated. Before they were over some $5,000 had to be spent on a new roof over the chancel and new copper gutters all around the large edifice of church and rectory. The need for further vital repairs is indicated in many places, not the least of which has been the bursting of the boiler. A campaign for gifts is now under way among our many friends in Rome and at home. Probably another $5,000 will be needed. We must remember that Saint Paul's Church has been declared a National Monument by the Italian Government. Its restoration and preservation must be carried out!

Despite other discouragements great progress is recorded here. A Church School of some fifty children is now operating with a most competent group of teachers—among the wives of the local Baptist and Methodist clergymen. During our visit a tea was given to which nearly three hundred people came. Representatives of all local Protestant Churches were there, eager to express their happiness at association with Saint Paul's Church. Ambassador Dunn, with many of his staff, was also present, and we are gratified that so many of our representatives in Rome are now taking an active interest in our work. Nearly one hundred dollars was given by Saint Paul's and its Woman's Guild for the Presiding Bishop's Fund.

Paris

In two visits to Paris, I have seen at first hand the progress of our work at Holy Trinity Cathedral, under the leadership of Dean O'Ferrall. I have had two confirmation services and an ordination here, and a third class is to be presented on April 25. A Men's Club has been organized, and the senior and junior guilds for women have continued their most effective charity work for projects in Paris and France. On February 29, the Presiding Bishop's appeal was placed before our people, and again the offering was nearly $100.

We are particularly happy over the re-opening of our student center. One result of this resumption of our activities there has been that we have offered a considerable part of our facilities for the accommodation of a day school for nearly 200 children. Most of these are from American families, connected with our Embassy. We shall probably continue this arrangement for the coming fall and winter. As yet there are not as many students in Paris as in the years before the war. Even so, the swimming pool is in constant use. Lectures, musicals, moving pictures, are constantly presented and are well attended. Social privileges are afforded by frequent dances and teas. All of this student work has been under the guidance of the Rev. Joseph O'Rillion, whom I have recently ordained as a deacon in our church. He was formerly a Presbyterian minister, a Chaplain in the late war, ending his final services with the rank of Major.

Nice

I have not yet visited Nice, but recent word has reached me that our Church there was packed on Easter Day after a very fine Lent; also that the rector expected to have a nice class to present to me in September. This will be the third class which the Rev. Henry Sartorio, the rector, has presented from this parish in two and one-half years, the total number of candidates being over twice the total from this church (Church of the Holy Spirit) in the past fifteen years.

Geneva

And lastly—Emmanuel Church, Geneva. We are most gratified that a real advance has been recorded here. First of all, we have been able to work out a joint arrangement with the Cultural Relations Division of our Department of State, whereby much of their progress is now carried on through our parish facilities. To handle it, an American Community Committee was organized. Its progress now includes lectures, discussion groups, musicals, moving pictures, etc. Magazines, books, news clippings, reach us daily from the U. S. Headquarters at Berne. Students, children, adults, all share in the various activities. Our library has, as a result, greatly increased its regular subscribers until now nearly 150 avail themselves of this increasing privilege. Our parish house is becoming the real center for English speaking people.

The services at Emmanuel Church have been increasingly well attended, and especially during the full program of Holy Week and Easter. An innovation was started sometime ago whereby, after morning worship, the congregation adjoins to the parish hall for a cup of coffee. This custom has proven of great happiness to our many visitors to Geneva, who find in this way, and this way only, the opportunity to meet fellow Americans and others from all over the world. At our worship services, we are grateful that we have had the privilege of hearing from our pulpit many great Christian leaders. And in the congregation, one finds representatives of almost every Protestant denomination. They worship with us, join in our activities, and generously support our program of Christian service.

Here, too, many major repairs had to be undertaken. Serious leaks in the roofs developed, which had caused considerable interior damage. We have completed these repairs, repainted and re-decorated the interior of the church, installed a new pulpit, choir stalls and Altar lighting, and added many needed improvements to the sanctuary. New church signs outside, one illuminated, tell the story of Church and Community House activity to the passers-by, and in this truly international center, there are many such.

Conferences are constantly held in Geneva, with hundreds, yea thousands of delegates. Here are the offices of the World Y. W. C. A., and Y. M. C. A., of the I. R. O., and of the International Labor Organization. Emmanuel Church truly faces a unique opportunity in these so critical yet opportune days. To her and to our other Churches in Europe, may God give abundantly of His wisdom and guidance. May we all be increasingly conscious of our great responsibilities!

Faithfully yours,

J. I. BLAIR LARNED.

THE VERY REV. F. E. BLOY CONSECRATED

Los Angeles, Cal.—At 10 A. M., the morning of April 21, the Very Rev. F. Eric Bloy, for eleven years Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, was consecrated the third Bishop of the Doicese of Los Angeles. Services began with a celebration of the Holy Communion in St. Columba's Chapel at 9 A. M., the Rev. Harold Robinson, of San Diego, and the Rev. Robert Bonhall, acting as celebrant and assistant, respectively.

Due to the fact that the Cathedral seats but 1,300 to 1,400, it was necessary to issue tickets to officers, lay leaders, Diocesan officials, civic and religious dignitaries and heads of educational institutions. Promptly at 10 A. M., the entire assemblage joined in singing the processional, "The Church's One Foundation Is Jesus Christ Her Lord," and with this the colorful ceremonies commenced. Led by the Cathedral Crucifer and Boy's Choir; followed by the Masters of Ceremony, the Rev. J. Herbert Smith, the Rev. H. Vernon Harris and the Rev. George Lyon Pratt, and in order the Chancellor of the Diocese, Mr. Merton Albee; the Assistant Treasurer, Mr. George Gibbs, Jr.; the Lay members of the Cathedral Chapter, the Standing Committee, and Executive Council; Civic and Religious Dignitaries; Lay Readers, Postulants and Candidates, and then members of Religious Orders. Then came the Priests, led by the Rev. Frederic Dittmar of Los Angeles, as Crucifer in procession, with Representatives of Educational Institutions, visiting Clergy, the Rural Deans of the Six Convocations, and the Clerical Readers of Testimonials, the Rev. John Bryant, the Rev. Perry G. M. Austin, D. D., the Rev. John F. Scott, D. D., followed by the Deputy Registrar, the Rev. George West Barrett. After this the third portion of the procession led by the Bishop's Crucifer, the Rev. Alexander K. Campbell, came the Rt. Rev. Karl Morgan Block, D. D., LL.D., Bishop of California, Litanist; the Attending Presbyters, the Rev. Gilbert Prince of Ventura, and the Rev. T. Raymond Jones, of South Pasedena; the Bishop-Elect, the Presenting Bishops, the Rt. Rev. Stephen Cutter Clark, D. D., Bishop of Utah, and the Rt. Rev. William Fisher Lewis, STD, Bishop of Nevada; the visiting Bishops, including the Rt. Rev. Charles Avery Mason, STD, D. D., Bishop of Dallas; the Rt. Rev. Frank Archibald Rhea, D. D., STD, Bishop of Idaho; (Epistoler); the Rt. Rev. Simeon Arthur Huston, D. D., LL.D., Retired Bishop of Olympia (Gospler); the Rt. Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, STD, Retired Bishop of Utah, (for the Veni Creator Spiritus); and the Rt. Rev. Arthur Kinsolving II, Bishop of Arizona; the Rt. Rev. George Davenport, retired Bishop of Easton; the Rt. Rev. C. S. Reifsnider, retired Bishop of Kyoto, Japan; the Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, retired Bishop of Arizona; the Rt. Rev. Lane Barton, Bishop of Eastern Oregon. Near the end of the procession came the Co-Consecrators, the Rt. Rev. Robert B. Gooden, D. D., retired Suffragan Bishop of Los Angeles and Acting Bishop; and the Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D. D., LL.D., retired Bishop of California. Immediately preceding the Consecrator was the Chaplain of the Consecrator, the Very Rev. Douglas Stuart, Dean of the Los Angeles Convocation, followed by the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D. D., STD., retired Bishop of Virginia and former Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, who was Consecrator. After the Service of Consecration, a luncheon was held at the California Club, honoring Bishop and Mrs. Bloy, and attended by civic, lay and Diocesan officials, the Bishops and their wives.

Bishop Bloy's official work began immediately, for, on April 22, 1948, at 8 P. M., he confirmed his first class at the Church of the Advent, Los Angeles, presented by the Rev. George Lyon Pratt, Vicar.

LAUNCHING CAMPAIGN FOR EDUCATION FUND

St. Louis, Mo.—A campaign for a $50,000 Theological Education Fund has been launched in the Diocese of Missouri. The purpose of the drive is to contribute to the needs of the Virginia Theological Seminary and the Theological Seminary of the University of the South, and to have funds available to assist Bexley Hall and other institutions as the need arises. The fund will also assist candidates for the ministry from the Diocese of Missouri.

In launching the campaign before a dinner of vestrymen from the parishes of metropolitan St. Louis, Bishop Scarlett stated that he hoped it would awaken a sense of responsibility in many families as to the needs of the ministry for the best possible young men.

Dr. Alexander Guerry, vice-chancellor of the University of the South, was speaker at the opening dinner. He told the vestrymen that the Church would only get mediocre men from mediocre seminaries, but that even the best possible seminary could not but produce mediocre clergymen if it were not sent first-rate material. Dr. Guerry compared the need of the Church for better-equipped seminaries and more clergymen to the need of a country for adequate leadership. He stated the responsibility for meeting these needs rested upon the members of the Church today, and that they would be accountable for any failure in the future.

Ethan A. H. Shepley, prominent St. Louis attorney, deputy to General Convention and trustee of the Church Pension Fund, has been named general chairman of the campaign for the fund.

REV. RUSSELL HUBBARD ACCEPTS

Detroit, Mich.—The Rev. Russell Sturgis Hubbard, rector of St. Saviour's Church, Bar Harbor, Maine, who was elected Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan on the second ballot at a Special Convention held on April 8, in Detroit, has announced his acceptance of the election as of April 21. He will come to the Diocese about the middle of September. Tentative plans for a service of consecration place the probable date as August or September.

The Standing Committee of the diocese has already sent testimonials of the election, and requests for consent thereto to the Standing Committees of the various dioceses.

In addition to being rector of the Bar Harbor parish, Mr. Hubbard was Canon Missioner of the Cathedral at Portland, as well as being in charge of the Missions in the eastern part of the Diocese of Maine. He undertook his present charge in 1942. Mr. Hubbard is 45 years of age, and following his graduation at Harvard University and from the Virginia Theological Seminary he studied at Trinity College, Cambridge, England. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1928, in which year he became assistant at St. John's Church, Waterbury, Conn., where he served for two years. He left there for missionary service in the Missionary District of South Dakota, returning in 1932 to become rector of St. Martin's Church, Providence, R. I., which became under his leadership one of the large and flourishing parishes of that city.

In addition to his parochial duties, Mr. Hubbard was active in the work of the Diocese of Rhode Island, rendering notable service in educational and missionary fields. He has the reputation of being an excellent preacher, and is well versed in the theological and ecclesiastical foundations, structure, and life of the Church.

During his service in Maine he has visited missions and counselled missionaries over a considerable area in addition to administering his parish, which has one of the largest summer congregations in New England. He is also a member of the Diocesan Council of his diocese, and an examining chaplain.

Mr. Hubbard is married and has five children.

NUMEROUS APPROPRIATIONS MADE

At National Executive Board of Woman's Auxiliary Meeting

New York, N. Y.—With the current triennium, October, 1946-October, 1949, half gone, the attention of the Woman's Auxiliary National Executive Board at its meeting in Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., April 23-26, was divided between action for the present and immediate future, and for the next Triennial Meeting in San Francisco, September, 1949. Planning a meeting to be of the greatest use to the greatest number of women, the board finds the time none too long for shaping a detailed program. According to the by-laws, the presiding officer for the Triennial will be elected by the board at its next meeting in October. Meanwhile among the numerous appropriations made at this session one was for the purchase of property for the Japanese Church's Theological seminary. The board was holding $49,000 designated by the 1946 Triennial for use in Japan when the most urgent needs were determined; $40,000 is voted for the Seminary, $9,000 for St. Margaret's School for Girls, Tokyo.

Other projects or equipment for which money was voted include renovating a building in which the boys of Patterson School, Legerwood, N. C., are taught work in wood and metal, plumbing, and electrical work. This agricultural school has already paid $8,500 for improvements during the year, with money made from farm profits.

Other appropriations: A microscope for the technician at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai; portable sewing machine for St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo; organ for chapel at St. Hilda's School, Wuchang, China; refrigerators and stoves for several missionaries in China; help toward providing a bathroom for a rather primitive missionary residence in South Dakota; mimeograph for use in the Navajo Indian campaign against illiteracy, Fort Defiance, Ariz.; also fifteen or more scholarships for girls in training for church work. From the Emery Fund, which is for missionaries on furlough, a sum was voted to aid in providing holidays and summer conference attendance; a group is selected each summer from those on furlough at the time.

At the last board meeting a gift was made to Canterbury College, Danville, Ind., toward buying a church building for use as a college chapel. As this purchase proved to be impossible, the action was rescinded and the amount appropriated for a residence for the Chinese principal of St. Faith's School, Yangchow, and for part of the building program of the Christian College at Madras, India. Miss Eleanor Rivett, retiring principal, spoke to the board about this institution which is supported by a number of mission boards.

The board uses its eight provincial representatives as a two-way channel for information to and from parishes and dioceses. A new method was used at this meeting. Instead of seven brief and condensed statements, the board heard only two reports, for the Third Province (Mrs. William R. Taliaferro, of Pittsburgh, Pa.) and Fifth (Mrs. H. W. Whinfield, of Sheboygan, Wis.). This allowed time for really practical and detailed information as to methods, achievements, needs, etc. Two other provincial representatives will report next time.

From the National Council, the secretary for College Work, the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, and the assistant secretary in the Christian Social Relations Department, the Rev. Arnold Purdie, discussed their respective fields.

BRAZIL

50th Council—Bishop Melcher Met With Enthusiastic Reception

New York, N. Y.—The 50th Council of the Church in Brazil met for five days this month at Pelotas. Bishop William M. M. Thomas wrote the Overseas Department of the National Council that Bishop Louis C. Melcher, newly-consecrated coadjutor of Southern Brazil, was present and that "his presence was an inspiration to everyone. He brought to the Council new ideas drawn from a rich and varied experience. He took part in the discussion of many subjects, contributing valuable suggestions at each session. He proposed an every member canvass to begin May 23 and to end on June 6, and presented a preliminary program for this campaign.

Bishop Melcher, whether at Council, at receptions or in the girls' school, has met with a most cordial and enthusiastic reception. His cordiality and approach have quickly won for him a place in the hearts of both clergy and people."

During the Council six deacons were ordained to the priesthood, three of them ordained by Bishop Thomas, three by Suffragan Bishop Pithan.

Council adopted the program submitted by the Missionary Society, and all congregations represented by clergy or lay delegates, accepted their quotas.

REV. G. R. MADSON'S CONDITION REMAINS CRITICAL

Moultrie, Ga.—The condition of the Rev. G. Ralph Madson, rector of St. Paul's Church, Albany, Ga., who was injured in a collision with a truck about a week ago, continues desperate. The fact that he is still living gives his physicians some hope for his recovery. He is conscious at intervals for short periods.

Bishop Barnwell conducted services for him at St. Paul's on Sunday. Temporarily, the Rev. Charles E. Crusoe, D. D., is taking Mr. Madson's services for him.

LOUISIANA TO OPEN FIRST PERMANENT CAMP

Baton Rouge, La.—During this summer the Diocese of Louisiana will open its first permanent camping site. This will be the first camping season to be held in the diocese. In previous years the camps have been operated outside the diocese on the Mississippi Gulf Coast and at All Saints' College, Vicksburg.

The permanent site is located north of Alexandria in the piney woods section on 80 acres of land, which were given by the Urania Lumber Company of which Mr. Q. T. Hardtner is the president. The camps have been named after Mr. Hardtner. When completed this summer the permanent camp will represent a total investment of about $80,000 and will be able to take care of 200 campers and staff.

The Youth Convention of the Diocese will be held there on June 11-13, to be followed by the Senior Camp, Camp Morris, June 13-27, which is to be directed by the Rev. A. Stratton Lawrence, Jr., and the official season will close with the Junior Camp, Camp Jackson, June 27-July 7, which is to be directed by the Rev. John Lee Womack.

Later in the summer several parishes will come together to operate an acolytes' camp. A work camp of older young people will put finishing touches on the camp, and in the late summer the annual clergy conference and laymen's conference will be held there.

ST. PAUL'S HAS GIFT OF CHIMES

Jesup, Ga.—The Rev. Irwin Hulbert, Jr., of St. Paul's Church, reports that St. Paul's has been made a gift of electrical chimes by a citizen of Jesup, who is not a member of St. Paul's. The donor is Mr. Robert Pascal, head of the Sea Island Manufacturing Company of Jesup. The chimes are Deagan Chimes and have 21 pipes with 5 volume controls, are amplified from the bell tower and can be heard all over Jesup.

message centered in such words as those in John 10:16, then the Master's MUST was to become our OUGHT—the love of Christ constraining us. When 17:20 was opened up, praying hearts yearned for that further service included there by the Lord.

All cannot go, all cannot give, but all can pray, and the parish weekly meeting for prayer, though probably led by one kneeling at the Litany desk, yet eager-hearted men and women present, offered audible intercessions; nothing was stiff or stilted, for were we not members of the parish family, interceding with the Father of us all.

Looking back, those seemed to have been days of heaven upon earth, days when, because we took root downwards, we bore fruit upwards, and we knew of no dearth of candidates for the ministry at home or overseas.

Such parishes are not built in a day, nor by short-term ministries. Congregations of this calibre are the result of that broad scriptural and Prayer Book teaching which, under the Holy Spirit, convicts, converts, consecrates and commissions.

A neighbor of ours of those days wrote the hymn: "For My sake and the gospel's go, and tell Redemption's story"; His Heralds answer, "Be it so, and Thine, Lord, all the glory." They preach His birth, His life, His Cross, the love of His atonement; for whom they count the world but loss, His Easter His enthronement.

Did we wander away from the second of Luke in thus recalling other days? Have we not all this time been in the atmosphere and thought of verses thirty-one and thirty-two? I think so.

ORDINATIONS

Deacon

Richard A. Kirchhoffer, Jr., was ordained to the diaconate on April 27 in a ceremony held in the Chapel of the Virginia Theological Seminary, by his father the Rt. Rev. Richard A. Kirchhoffer, S. T. D., D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Indianapolis.

The younger Kirchhoffer was presented for ordination by the Rev. Robert Trenbath, rector of Trinity Church, Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., where he has served as student assistant for the past year. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Tennessee, the Rt. Rev. Edmund P. Dandridge, in whose diocese the newly ordained deacon will begin his work in September.

The Virginia Seminary senior is a graduate of the University Military School, Mobile, Alabama, and the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., class of 1940. During the war years he served as a line officer in the U. S. Navy from 1942 through 1945, seeing action in the South Pacific aboard the USS Honolulu.

Participating in the service at the Seminary Chapel were classmates, friends, students and clergy from Alexandria and Washington, D. C. The choir was formed by fellow students, and over 200 people were in attendance including the ordained's mother and wife.

Edmund Harcourt Waller, Jr., of Augusta, Ga., was ordered to the diaconate on April 13, 1948, in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Augusta, by the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell, D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Georgia. Mr. Waller was presented by his rector, the Rev. Allen B. Clarkson. The sermon was preached by Mr. Waller's uncle, the Rt. Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, bishop of Alabama. Mr. Waller, who was graduated this spring from the Virginia Theological Seminary, plans to do post graduate work at a Seminary in New York City.

Military and Moral Defense

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The Federal Council of Churches has issued a statement on the present international situation. The statement warns against the growing war hysteria in this country and reminds our people that though "in present conditions of international anarchy—military strength is necessary—the main defenses of what we treasure must be found in non-military measures which will change the conditions favoring the spread of despotism."

This is a welcome and salutary reminder and warning. The rise of war hysteria in this country immediately preceding the Italian elections was a nice illustration of the futility of meeting political peril by military threat.

The Italian elections were free. The fact that there was a chance of a Communist victory in those elections proves that the economic and political conditions in the western world are such that the poor, even on our side of the iron curtain, are drawn to Communism.

The fact that we are ready to increase and to use our military strength is quite irrelevant to this situation. Our military strength is relevant only insofar as the Communist push into Europe and Asia is a military one or may become a military one.

But since Russia lacks the military power to venture a war and since it does have a tremendous political and ideological force in the Communist parties of the western world, it is not likely that it will threaten us in military terms. A military venture by Russia is the more unlikely because it still has the chance of winning Europe by purely political and ideological means.

In this situation it is our business to strengthen the moral content of the cause of democracy and to help western Europe to regain its economic health. We made a brave new beginning in this type of strategy in the European Recovery Program. But, unfortunately, we destroyed some of the moral power of that program by becoming subject to a bad case of "jitters" and by indulging in purely military countermoves to Russian and Communist penetration.

We cannot afford to relax our military defenses in such a time as this. While universal military training seems quite irrelevant at this time, the reinstitution of a modified selective service act may be necessary.

But military defenses are negative. Preoccupation with them may easily beguile our nation from its paramount duty which is to give the whole system of life and government in the western world sufficient moral and economic health so that it will appeal to the poor, and not merely to the privileged.

Frequently the people who understand this task least talk most about military measures. Sometimes they do so because they do not really want to face our moral tasks. If we are to succeed in our more creative tasks it will be necessary not merely to stem the tide of war hysteria but also the increasing tendency toward national self-righteousness.

We are not an ideal nation for the position of hegemony which we now hold in the western world. Our ideas of democracy are too libertarian to be fully relevant to the needs of the people of Europe and Asia. More modesty, as well as a greater degree of serenity, will be of greater service to our cause than military bluster.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

A Positive Program for Peace

Statement Approved by the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in special session April 26, 1948

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, through its Executive Committee meeting in special session, addresses itself to the present international crisis. Powerful forces have pushed mankind to the brink of an awful abyss. The first and urgent task is to check those forces. Therefore, we do not deal here with the long-range task of building peace, but with a short-range task of averting war without yielding sound democratic principles. We call upon our people immediately to change the present prevailing mood which makes for war. This will not remove the basic causes of the present tension, but it will provide an increased margin of safety.

I. Our people should not tolerate any complacency about war. War would engulf all in misery and would bring other consequences quite the opposite of our intentions.

II. Our people should combat a mood of hysteria or blind hatred.

III. Our people should reject fatalism about war. War is not inevitable. If it should come, it would be because of conditions that men could have changed.

IV. Our people should not rely primarily on military strategy to meet Communist aggression. Such reliance is more apt to bring war than prevent it. There should be greater concentration on positive programs of an economic, social, political and moral character.

V. Our people should press for positive programs which have immediate possibilities for peace and justice. They could, for example, quickly move toward:

a. Greater economic well-being throughout the world.

b. Greater emphasis on increasing social welfare.

c. Greater observance of human rights, to check terrorism.

d. Greater use of processes of international conversation and negotiation.

VI. Our people ought, each one of them, to contribute to a change of mood so as to increase the chance of averting war without compromise of basic convictions.

VII. Our churches ought to testify with renewed vigor to God's righteous love for all men and the reality of the Christian world fellowship.

I.

Our people should not tolerate any complacency about war. War would engulf all in misery and would bring other consequences quite the opposite of our intentions.

Some have come to look upon "a preventive war" as an acceptable means of settling the present international conflict. Such a state of mind we unqualifiedly condemn.

The last war ended with the dropping of two bombs which alone killed over 100,000 persons and shattered the lives of many more. New war would plunge the world into utter misery. Whatever the military result, there would be an intensification of the misery which makes men willing to exchange freedom for dictatorship. Circumstances may at times make forcible resistance a lesser evil than surrender, but no man should be deluded into thinking that new war will achieve the ends for which he would profess to be fighting.

II.

Our people should combat a mood of hysteria or blind hatred.

There is always danger that in the face of alarming events hatred or fear will arouse mass emotion and drive people into doing foolhardy things. A free society can survive only as its members have the self-control and self-restraint to protect themselves against that mood. So, our citizens who believe in their free society and want to preserve it must exercise sober self-control and exert themselves to stop others who would spread hysteria, whether for attack or for surrender. Some officials may think that even necessary legislation can be obtained only by frightening the American people. Others may feel that they are peculiarly qualified to exercise political leadership and that they can best ride into power on a wave of emotion. Those who influence public opinion may feel that sensationalism is needed to arouse and alert the American people. Those who do such things are following the doctrine that it is possible to get good by doing evil. The fact is that panic started for one purpose seldom stops until it has overshot the chosen mark.

There are features of Soviet conduct, and indeed features of our own national conduct, which are evil and which we should hate. But hatred of evil is very different from the hatred of people as a group. Those who stand on the brink of disaster cannot safely indulge in emotions which make them unstable and unreasoning.

III.

Our people should reject fatalism about war. War is not inevitable. If it should come, it would be because of conditions that men could have changed.

There is no irresistible tide that is carrying men to destruction. The evil forces at work are man-made and they can be man-changed. We do not believe that any government, whether our own or the Soviet, now wants war or is committed to war. Soviet leaders do have a global program which, if carried out in the intolerant and coercive manner of the past two years, is likely to lead to war. However, it can be dealt with by counter-measures of peace. It seems that the Soviet program will be aggressively pushed to a danger point especially where the following conditions prevail: first, where economies are weak; second, where the working people can be made to believe that proletarian distatorship offers their best hope of increased welfare; and third, where man can be terrorized. To quote from Stalin, Soviet communism strikes when and where the forces opposed have "exposed their practical bankruptcy." Where that condition is not found, aggressive Soviet action is suspended. The way to prevent war, therefore, is to change the conditions which tempt men to reckless and dangerous activities.

IV.

Our people should not rely primarily on military strategy to meet Communist aggression. Such reliance is more apt to bring war than prevent it. There should be greater concentration on positive programs of an economic, social, political and moral character.

In times of international crisis men tend to look to military measures as a means of salvation. That is happening in America now. Nearly a year ago Secretary Marshall put forward the statesmanlike idea of the European Recovery Plan. In many respects, however, our recent international policy seems to have been much dominated by military thinking. Such domination increases the risk of war.

In present conditions of international anarchy, where international law and international police power are lacking, national military strength is necessary, while we continually strive for the multilateral reduction and control of armaments through the United Nations. But the main defenses of what we treasure are to be found in non-military measures which will change the conditions favoring the spread of despotism. To provide those defenses is not the task for military advisers. Therefore, the American people, in conformity with the principle of democratic government, should not permit policy making to pass predominantly into the hands of those who think primarily in military terms, as seems to be the case today. Our people and government should not feel satisfied with merely military measures but should diligently develop and carry through programs of an economic, social, political and moral character. Thus, the real security of the United States and of the world may be safeguarded, and war may be averted.

V.

Our people should press for positive programs which have immediate possibilities for peace and justice. They could, for example, quickly move toward:

a. Greater economic well-being throughout the world.

b. Greater emphasis on increasing social welfare.

c. Greater observance of human rights, to check terrorism.

d. Greater use of processes of international conversation and negotiation.

We believe that the positive programs which we here propose by way of illustration flow directly from our Christian faith and its requirements for relations of mutual helpfulness and goodwill among men. In urging at this time economic assistance to those in need, increased opportunity for human welfare, and greater observance of the rights and freedoms which are claimed by virtue of man's dignity in God's sight, we are setting forth tasks which should at all times command the support of our Christian people. We are convinced that both the inherent right of these steps and their direct bearing upon the present international crisis will commend them to all men of good will.

Primary responsibility for the technical aspects of programs, rests, of course, upon government and political leadership. Nevertheless, our present appeal to our people to press for economic, social, political and moral programs for peace would not be convincing unless we could point to genuine possibilities of this character.

a. One of the conditions which tempt Soviet leadership to aggressive action is the prevalence of economic distress. The Foreign Assistance Act just passed by Congress can serve greatly to change these conditions in Europe and also to some extent in China. The European Recovery Plan, which that Act incorporates, shows the immense possibilities which reside in non-military resourcefulness and action. The constructive objectives of this Plan have been strongly backed by our churches. It has now been enacted into law, and action under it is beginning. Such action ought to do more than provide temporary relief. It should, and can, work to change economic conditions into those needed for a great revival of hope and creative effort.

b. Another condition which tempts Soviet leaders to aggressive action is the possibility of making men believe that the Communist parties are today the only ardent advocates of increased social welfare. These parties attract and organize people already resentful because they feel that their present leadership and institutions perpetuate economic and racial injustices from which they suffer. The conditions which create that feeling can be, and should be, changed.

There was a time when the Western democracies were supreme in prestige because of their dynamic pursuit of liberty, equality, and fraternity; their great experiments in political freedom; and their industrial revolution, which added unimagined productivity to human effort. Today, because Soviet communism attacks freedom, we are drawn into defense of the status quo. We ought rather to preach and practice the unique capacity of a free society to effect changes peacefully. We ought to develop and make known constructive programs which will again capture the imagination and enlist the support of those who are unsatisfied, of those who feel themselves exploited, and of those who want to make dreams come true.

c. Still another of the conditions which tempt Soviet leadership to aggressive action is the possibility of frightening people from working against Soviet penetration. Today, even within the free societies of western Europe, many feel that they cannot, without great future risk of reprisal, express the dictates of their reason and conscience. That situation violates the provisions of the United Nations Charter which call for respect of human rights and require the nations to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the United Nations to secure the observance of those rights. Three years have gone by without any international commitment to that task. It is imperative that the United States take the lead, with those nations which are agreed on what human freedom means, to secure prompt adoption of a covenant of human rights, within the framework of the United Nations. If our nation should quickly assume dynamic leadership of a movement to define and protect human rights, even if only within the existing free societies, that action would do much to reassure peoples now frightened and to check the further spread of terrorism.

d. The avenues of diplomatic conversation between the Soviet Union and the United States should be kept open and used. There should be the fullest possible exchange of information and of views on the assumption that all nations want peace, not war.

An appearance of broken official relations is psychologically bad for peace. It increases the risk that governments act on misinformation and make miscalculations which lead to perilous incidents. Also, it may be that some of the conflicts of national interest and issues of power can be dealt with by isolating them from irreconcilable conflicts of basic convictions.

We do not presume to judge the technical problems of when, and where, and with whom conversations should be held or negotiations conducted, but we suggest that there are in the field unused possibilities which ought to be explored. If trustworthy agreements could be arrived at between the Soviet Union and the United States, even on minor matters, the present world-wide sense of tension might be eased and the way made easier to preserve peace. The mood of the American people should be such as to encourage the Administration to utilize the possibilities of conversation and negotiation. Likewise, avenues of religious, cultural, scientific and educational exchange should be kept open and developed as far as possible.

It may be objected that the possibilities we have suggested do not meet our test of immediacy. We do not believe that such an objection is sound. Programs themselves have consequences even before they are fully realized. The European Recovery Plan is a good illustration. The idea had profound influence when it was first put forward by Secretary Marshall and quickly endorsed on a bipartisan basis. That occurrence changed the aspect of affairs in Europe more than nine months be-

A Brief History Of The Protestant Episcopal Church In The United States Of America

By MR. GEORGE V. BLUE, Washington, D. C.

PART III. THE LATER PERIOD

The half-century of the Church's development from the close of the nineteenth century presents aspects which either encourage or challenge. Seventy-four continental dioceses and twenty-eight missionary jurisdictions in the four quarters of the globe constitute an ecclesiastical body politic of no mean proportions. The baptized membership has reached two million, of whom some three-fourths are at least nominal communicants. The Sunday School enrollment of about five hundred thousand is only slightly greater than the Church could boast fifty years ago when the communicant list itself stood at little more than half a million. A one percent increase in communicants (fifteen thousand) in 1946 should cause serious thought in a communion that asserts a claim to a heritage of catholic scope.

In the course of more than a century of church building, the Church's houses of worship and ancillary buildings such as rectories and parish halls, though subject to styles in taste, have generally displayed an increase in costliness of structure and often in physical attractiveness and esthetic appeal. The worldly wealth of the Church as a whole is large, measured in visible assets (for example, real property and endowments), but they are productive of only a small measure of its revenues. The works of the Church, like those of most other ecclesiastical bodies in the United States, must depend for the greater part of their support upon the generosity and sense of responsibility of its members.

Rightly or not, popular opinion looks upon the Protestant Episcopal community as one, by-and-large, of the comfortably circumstanced. It has been said—outside the Church as well as within it—that it exercises an influence in public life much greater than its numerical strength would imply. If the saying is true, it is a matter for spiritual humility rather than for gladsome pride. If leadership among one's fellows derives at all from a devoted respect for education and conformity to great traditions, the constituency of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this respect is undeniably fortunate but not unique among ecclesiastical bodies. Should there be any truth, however, in the popular assumption that an unusually large proposition of its members have been so placed as to be advantaged of worldly means to the enjoyment of a broad life and to the exercise of influence and power, then the enjoyment of these blessings must be accepted as related to that life; and, "as the benefit is great, so is the danger great" if churchmen partake of them heedlessly or unworthily. As citizens of a secular commonwealth, therefore, a peculiar responsibility devolves upon the citizenry of the Church.

The Church has maintained cohesiveness in the face of internal divergencies of belief and opinion that indicates either an extraordinary ability to sustain tension beween opposites or a helpless unconcern for discipline. Opposites can be balanced and reconciled; how long contraries can be tolerated within the same structure is a question that has not yet been forced to an issue. Nothing could be more deplorable than the spectacle of one body of Christian fellows refusing communion with another. On the other hand, an institutional scission, while normally not desirable and certainly not to be accepted except as a final resort, might liberate forces which could engage in a more effective and generous competition of emulation.

Perhaps the two most significant trends affecting the Church in the twentieth century have been the tendency to centralization in ecclesiastical organization and the steps in the direction of a closer association with other communions. With respect to the latter, the Church's gradual adherence to the Federation of Churches of Christ in America is a domestic example; its closer relations with the Church of England and other Anglican Churches through the Lambeth Conferences, as well as in other ways, is a still broader example; and of yet wider significance is its participation in the ecumenical movement through the important meetings which in the past decade have been held in Great Britain and Switzerland. These convocations have brought together representatives of virtually all Christian communions except the Roman Catholic—which still remains obdurate against every essay at Christian reunion except on its own peculiar terms of a submission by each of the other parts of the church catholic to itself.

The latest important official effort by the Protestant Episcopal Church in the direction of an organic union, institutional as well as spiritual, with another historic communion, has been the action flowing from the decision taken by General Convention in 1937 to seek such a union with the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. It is an effort in which the issue is still joined, less, perhaps, between the two Churches themselves, than between partisan views within each. As far as the Protestant Episcopal Church is concerned, the matter has been made to stand over until the Lambeth Conference (composed solely of the bishops of the Anglican communions) to convene in 1948 will have had the opportunity to voice an opinion.

In its institutional life, the Church (like the nation in which its visible, and to some extent its ideological fabric is housed) has shown marked centripetal development. The federal basis of its ecclesiastical polity has remained constant, but significant examples of the centralizing trend are evident. The erection of cathedrals—the bishop's "own" church—as the center of diocesan life has greatly changed the aspect of such life in many a diocese from that (for example) of Hobart's day. A vigorous proponent of this institutional development was the wealthy bishop of Fond du Lac (1889-1912), the Right Reverend Charles C. Grafton, a distinguished leader of the Anglo-catholic churchmen. An interesting design to create a "national" cathedral is still under way in Washington, D. C. The service that these sightly and costly fabrics, which reconstruct the physical grandeur of medieval religious experience, will render in modern times to unite an ideal of loftiness of spirit with a symbolic expression is patently experimental. If the curiosity they excite and the esthetic gratification they provide are surpassed by the exalted devotion to the Christian ideal they are designed to inspire, their builders may well be blessed as men of vision and saints of the Church.

The centralizing trend has further shown itself in the grouping of the dioceses into eight "provinces" (1907); so far, a constitutional development of little actual importance. More significant have been the changes effected in the office of Presiding Bishop, starting in 1904; and by the creation of the National Council (1919). The Council now performs many of the executive functions that formerly devolved on the Presiding Bishop, and acts as a governing body for the Church between General Conventions. The office of Presiding Bishop has been elective since 1919, and his entire time is now devoted to duties pertaining to a spiritual head of the Church. He has no diocesan connection, and a retirement age at sixty-eight years has been fixed. The present Presiding Bishop is the Right Reverend Henry Knox Sherrill, formerly bishop of Massachusetts, elected by General Convention in 1946.

Proposals to give the Presiding Bishop the status of Metropolitan by conferring on him the title of Archbishop have met with slight interest and little favor. Equally unavailing though more persistent and even bitter have been efforts stemming from modes of thought reintroduced into the Church by the Oxford Movement to change the name of the Church by dropping the appelation "Protestant". The imperiousness with which the change has been urged has failed, however, to capture either the imagination or the conviction of the body of churchmen; and the harmony of the protestant character and heritage of the Church, as professed in its name, with its catholicity of scope and historic lineage, as confessed in the Creeds, has been retained under the symbol of the traditional title.

A program of significant social implication was the Church Pension Fund Plan for the support of retired clergy and their families. The successful foundation of this innovation in the polity of the Church will ever be a memorial to the efforts (1910-1917) of Bishop William Lawrence of Massachusetts. The same quickened thought in the Church as to social responsibilities has reached out toward many other phases of human welfare, while it has deepened and intensified the work that has always been regarded as peculiarly the Church's own. Besides multiplying its missionary endeavors, their Christian schools and hospitals, the Church has raised its voice on the cure of war as a world evil, on the conditions of living and of labor, on problems of prejudice and on the probems that fundamental human institutions, such as the family, must face in a world that has ceased to be the world of a century ago. The long debate in successive General Conventions on the vexing questions of divorce and marriage is a case in point; the action taken in 1946 to confide certain matrimonial causes to the judgment of the diocesan is the latest though probably not the last word that the Church will have to utter.

Perhaps never in the nineteen centuries of Christian faith could the Churches of Christ more truly claim as their own the confession of an ancient pagan that "nothing human is foreign to me", and to make it peculiarly their own. New opportunity and responsibility devolved upon the Church at the turn of the century, in part as a result of the national expansion after the Spanish-American War (1898). The Philippine Islands and Porto Rico (1901) and Cuba (1904) were made missionary districts; a planting of the Church in Southern Brazil in 1889 grew into the missionary district established by General Convention in 1907 under the nurturing care of the Right Reverend Lucien L. Kinsolving, who had been one of the first two missionaries. The annexation of the Hawaiian Islands (1898) led to a transfer of the English episcopal see there, established in 1861, to the jurisdiction of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States; in 1902, the first American bishop of Honolulu, the Right Reverend Henry B. Restarick, began an episcopate of remarkable accomplishment. In 1912, the missionary districts in China founded from the United States united with the dioceses of English and Canadian origin to constitute a national Chinese Church. The official cognomen "Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui" defies absolutely literal translation; but however it may be rendered, it does not require definition in terms reminiscent of ecclesiastical controversies that have beset the course of Western Christendom.

An aim implicit in every missionary planting is that it will grow into a self-supporting episcopal jurisdiction, but the way is at times long. After a century, Liberia, one of the earliest foreign missionary districts to be established (1850), has not yet attained the stature of a diocese.

In 1947, churchmen stand viewing the aftermath of a great war, just as the framers of the Church in the United States stood in the years after 1783. With rare courage at times narrowly divided from despair, these eighteenth century churchmen labored through the hard years. They rebuilt a visible Church on a national scale. A century and a half later the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America exhibits little of the hard fashioning of its formation; but the times again challenge the loyalty, intelligence, humility and charity of its members. Not only a continent, but a world is at stake.

The future is not an open book; neither are the contents already foredoomed by materialistic determinism. The wills of men still count, as they have always counted; but only as they continue to abide in the Head of the Church, its ascended but ever present Lord, can they find themselves secure.

The End.

Meditations In His Presence

"He that doeth the will of My Father." (From the Offertory Sentences).

The two words "God's Will" have become a kind of Christian fetish to a large number of church members. What is God's Will? Not the all too common conceptions: blind acceptance of trouble; unquestioning willingness to dangle as a puppet with God manipulating the strings; meek surrender (and I use the word "meek" in the unChristian sense of being milquetoasty) to the forces which beat upon us. It is quite true that life presents, almost constantly, questions beyond our answering; and that the adversities which confront us seem to never end; it is also true that often in our extremity of pain and sorrow God seems to have disappeared, to have died or to have gone on a vacation.

As we examine the New Testament teaching concerning God's will, it tells of a quite different meaning from the above. Jesus sought God's will primarily in all the recorded hours of His prayer life. By God's will He meant what God expected of Him in a given situation or moment of demand. God's will for Him ranged all the way from teaching, preaching and healing to dying on a Cross.

When God created man and set in motion the pattern of that creation, He designed a place for a part of Himself in every individual He gave the breath of life to—it is His will for the human potential to become divine. God's will, then, fundamentally, is the search for the fullest possible development of that potential and using it as it comes to light. Whether it be the scholar who searches ceaselessly for more truth, or the humanitarian who struggles to clear more slums, or the garbage man who cheerfully and conscientiously does his unpleasant task, or the doctor who burns the midnight oil keeping up with the latest additions to the miracles of medicine, God's will for that one is finding and doing for life and through life whatever answer comes to His daily prayer: "O God, what do you want of me this hour, in this situation?"

Editorial . . .

Pentecost

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Thus the Book of Acts describes that meeting which Christians since have marked as the birth of the Christian Church. Its anniversary comes May 16 and on that day we shall be looking toward another meeting of Christians—the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches meeting at Amsterdam, Holland, August 22-September 4.

At Amsterdam, the World Council of Churches will finally and formally come into being as an expression of that great vision of Christian community that "ye may be one." At Amsterdam representatives of 135 Christian Churches from 39 countries will meet "with one accord, in one place." What is this one accord?

It is a tragedy that Christians are divided by cleavage of doctrine, faith, and social order. In their cleavages are denials of Christ's commandments. We are not one either in spirit or in organization, and it would be foolhardy to claim that at Amsterdam all conflict would be eradicated and all cleavages closed.

Yet there will be one accord at Amsterdam, one basic assertion upon which all representatives will agree. Today the Christian Churches need more than ever before a "sound from heaven" such as came to that first tiny group in Jerusalem at Pentecost. They will come with a consciousness that despite all the strength which comes from the various confessions, there is needed in this day a still greater strength,—of Christian community, of one encompassing Christian spirit that will fill Christians throughout the world as the Holy Spirit filled those who met at Pentecost. Only that strength can dispel fear, distrust, and lead Christians forward, where they now stand afraid.

First Synod of South India

The first synod of the Church of South India was held recently in Madura. Reports of the synod are reassuring to the many Christians deeply interested in the life of this new united Church. Despite the large amount of necessary organizational planning incident to the foundation of a new Church, spiritual issues received far more consideration than business matters. Services were held three times each day. On Sunday morning, there was a celebration of the Holy Communion as the principle service. The Bishop of Madura opened each day's session by reading the Passion of our Lord according to one of the evangelists. This reading was followed by a time of silence, ended with a collect.

Particularly interesting in view of the fact that the united Church brought together variant traditions was the decision that if possible, all actions should come out of the common mind of the synod, and should not be made simply by majority vote. This was an act of deep charity. It means that in the new Church no viewpoint will be arbitrarily voted down, but that all will grow ever into greater harmony and understanding. It answers the criticism of those fearful souls who protested that in the united Church the Anglican viewpoint would be outvoted.

An important step was the recognition of opportunities for evangelism created by Indian independence for a native Church, and the resolve to accept these new challenges even though the Church of South India is itself none too secure financially. The new missionary work is to be undertaken with the support of the whole Church of South India, and not by missionary societies which represent only one of the merged groups in the Church.

Another fine action invited Churches in South India which are not part of the Church of South India to enter into negotiations for union. These Churches include the Lutheran Churches, Baptist Churches and the Mar Thoma Syrian Church of Malabar. So the circle of unity once begun widens.

The synod recognized how much of its unanimity of action was due to the prayers of Christians all over the world. It asked for continued prayer that "where the Church of South India is right, God may strengthen and confirm it; where it is wanting, He may furnish it; where it is in error, He may direct it."

The spirit evident in this first synod was tremendously encouraging to all who have followed the inaugeration of the Church of South India with high hope that it might present a pattern of unity for all Christendom. The synod was notable for its charity, its vision and its deep faith. Let us hope that the Bishops soon to gather at Lambeth will have like charity, vision and faith in their consideration of the relation of the Anglican Communion to this new Church. On technical grounds, some will call upon us to disown the Church of South India. Let us pray rather that with courage and faith we will give this Church our blessing and proudly claim it as our daughter in the faith.

A COLORED SAINT

Sister Harris presenting a Gospel to Lt. George H. Redding of the 79th Precinct Station.

Recently we received at the Bible House a letter from a Brooklyn pastor which said, "One of our members, a fine colored woman, specializes in giving the Word to policemen and firemen. Every week now for years she has gotten a dollar's worth of New Testaments from your Society for this work, sometimes resolving to fast in order to have the money, but usually the Lord provides otherwise."

This letter naturally interested us, so we invited Sister E. B. Harris, as she is affectionately called, to visit us at the Bible House. We found her to be a rare saint, past seventy-five years of age, but brilliant and sprightly as a young colt. Her smile was contagious, and her humor spontaneous. For many years she has been distributing Scriptures to policemen and firemen, principally in Brooklyn and Manhattan, and in all that time only one policeman has refused to accept a copy from her. On that occasion she said to him, "Officer, what would you do if you attempted to serve a summons on a man and he refused to accept it?" The officer replied, "I would tie it on him." She said, "Then stand still for a minute and I will do just that," and she affixed a scripture portion to the lapel of his coat.

In spite of her age, this Negro woman faithfully continues to do the work to which she feels a definite call. Though inured to hardship, and accustomed to the broom, mop and washboard as a means of eking out a livelihood, her happiness overflows. She is a missionary right here in the world's metropolis.

LIFT UP YOUR VOICE

One of the joys of travel is that you worship with many different groups. There are times when you wish people might take a little more active part in the service, especially the singing. Here are some simple rules for congregational singing written by John Wesley.

1. Learn these tunes before you learn any others; afterwards learn as many as you please.

2. Sing them exactly as they are printed here, without altering or mending them at all; and if you have learned to sing them otherwise, unlearn it as soon as you can.

3. Sing all. See that you join with the congregation as frequently as you can. Let not a slight degree of weakness or weariness hinder you. If it is a cross to you, take it up, and you will find it a blessing.

4. Sing lustily, and with a good courage. Beware of singing as if you are half-dead or half asleep; but lift up your voice with strength. Be no more afraid of your voice now, nor more ashamed of its being heard, than when you sing the songs of Satan.

5. Sing modestly. Do not bawl, so as to be heard above or distinct from the rest of the congregation . . . but strive to unite your voices together so as to make one clear melodious sound.

6. Sing in time. Whatever time is sung be sure to keep with it. Do not run before nor stay behind it; but attend close to the leading voices, and move therewith as exactly as you can; and take care not to sing too slow. This drawling way naturally steals on all who are lazy; and it is high time to drive it out from among us, and sing all our tunes just as quick as we did at first.

7. Above all, sing spiritually. Have an eye to God in every word you sing. Aim at pleasing Him more than yourself, or any other creature. In order to do this, attend strictly to the sense of what you sing, and see that your heart is not carried away with sound, but offered to God continually; so shall your singing be such as the Lord will approve of here, and reward you when He cometh in the cloud of heaven.

I hope that you will make use of these suggestions yourself and then share them with your boys' and girls' choirs and the older choir, and the whole congregation.

Let us lift up our voices in praise of God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost.

PRAYER BOOK PAGE BY PAGE—CXIII

THE ABSOLUTION — In previous pages we have discussed the three Absolutions contained in the Prayer Book, therefore it is not necessary to dwell on them here except to call attention to the fact that the one using the first personal pronouns is not used. The reason of course being that the Communion Service is more of a sacerdotal service wherein the minister is more set apart from the congregation, and is officiating more as a priest and an intermediary between God and the people.

THE COMFORTABLE WORDS— There is no part of the Communion Service that is more satisfying than this interlude before we pass to the actual consecration service.

The first two of these sentences quote our Saviour's own words, first as an invitation to all who are in trouble. There is a pleasant difference between the Prayer Book translation and the King James version. In Matthew 11:28, which is the first sentence quoted the King James Bible says "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest", whereas the translation of the Prayer Book, which comes from the Great Bible the word "refresh" is used instead of "I will give you rest". The reason this is more satisfying, is because it gives the impression that coming to Christ is not merely restful, but is also strengthening, and that in itself is a glorious thought, that His presence is an invigorating power, as well as an opportunity to cease from labor.

Indeed the whole thought and purpose of the Communion Service is to strengthen our spiritual life, that even as our physical bodies are built up for greater service through partaking of bread and wine, so our souls are given new life by contact with the body and blood of our Saviour Christ and the rememberance of the great sacrifice he made for us.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

SCRIPTURES ARE THERE

Two boxes of Bibles and Testaments were sent into Tihwa, the capital city of Sinkiang (Chinese Turkestan) by the American Bible Society's agency in China. During the past ten years this vast Chinese dependency has had many harrowing experiences and there was a long period when Christians were compelled to hide and even bury their Scriptures. It may be significant to know that Scriptures have again entered the province and in some centers it is possible to circulate them again. Circulation is limited, but it is there.

This Is England April 26, 1948

By The REV. CANON J. DOUGLAS PATERSON, Toronto

This is England—and a day of days—very warm and genial and most lovely sunshine; never have the flowers looked more gay—daffodils, wallflowers, primroses and lots of others; and as though to celebrate, the flowering shrubs and trees, lilac and cherry of many colours, are all in full blossom—for this is their Majesties' Silver Wedding Day.

In America we do not go in for celebrating these anniversaries very much, but over here it is different. The daily newspaper not only announces weddings, but silver wedding and golden wedding, and sometimes diamond wedding anniversaries. It is quite usual especially in village churches for people to go to church with all their friends to give thanks, and to begin again, and exactly that is what the King and Queen did yesterday. They were just two folks, man and wife, who with the sole surviving parent, Queen Mary, and their children and their friends, went to church on their wedding day. We might profitably copy this custom and introduce it into our church life.

To us from abroad it seemed a very homey affair. All the villagers were there, but because it was the "village" of London, we were quite a crowd, millions really, but we all felt that we belonged. The Dean and Archbishop were like the vicar and his curate, and they shook hands with the King and Queen at the church door (St. Paul's Cathedral).

Of course, for a silver wedding they had to put on a bit of a show, so they drove in a procession, not of motor cars, but open old-fashioned carriages; the King and Queen had six horses, and what lovely horses they were! The Princess, herself a recent bride, with her husband, both looking very grand, wearing the newly conferred Order of the Garter, had only four horses to their carriage. To make it a really good show, such as Londoners love, they turned out "a Sovereigns escort of the Household Cavalry". More lovely horses, red tunics, breastplates, swords, plumes waving. Then there were the "beefeaters", and the Lord Mayor with the sword and so much to see and so very much that was very much worth seeing. And then the services listened to by loud speakers round the Cathedral and on the wireless throughout the Kingdom, and as usual, it was just right.

Thoughts crowded ones mind. How wonderful to realize that this precious pair, our King and Queen, drive slowly through these narrow streets so densely packed with men and women, and the gorgeously dressed soldiers of the escort are no more protection really than so many tin soldiers. No flanking guard of motorcycle police, no guards on the running boards—but then carriages don't have running boards, and they are not made bullet-proof. The whole Royal Family trusted themselves in the midst of their people, and there could be no greater safety. In their evening drive down in the East End their car was held up and delayed, but it was the common people's devotion and love that must express itself and would not be restrained.

The Archbishop, in his admirable address, and again the Prime Minister in the House of Commons, made reference to a Golden Wedding Celebration that we might look forward to. In the midst of this tribute, we saw Queen Mary. What must have been her thoughts! As she looked over the years of her life, she must have recalled the day when she and King George celebrated their anniversary, and as the King and Queen came in the same way to the same service in the same place. She, more than any other person, had glorified the home, and given the pattern of a Christian family circle, even in such surroundings as Buckingham Palace. And now her son and his wife were carrying on the tradition and making glad a mother's heart.

It was a great day, and we say with heart and voice, "God save the King—and the Queen. God bless them both".

DIRECTOR OF HILFSWERK VISITS PRESIDING BISHOP

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Eugen Gerstenmaier, director of Hilfswerk, visited Presiding Bishop Sherrill to express appreciation on behalf of the Protestant, Old Catholic, and Eastern Orthodox Churches in Germany for the assistance given them by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief through Church World Service and the World Council of Churches. Dr. Gerstenmaier said that Hilfswerk and the Churches in Germany are aware of the fact that the Episcopal Church is one of the American Churches making generous contributions of money, material aid, and other assistance for the people and churches of Germany. He is conscious also of our special interest in the Old Catholic Church and he hopes that this contact can be improved as well as relationships with the Protestant Churches in Germany. Hilfswerk, which means self help, began by asking the German people to make contributions toward the relief program in their own churches. Contributions of money and supplies of clothing were made by the German people with the cash contributions amounting to about 1,500,000 marks. At the present time the German people have little in the way of money to contribute and, therefore, it is important to note that about 90,000 people are contributing their volunteer services for the relief and reconstruction program of the central agency.

Dr. Gerstenmaier believes that with the development of the European Recovery Program and with the coming of the harvest this fall the need for material assistance will not be as great as it is now. The Churches in Germany and Austria at that time hope that assistance of the American Churches may continue for the reconstruction of the life and work of the Churches in Germany. Only with the help of the Churches in America, Great Britain, and elsewhere will it be possible for the Churches in Germany to carry on a Christian work, more important now than ever. The plans of Hilfswerk are for the provision of temporary church buildings, the training of clergy and lay leaders, the rehabilitation of orphanages, hospitals, and homes for the aged, and for the production of Christian literature. It is one of Dr. Gerstenmaier's hope that a Church radio station may be developed.

Dr. Gerstenmaier is in this country conferring with the authorities of Church World Service, the Lutheran and other Churches, and with government agents. On his way to the United States he visited England where he had important conferences with the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Chichester, the Bishop of London, and others. He is very anxious that these direct contacts with Christian Churches in other countries shall be maintained and strengthened in addition to all the benefits which come from participation in the program of the World Council of Churches and of the ecumenical movement.

Bishop Sherrill expressed his appreciation of the visit paid him by Dr. Gerstenmaier on behalf of the Churches in Europe and Germany, and assured him of the intentions of our Church to continue its relief program at least for 1948 and 1949, as authorized by General Convention.

CONVOCATION ELECTIONS

Richmond, Va.—At the meeting of the Piedmont Convocation, held April 23 in St. Clement's Church, Alexandria, the Rev. Frank Hayes of Falls Church was elected dean; Mr. Theodore Hudson of St. Mary's Church, Arlington, was elected treasurer; and Mr. Richard C. Horne, Jr., of Falls Church, was nominated to the Council as the convocational representative on the Executive Committee of the Diocesan Missionary Society.

News of the Church

VIRGINIA SEMINARY BUILDING FUND HIGHLIGHTED

Washington, D. C.—Mrs. Harry Truman was at home May 1 at the White House to some 375 guests on behalf of the Building Campaign Fund of the Virginia Theological Seminary. Faculty, faculty wives, students, student wives, clergy from Washington and vicinity and friends of the Seminary were among those invited. Tea was served and the musical background was provided by the members of the United States Marine Corps Band.

The First Lady gave the tea to show her interest and concern in the training of men for the ministry of her church. Left to its own devices the Episcopal Church provides neither the men nor the money to provide its own leadership. Whereas the lay membership of the Church has doubled in the last half century, the number of ordained men actively engaged in parochial work has remained static. In fact, the total output of the eleven Church seminaries this June is not expected to equal the number of retirements and withdrawals. Added to this already critical situation are the increased demands for clergy in hospital chaplaincies and the anticipated demands for chaplains by the armed services if either or both U. M. T. and the peacetime draft act are passed by Congress.

Aware of the need of the Church seminaries in general, and the 125 year old Virginia Theological Seminary in nearby Alexandria in particular, Mrs. Truman made the facilties of the White House available in order to highlight the Seminary Building Fund. With the immediate goal of $660,000 by commencement time, when the 125th Anniversary will be officially observed, Fund Chairman, the Rev. Churchill Gibson, was able to report receipts totaling $460,000.

BISHOP OF LONDON SENDS REPRESENTATIVE

Garden City, L. I.—The Bishop of Long Island held a Reception at the Bishop's House on May 1 in honor of the sixth anniversary of his consecration. A considerable number of his clergy and other friends attended. Among them was the Bishop of Willesden whom the Bishop of London had sent over to express his thanks for the help given by Long Island to the ruined churches of London. On the following day, Rogation Sunday, at the eleven o'clock service in the Cathedral, he expressed the cordial thanks of the Bishop of London to the Diocese of Long Island.

RECEIPTS TO DATE

New York, N. Y.—Up to May 3 actual cash received by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief as a result of the radio appeal of February 29 amounts to $1,102,265.33.

Some dioceses have not made their remittances as yet, and in a number of places pledges were received, so that there is still a considerable sum outstanding. The figure noted above is actual cash, collected in the dioceses and districts and remitted to the Presiding Bishop's Fund.

CHAPLAIN'S REPORT FROM OVERSEAS

New York, N. Y.—The chaplain of a Constabulary Regiment in Germany gets around considerably, according to a report just received by the Army and Navy Division of the National Council.

This chaplain gives his "personal mileage figures to administer the Sacraments to members of the Episcopal Church, during a single month."

Straubing to Koburg and return, 370 miles, with services at Regensburg and Nurnburg en route;

Straubing to Munich and return, 170 miles;

Straubing to Sonthofen and return, 440 miles, with services at Landshut and Augsburg en route;

Straubing to Weiden and return, 130 miles;

Straubing to Bad Tolz and return, 250 miles;

This is a total of 1,360 miles in a month. The service at Koburg was the baptism of two children and a Communion service. A request has been received to extend the chaplain's Munich trip on to Stuttgart, which means that regularly scheduled Communion services will be held at Weiden, Landshut, Regensburg, Nurnburg, Munich, Augsburg, Stuttgart and Bad Tolz, requiring 1,200 miles of driving without any special requests.

Illustrating the nature of his work the chaplain wrote: "A sergeant drove over 100 miles to attend 'my first Communion in over a year.' 'My first Holy Communion in 15 months,' this from a woman whose husband is also an Episcopalian, and who has three small children. 'My second Holy Communion in 14 months,' by a soldier who is a good Anglo-Catholic and would not miss it at all within reach.' 'I want to thank you for coming over here and baptizing little Tommy.' 'This is my first Communion in the Army in four years . . . .'"

In a month the chaplain administered the Holy Communion to communicants from 31 different dioceses, including Alaska.

DEMONSTRATION AGAINST POLITICAL ZIONISM

Orthodox Jewry Given Expression in Jerusalem

New York, N. Y.—The following note describing a demonstration of orthodox Jewry in Jerusalem against political Zionism was sent to the National Council by the Rev. Dr. Walter C. Klein, American chaplain in Jerusalem:

"Through bills posted up in the streets on April 7, a great number of people assembled in the great Yeshiva of Meah Shearim on April 8. There the entire Book of Psalms was recited after which speakers ascended the pulpit and described with force and clarity the terrible conditions and great misfortune to which the leaders of political Zionism are leading the whole Yishuv by their conduct contrary to the teachings of our Holy Law (the Torah). The assembly was asked to demonstrate in protest against the forbidden and dangerous conduct. All present marched out into the street in orderly procession. Outside the shops were closed and many thousands joined the demonstrators. Banners were carried on high bearing the inscriptions, "WE ARE FOR PEACE." "WE DEMAND CEASE FIRE." Pamphlets were distributed reading: "Zionist action which does not recognize the Jewish Law as the basis and foundation of Jewish life and conduct, does not represent us." "We are Jews who wish to be guided by the light of the Holy Torah in all our ways." "We are for Peace." "We appeal to our Government to deliver us from this terrible crisis." The agreed slogans uttered by the demonstrators were: "There has arisen over Jewry a Zionist way of life and conduct contrary to the teachings of the Holy Torah which is dangerous to Israel and may lead the whole Yishuv in Eretz Israel and over the world to misfortune and ruin." "We declare the Zionist leaders are not our representatives." "Let us have pity on our lives and on the lives of our women and children." "Let us not be misled by those who seek to undermine our existence." "We appeal to our Government to save us and to make Peace." The unanimous cry of all the demonstrators was "CEASE FIRE." Between each utterance all together recited the XXth Psalm. "The Lord will answer you . . . ."

The demonstration proceeded from the Yeshiva Hall to the main gate in Meah Shearim, thence to the road-block on Geula Street. Here a group of interrupters came out, tore down the banners and belayed the demonstrators. Unable to pass the road-block, the demonstrators turned to the right on to Hagai Street and on to the road-block at the corner of Chancellor and Geula Streets. Here they were again faced by a Haganah group, larger and stronger than before. This group fired into the air and beat the demonstrators without mercy. The demonstration then dispersed per force. The Haganah people then brought up a bus load of their soldiers who chased the remaining knots of demonstrators and beat them with their rifles. However, the demonstration had given expression to the will and purpose of orthodox Jewry in Jerusalem who now appeal in writing to Government for protection. The Zionist leaders are doing everything possible to hush the matter up and stifle the impression created by the demonstration, to permit no sign of it to remain. No photographs were allowed to be taken of the incident and those films already taken were destroyed."

ANNUAL CONFERENCE SERVICE FOR YOUTH

Memorial Service Held For Late President

New York, N. Y.—Episcopal Service for Youth (Church Mission of Help) held its annual conference at Atlantic City April 20-23, during the seventy-fifth annual meeting of the National Conference of Social Work, which met April 17-23 in twelve large sections and drew together sixty-three other national welfare organizations, 8,000 people in all.

Episcopal Service for Youth felt a great loss in the death of its president, Charles W. Sheerin, late rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., who died on April 5. A service in his memory was held early on the morning of April 21 at St. James' Church. The board of directors, with a vice-president, Dr. Walter Pettit, in the chair, expressed its gratitude "for the gift of his association with us, his leadership, and his untiring devotion."

Mrs. John E. Woodward, of South Orange, N. J., is the new president. Mrs. Woodward grew up in South Orange, was on the staff of Grace Church, New York, for nine years as a volunteer, is secretary of the board of the Newark diocesan Youth Consultation Service, and has been vice-president and committee chairman on the national board.

Other officers elected or re-elected include Dr. Walter Pettit, the Rev. John K. Mount, Jr., Baltimore; Miss Helen Olmstead, Buffalo; Mr. Clarence M. Brown, Philadelphia; the Rev. Jonathan G. Sherman, Bellerose, N. Y., all vice-presidents; Mr. Arthur A. Atha, Brooklyn, N. Y., treasurer.

Fourteen of the fifteen diocesan societies were represented by one or more delegates. More than 8,500 young people 14 to 25 years old sought the help of the federated societies in the past year, reported the executive, Miss Edith F. Balmford, from the national headquarters, 118 East 22nd St., New York. The society, as the casework agency of the Episcopal Church, in its approach to young people unites the highest standards of social work with the spiritual resources of the Church. Insistent needs for new work, especially in rural areas and small towns, for more workers and more scholarships were shown in reports of officers and committees. The future of private social work was the topic of a dinner meeting address by Dr. Walter Pettit, of Ridgefield, Conn., former dean of the New York School of Social Work, and a talk on the philosophy of a Church social agency was given by the dean of Trinity Cathedral, Newark, Arthur C. Lichtenberger, president of the Newark diocesan Youth Consultation Service.

Extraordinary interest was added this year by the first post-war meeting, the first meeting since 1936, of the International Conference of Social Work attended by some sixty men and women from nearly forty countries.

Dean Lichtenberger Discusses Relationships

Discussing the philosophy of a Church social agency, Dean Arthur C. Lichtenberger, of Trinity Cathedral, Newark, N. J., president of the Newark Diocesan Youth Consultation Service, asked, "By what right can social work under religious auspices claim to be Church social work?"

Not merely because of external connections, he said, but "we believe that there is a profound connection between the work of a Church social agency and the Church. That relationship is found in Christian convictions. The social worker in a Church social agency is not only skilled in the techniques of the social work profession; the worker is rooted and grounded in the faith by which the Church lives."

"The personal relationship between case worker and client, a personal relationship which finds its meaning in God, must be achieved and maintained. It follows then also that the worker will turn not only to the journals and books of the profession but to the Source of healing; the devotional life of the worker must be nurtured."

A Church social agency, Dean Lichtenberger continued, must do its work supremely well, and because the worker is dealing with a person, a whole person, the approach must not be fragmentary or piecemeal but all the methods and means used must be brought into one integrated approach. Further, because the person is not isolated but lives in a social environment, the worker must have an understanding of the social structure. And also "a Christian philosophy of history and a Christian view of the nature and destiny of man. . . ."

Notes From the International Conference of Social Work, Atlantic City, April 17-22

New York, N. Y.—In spite of the magnitude and the far-away quality of the organizations taking part, every man and woman in the Church could feel themselves represented in the address of George E. Haynes, CBE, of London, secretary of the British Council of Social Service. In discussing the place and value of voluntary agencies, as compared with those of governments, Mr. Haynes said first that because the work of the volunteer groups is smaller, it can be personalized, so that in Europe and the Orient the recipient of aid can feel that he is a human being, meeting and dealing with a friend, rather than a mere case number in a mechanical process.

And, second, at the home end, Mr. Haynes said the voluntary agencies provide opportunity for "ordinary people" to help. Religious groups especially, he said, are needed both for their own work and for what they can do to stimulate the government agencies.

"The needs are so great and so varied that every man and woman of good will must feel they have a part to play."

Dr. Rene Sand, president of the International Conference since 1936, is professor of social medicine at the University of Brussels. "The International Conference," he said in his introductory remarks, "registers full cooperation with the United Nations."

Six speakers in the two opening sessions, among them leaders and authorities known all over the world, were able to bring first-hand knowledge of the international welfare agencies at work today. They reported a vast amount of activity going on, even though it is far from adequate to meet the need.

The United Nations Social Commission and the Social Welfare Services of the UN Secretariat have accomplished considerable work although the commission is but eighteen months old. George F. Davidson, Deputy Minister of Welfare, Ottawa, described the Commission's many activities.

International Children's Emergency Fund

Dr. Ludwik Rajchman, of Paris, is executive board chairman for the International Children's Emergency Fund. Shortly after UNRRA stopped in 1946, the Children's Fund was set up by the United Nations. It has given a supplementary daily meal to more than four million children—among some twenty-six million in need.

The Fund aims not only to provide immediate relief for the children but also to help the countries establish a policy of giving adequate nourishment to their children.

The chief dietary needs, Dr. Rajchman said, are milk and fats. The difficulty of reconstituting herds of cattle means that not before 1952 can a local supply of milk be sufficient. The supply of fats may recover sooner because, as he said, "it is easier to reconstitute pigs."

The conviction that social justice is basic to the establishment of lasting peace underlies the work of the International Labor Organization, Dr. Daniel S. Gerig stated, in describing that agency. He heads the social insurance section of the ILO in Montreal. Since its origin in 1919 the ILO has had more than 900 ratifications of legislation or procedures recommended by it. It has been an agency of UN since 1946; among its fifty-five member countries are Syria and Pakistan.

Displaced People

One and a half million people displaced from their home countries, more than 600,000 of them still in camps, are the care of the International Relief Organization. It is still technically a Preparatory Commission as the necessary ratifications are not yet complete. Martha Biehle, operations officer in the Washington office, described the many different methods of assistance, resettlement, retraining, etc., a story familliar to Church readers of Dr. A. R. Pepper's report of his visit to Europe last October.

World Health

The largest number of nations ever to agree on a set of principles is said to be the sixty-one who accepted the underlying principles on which the World Health Organization is based, so stated Dr. William P. Forrest, assistant director of the headquarters office of the World Health Organization Interim Commission, in New York. Taking over previous health services and activities of the League of Nations, UNRRA, and other agencies, the World Health Organization ratification is nearly completed. (Later on, at another meeting, Mr. Henry Wallace mentioned that the United States has not yet become part of the World Health Organization.)

Its work has already been extensive. One recent instance Dr. Forrest mentioned was the effective action by which a recent alarming cholera epidemic in Egypt was stopped in its tracks. The Egyptian Health Department and World Health asked for two and a half tons of vaccine. This was promptly sent, without charge, by all countries that had any to give, from the Soviet to Brazil.

In round table discussions the sixty members of the International Conference compared notes on conditions in the nearly forty countries they represented, and described their respective programs for rehabilitation, housing, resettlement, development of rural areas, etc. Speakers from Chile, France, Finland, Holland, the Philippines, England, India, showed that no one country had all the problems or had all the answers.

DIOCESE OF CALIFORNIA

Woman Elected To Standing Committee

San Francisco, Cal.—The 98th Convention of the Diocese of California broke all precedents by electing as a lay member of the Standing Committee, a woman, Mrs. Norman B. Livermore. In order to avoid the rainy season, the 97th Convention voted to change the annual meeting date to the third Tuesday after Easter—came the 98th Convention in the midst of a pouring rain. The delegates voted to go back to the original date. Bishop Block announced that plans are being developed to appoint a full time director for the Department of Christian Social Relations. It is hoped that the appointee can develop a metropolitan City Missionary Society in addition to ministering to public institutions of the San Francisco Bay area. Three organized missions were admitted as diocesan missions: St. Francis, San Jose; St. Andrew's, Lomita Park; Epiphany, San Carlos. The following missions achieved Parish status: St. Augustine's, Oakland; St. James', Centerville; St. Stephen's, Gilroy; St. Francis, San Jose. St. Francis Parish achieved a record in the diocese, in that it progressed from mission status as of July 1, to parish status as of January 1.

DIOCESE OF HARRISBURG PASSES RESOLUTION

On U. S. Supreme Court Decision On Religious Education

Harrisburg, Penn.—The following resolution on the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court on weekday religious instruction was adopted by the executive council of the Diocese of Harrisburg, in St. Stephen's Cathedral parish house, April 8:

"Whereas the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, adversely affecting the teaching of religion in the public schools, is a matter of grave concern to the clergy and other educational leaders of the Diocese of Harrisburg, and

"Whereas we believe that religion is basic to the democratic way of life, and religious instruction is fundamental to the development of good citizenship, and

"Whereas we deplore the present trend toward the secularization of our national life, of which we believe this decision of the highest court of our land to be evidence;

"Therefore, be it Resolved, That the Executive Council of the Diocese of Harrisburg urge upon the clergy and laity of this diocese the necessity of intensifying our efforts in weekday religious education, and to continue to make use of the released time opportunities as provided by the Department of Public Instruction of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania;

"And, that we recommend that the Church prepare herself now to undertake the total education of her children.

"Be it further, Resolved, that copies of this resolution be published in The Harrisburg Churchman, and be released to the Church and secular press, to The National Council, and to the United States Supreme Court."

DIOCESE OF FLORIDA

Daughters Of The King Annual Assembly

Daytona Beach, Fla.—Thirty-two delegates, representing as many chapters, and eighteen visitors gathered at St. Mary's Church, for the annual Assembly of the Daughters of the King of the Diocese of South Florida, April 21-22. Bishop Coadjutor-elect Louttit presided and the Rev. John S. Armfield, of St. Paul's Church, New Smyrna Beach, Fla., preached at the opening service.

Bishop Louttit was the principal speaker at the business session, caling the delegates to renewed endeavors in the work of the Order. He said, "I feel that some of the most lonesome people in the world are in Florida. Your work of visiting them and enfolding them as part of parish life means more than you could imagine." He spoke of plans for new work among the Indians of South Florida and the delegates later voted financial assistance as the work developed.

Mrs. Amy Wilson, of the Cathedral Chapter, Orlando, was awarded the diocesan Gold Cross and Chain as the most active member of the Order for the year past. This award is known as the Travers Memorial, founded by the late Mrs. Katherine B. Travers as a memorial.

The next meeting will be at St. Paul's Church, Key West, on the day following the diocesan convention next year.

NEW YORK ANNUAL CONVENTION

New York, N. Y.—The 165th Annual Convention of the Diocese of New York was held on May 11.

The members of the Convention assembled in the Cathedral at 8:15 A. M. for a celebration of the Holy Communion.

The Convention organized for its business session in the Synod House, when the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Bishop of New York, delivered his annual address.

All the clergy of the diocese, together with lay deputies from the parishes and mission stations, diocesan officials, officers and representatives of diocesan boards, institutions and organizations, numbering altogether about 1,000 persons, made up the membership of the Convention.

SOUTH FLORIDA ELECTS BISHOP LOUTTIT COADJUTOR

Miami Beach, Fla.—The 26th Annual Convention of the Diocese of South Florida was held in Miami Beach, April 13-15 as the guests of All Souls' Church.

The highlight of the Convention came with the election of the Rt. Rev. Henry I. Louttit as Bishop Coadjutor. This was an unanimous election being obtained on the first ballot.

Bishop Louttit was elected Suffragan Bishop of South Florida in 1945 at a special Convention of the diocese held in Orlando, Florida. He is a graduate of Hobart College (AB); the Virginia Theological Seminary (BD) and holds the honorary degrees of Doctor of Divinity from The University of the South, the Virginia Theological Seminary, and Hobart College. He served during World War II as a chaplain in the 31st Infantry Division with the rank of Major. He was awarded the Bronze Star for service in the Pacific Theater of War. He now is Division Chaplain of the 48th Infantry Division of the Florida National Guard. He is a member of the newly organized Committee on Communications of the National Council.

Dr. Clark G. Kuebler, president of Ripon College and a member of the National Council was the main speaker at the Convention. He spoke to the laymen, Woman's Auxiliary and at the mass meeting of the entire Convention.

Another guest of the Convention was Bishop Jackson of Louisiana who brought greetings from the Province of Sewanee as its president.

All business meetings of the Convention were held in the Flamingo Hotel as well as all the guests and visitors were housed there.

MEETING TO INTEREST YOUTH IN MINISTRY

Englewood, N. J.—The Alpha Club of the Diocese of Newark, the membership of which includes clergy "who value the Protestant nature of our Communion equally with its Catholic heritage," recently held its second annual dinner-meeting to interest youths and young men of the diocese in the sacred ministry. The dinner was held on April 30 at Christ Church, East Orange, the Rev. Frederick W. Cooper, rector, with some eighty clergy and young men in attendance, and with the president of the club, the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Englewood, presiding.

Following dinner an address of welcome was given by the bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Benjamin M. Washburn. Evening prayer was then held in the Church by the bishop suffragan, the Rt. Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, assisted by the Rev. Alexander M. Rodger, of St. Elizabeth's Church, Ridgewood. The preacher at this service was the Rev. Shunji F. Nishi, acting chaplain of Columbia University.

CHARLES W. SHEERIN SCHOLARSHIP

New York, N. Y.—As a living memorial to its late president, Charles W. Sheerin, Episcopal Service for Youth (Church Mission of Help) is founding a scholarship to be named for him and hopes that his countless friends throughout the country may wish to have a share in it.

In approaching young people, Episcopal Service for Youth, the Church's social case work agency, combines the highest standards of social work with the spiritual resources of the Church. Dr. Sheerin was national president from 1944 until his death on April 5, 1948. The latest report from the society's headquarters, 118 East 22nd Street, New York, shows that more than 8,500 young people during the past year sought help from one of the fifteen diocesan branches. Scholarships are much needed to train workers for this skilled service.

RURAL SUMMER COURSE OFFERED

New York, N. Y.—The new type of rural summer short course to be offered at the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin has just been announced by Professor J. H. Kolb. Clergy, teachers and leaders in rural community organization of the Episcopal Church are invited to enroll.

The course will be held from June 28 to July 24. One credit per week or a total of four credits can be earned. Seminar sessions for Churchmen will be held under the direction of Professor Kolb. Instructor in Rural Social Trends and Rural Cultural Regions will be Dr. Carl C. Taylor, Division of Farm Population and Rural Life, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture. Dr. Taylor is recognized as one of the leading agricultural economists and rural sociologists in the U. S. A.

The registration fee is $25.00 for the four weeks. The Division of Domestic Missions of the National Council announces that it is able to provide financial assistance to cover board and room for a limited number of qualified persons. For scholarship application and detailed announcement of the course, please write to the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

DEATHS

MRS. WILLIAM C. MARSHALL

Lucy Page Meredith, wife of the late Wm. C. Marshall, died in Winchester, Va., March 19, 1948, after a long illness, patiently borne, with faith undimmed and with complete trust in God's gracious gift of eternal life.

Expressions of esteem from many frinds recall the years of useful service at the Episcopal Female Institute, where she and Mr. Marshall combined the influence of home and school and Church in moulding the lives of many students. After a life of unselfish activity, she was called upon, because of the infirmities of age, to accept with grace the lingering years of inactivity, most grateful always for the loving care bestowed upon her.

Born at "The Fork" in Cumberland County, Mrs. Marshall was the daughter of the Rev. Wm. C. Meredith, former rector of Christ Church, Winchester, and Bettie Cushing, whose parents were Jonathan P. Cushing, president of Hampden-Sidney College, and his wife Lucy Jane Page, daughter of Major Carter Page of "The Fork".

Mrs. Marshall leaves one brother, John C. Meredith of Kansas City, Mo.;

A POSITIVE PROGRAM FOR PEACE

fore the plan itself took legal shape. It is possible to get immediate results, which will decrease the threat of war, through economic, social, political and moral proposals which are well thought out and which it seems our nation is resolved to carry through.

VI.

Our people ought, each one of them, to contribute to a change of mood so as to increase the chance of averting war without compromise of basic convictions.

This is a time for prayer. Also it is a time for action. Men of goodwill must promptly lay hold of the means at hand to increase the margin of safety against war. This is a task in which every one can play a constructive part.

1. Do not tolerate any complacency about war.

Some of us may ourselves be complacent about war. If not, each of us knows some who are. So each one can do something to reduce the sum total of that complacency.

2. Combat a mood of hysteria or blind hatred.

Each of us is aware of focal points of war hysteria and blind hatred. We know who are some of the individuals, groups, and publications that are spreading that mood. Each, by writing to political leaders or editors, can do something to stop the development of unreasoning mob emotion.

3. Reject fatalism about war.

Each of us knows some who think that war is inevitable and that it is better to get it over quickly so as to relieve the strain of waiting and to anticipate the Soviet development of atomic power. Each can do something to change that mood of fatalism and impatience.

4. Oppose primary reliance on military strategy to meet Communist aggression.

Each of us has, or can have, influence with leaders in Congress or in the Administration or in political parties and can urge that they do not concentrate on military measures as though these alone would assure peace, but concern themselves also with economic, social, political and moral counter-measures against the threat of war.

5. Press for positive programs which have immediate possibilities for peace and justice.

Each of us can use our voice and our vote in behalf of constructive measures by our government to increase the margin of safety from war, such as programs for recovery, for increased social welfare, for a covenant on human rights, and for continuing diplomatic conversation with the Soviet Union.

We belong to a free society. We cherish for ourselves and for others freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly, freedom of petition, and freedom to vote. It is such freedoms which are threatened and which we want more fully to achieve and to preserve. Most of us would fight rather than surrender them, even though they might well be lost by fighting. These freedoms can, we are confident, be preserved if they are now used in ways to avert the immediate danger of war. In a free society every citizen has a duty of action.

VII.

Our churches ought to testify with renewed vigor to God's righteous love for all men and the reality of the Christian world fellowship.

Christians have their own divine commission to proclaim the kingdom of God and His righteousness at home and abroad. God is a God of judgment as well as of mercy. In His sight all nations, including our own, and all men, including ourselves, have left undone those things which they ought to have done and done those things which they ought not to have done. We are called to recognize the just condemnation of His judgment but if we turn to Him in repentance and faith we shall avail ourselves of His mercy. We are called to be steadfast in prayer for all the peoples of the world that they may learn the things that belong to their peace; for our nation and our government, that they may become willing to serve the purposes of God.

Our churches are part of a world-wide community of Christians. They have come into being as a universal fellowship in our own time through the work of the missionary movement and through the new discovery of the unity in Christ that binds Christians of many communions. Let us always remember the great company of fellow Christians in Russia with whom we share a common faith that should transcend all the differences that make for conflict. Already in many places Christ has broken down the middle wall of partition in His Church, even where Christians have been divided by the enmities of war. We find our ultimate hope for peace in the faith that God, through Christ, is seeking to draw all men to Himself and into fellowship with one another.

CATHOLIC FOR EVERY TRUTH OF GOD. PROTESTANT AGAINST EVERY ERROR OF MAN

The Parables of Jesus as "Modern Instances"

By The REV. WILBUR LARREMORE CASWELL

We are told in the Gospels that Jesus did most of his teaching by parables, but most of us are not aware of how largely they have lost their force for us. There are two reasons for this. They got their "punch" from the fact that they were drawn from the common life of the people who heard them. But much of that is unfamiliar to us, and to give some of the parables any meaning at all the expositor must try to reconstruct the Syrian life and customs of two thousand years ago. The explanation has to be explained.

And the second reason why they have lost much of their force is that they no longer surprise or shock us. We "know the answer." They do not shake us out of the grooves of traditional thought for the simple reason that they themselves have provided us with many of those grooves. And a false notion of reverence has given the figures in the parables a stiff sanctity which does not belong to them. We do not think of the woman who hides leaven in three measures of meal as the cook in our own kitchen, or the baker down the street. We think of the Ten Virgins almost as solemn and holy Vestals, instead of gay, giggling wedding-guests throwing rice and confetti, five of whom had the door slammed in their faces before the refreshments were served. We miss entirely the humor of a story which must have brought laughter to those who first heard it.

It does not shock us to hear that a Publican might be a better man than a Pharisee, for we expect to find much good in the former and none in the latter. We can get the real persuasive and convincing force, the shock, of many of the parables only if we attempt to imagine how Jesus might have told them to us today. Very likely the story of the Ten Virgins would be that of Ten Aviators, five of whom attempted a long flight without sufficient gas. And if we wish to recover anything of the shock which was created by the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican, we must picture two men entering a church for Sunday worship, one a vestryman, the other a bar-keeper and a gambler. The first, as he repeats the General Confession, really means that he is a quite satisfactory person whom the Lord ought to appreciate. The other is ashamed that he is not a better man. And, says Jesus, God has more use for him than for the vestryman.

We could translate the Parable of the Great Supper by thinking of a great dinner to an important person, like the President's dinner to the King and Queen of England. There is a carefully selected list of guests, all of whom accept with alacrity. But the day of the dinner, the telephone rings, and one by one they offer excuses. One has bought a farm in the country which he must inspect; another has bought a new car; another's wife has a headache, and so on through the entire list. The host sends the butler to stop every decent car and implore the occupants to come to the dinner. But everyone has an engagement. Finally in desperation he sends him to the Salvation Army, to beggars on the streets, in order that the tables may somehow be filled.

This seems like an utterly preposterous tale, and that is exactly what it was to those who first heard it. No guests have ever acted so, in Palestine or anywhere else. It is only God's Feast that we treat in such a fashion.

And the parable of the Unfaithful Steward also gains by such treatment. You own a summer house, which in the winter you leave in the charge of a caretaker. One winter you are puzzled by the frequent bills for unitemized repairs and sundry expenses. You drive up and find that your caretaker has been entertaining his friends and relatives in your house at your expense. You fire him at once; and your attitude toward him is just that of God toward the embezzler who insists that his time, his money, and his talents are his own, to use as he pleases.

The parable of the Unjust Steward has been as much a stumbling-block to us as to the Pharisees who wondered that an embezzler should be made an example for us to follow. In modern life only a share-cropper, or the owner of a farm managed on shares, can appreciate it. Let us rather imagine the corrupt commissioner of public works in a city in which reformers have exposed him and threaten him with a trial. While he still has the authority he awards the paving contract to a brother of the district attorney, the garbage contract to a cousin of the judge, and a repair contract to a friend of the prison warden. He will probably go to jail, but at least he will have friends, both during his trial, and after his conviction. Let the children of light be as wise in their generation as such clever children of darkness.

A preacher in Atlanta, anxious to bring to his congregation the real significance of the parable of the Good Samaritan, shocked them no more than Jesus shocked pious Jews, when he told of a man left wounded on the road from Macon to Atlanta, whom a Methodist bishop and a Baptist deacon passed by, but who was rescued by a mulatto, who gave him first aid, and took him in his flivver to an Atlanta hotel. Samaritans mean nothing to us, but they meant to the Jew what a mulatto means to us.

Some of the brief sayings of Jesus gain a new force if put in modern terms, and stripped of the solemnity in which the King James English veils everything. "When I got off the train a man on the platform was much concerned about a cinder in my eye which I had not noticed. He offered to remove it, but did not seem aware of a ten-foot plank in his own eye!" "If you are not careful, that day will come like a burglar who sneaks into your house and steals all your goods."

While we dare not treat the sayings of Jesus in any but a reverent fashion, we do them no service by treating them too solemnly. He surely did not mean us to regard them as oracles, with a profound interpretation lurking in every detail. We must not chisel them in granite, and set them up as monuments. They were far more like the little tales of Abraham Lincoln than like the elaborate allegories of the neo-Platonists. "Don't swap horses while crossing the stream" probably did more to re-elect Lincoln than all the elaborate political arguments.

The little stories of Jesus were many of them told with a smile, and must have been greeted with nudges of appreciation and often with loud laughter. They were "modern instances", startling in their freshness and novelty, shocking

Testimony of Music

By The REV. ROSS CALVIN

St. James' Church, Clovis, New Mexico

The wonder of sight could doubtless be felt most keenly by one who had been blind, and then by some miracle of healing, become enabled to see; or by one who had once owned the gift, and then by some calamity, lost it. Attainment of the gift of music late in life is not without some analogy to this supposable instance.

Those who write of music are commonly persons who have possessed it throughout many years and thus lost long since the common touch with those who are ignorant of it. Possibly one who neglected it in childhood and early manhood, and now afterwards at long last has acquired some modest rudiments of the art might be permitted to testify.

The first point in my testimony—and I speak as a parson of the Episcopal Church—would be the great and the unsuspected usefulness of music to a clergyman; the second, ditto. There is no third.

In the Book of Books it is a thousand times made clear that the worship of God without music is incomplete. At creation the morning stars sang together —in four part harmony, no doubt— praising their Creator; and the Book closes with the song of the redeemed in paradise. Everywhere between the beginning and the end, there is reference to praise expressed in music, both by voice and by instrument. In brief, wherever, whenever the people of God have assembled and met together, from the composition of the psalms to the present time, there has ever been song. The leader who lacks the aid of music lacks the aid of religion's traditional handmaiden. So it would seem reasonable to expect that all who aspire to become God's ministers should be in some measure skilled in the art.

It should be our specific task as teachers to see that each succeeding generation knows the song of the Church. We should begin therefore with the children, for children are willing to learn; whereas a grown-up congregation of non-singers, from self-consciousness or other reasons, will not even make an attempt. Yet it's a rare parish nowadays, I suspect, whose organist does more for the Church School than play a closing hymn or discharge some similar chore. Years ago, as I well remember, it was not beneath the dignity of a distinguished musician like John Erskine to teach carols systematically to youngsters in Trinity parish, New York. There may be other such fortunate places! But there should be a multitude of churches where singing and chanting are regarded not merely as part of an opening exercise, but as a fundamental part of the children's curriculum.

Most Church schools sing an opening hymn, when they enjoy the help of an instrument, to get things started, a closing one to get things stopped. That, I submit, is not enough. If it be a school, it's a place where there should be teaching. That teaching should include essential music; and there can be little teaching without repetition, practice, review. But where that is done, the result will be in a few years an adult congregation that knows carols, that can intone responses, carry an ecclesiastical chant, join confidently in a large repertory of hymns.

Now this advance in the art of public worship is the responsibility of the rector first, of the organist only in secondary place. Wherever the rector has some knowledge of music, plus the ready help of the organist, he can make progress; where he has not outside help, an ability of his own to peck out hymn tunes will stand him in good stead. If he can't do even that, he might be able with the aid of a pitchpipe, to lead youngsters to sing unaccompanied. The fact is that any clergyman with even a little musical knowledge and ability, provided he is willing to make an attempt, can get some very gratifying results. Here the writer is not dealing with wishful theory but with bedrock experience rather newly gained from only the most modest musical skill. And there's many a regret, too, for all the opportunity lost in the past.

It does not seem now a presumption to suggest that in the seminary, ecclesiastical music should be made a part of the hard central core of theological study, instead of a frill. Certainly the clergyman should have acquired there the ability to sing a given melody or part (tenor or bass) in a hymn, and do the intoning in a choral service. For these he does not need the ability to play an instrument; and, unless he is tone-deaf he can learn them with less effort than Greek irregular verbs.

A priest might fairly be expected to develop enough musical sensitiveness to distinguish an anthem or a solo that is sugary and sentimental from one that is devotional and adapted to the requirements of worship. After all we are charged with the suppression of whatever is unseemly in the sanctuary. (That certainly includes some very common wedding pieces!)

Finally, a clergyman should know the Hymnal as he knows the Bible and the Prayer Book. We have the three books. The Hymnal is our own human treasury of religious experience and emotion. In it longing, sorrow, adoration, joy, each is voiced with its own proper cadences. But to suit the hymns effectively to their right occasion requires knowledge and critical perception. Here the priest may not lightly excuse himself from his peculiar obligation.

The church organist is, or ought to be, expert in music; the congregation never is. So always at this contact zone a tension exists. The people will want to sing only hymns that are familiar, charged with their private emotional associations; and the organist, sensitive, gifted, will find them after hundreds of repetitions, flat, stale, unprofitable. They are not willing to sing a note, perhaps, above D, and that fact robs his choir of an opportunity. They will usually find plainsong with its odd intervals and minor chords tiresome and strange; the organist very often loves it. They will want to sing slowly, partly because they are not very sure, and partly because they enjoy the emotion "in linked sweetness long drawn out"; he will crease his brow and tear his hair because they drag. It's not strange that the choir is often called the War Department of the parish.

In such situations it's the business of the priest to act as moderator, and, much more than that, to govern all for the greater glory of God. But if he be ignorant of the grass-root principles involved, how can he? So here resides one of the many utilitarian values of the study. A pastor should be able somehow, if he cannot abolish the tension, to adjust it, and learn how to lift the religious taste of his people in matters of music. But he must do so without killing their emotion in the process, and at the same time without putting his organist into a straitjacket. Here knowledge helps, while ignorance, in spite of every good intention, can and often does lead to blundering.

Finally, for intoning, something special deserves to be said. The art was invented, no doubt, when men first felt that the ordinary tone of voice—like their ordinary garments—was somehow incompetent for Divine Service. This they must have felt keenly. And they perceived that the addition of musical tones lifted their supplications into that beauty which is linked by the psalmist with holiness. Then, doubtless, they discovered, along with the rest of us, that a bad voice makes bad intoning, and so set out at once to improve their vocal equipment. Down the scale, down the scale, up the scale, they sang with endless practice, and discovered to their pleasure that improvement in the singing voice is also improvement in the speaking voice. The fact is still demonstrable.

When they had learned how to produce a clear, round tone of music, they began to cast about for melodies to match their words. The experimentation must have seemed endless. But when they found the melody, they knew it; and wondering that it seemed so inevitable, they refused ever afterwards to alter it.

Some shepherd boy of Israel alone on a hill perhaps, or some obscure brother in a monastery ages later, experimenting with a primitive litany, sang in the key of G, not knowing what he did, words like these,

"With pity behold the sorrows of our hearts".

In a flash of inspiration he dropped a minor third at the end, and then brought his petition to rest not exactly on the original tone but just one half step below it. There he had it at last! Subsequent generations knowing it, too, have never suffered any change to be made. And to this day, one who has heard the words wedded to those tones will aways remain unsatisfied hearing the words alone, for it is the tones which give them what the Greeks aptly called "the power of the wing". So long as hearts have sorrow, such music will be bearing the petitions of men before their altars up to heaven.

The World and The Church

EXCERPTS FROM THE CONVENTION ADDRESS OF THE RT. REV. G. ASHTON OLDHAM, BISHOP OF ALBANY.

We are living in days of chaos and mounting terror of what the morrow may bring. As a novelist picturesquely and pungently states:

"A poisonous wind of fear is abroad, greater than the fear of Depression. It was rationalized as a fear of war . . . but it was something else. It was tenuous, ghostly, indefinable, but it was there. It was the fear of a people, the fear of a whole world which had lost God and had not been able to replace Him with any satisfactory substitute.

"Man, left alone among his machines, amid his howling wilderness of science, was convulsed with fear. It is this fear, this godlessness, which now so afflicts the world of men, inspires them to such frenzies of hatred and murder and fury. A strange madness blows among the nations. It blows in America."

In face of such fear, multitudes, who normally pay scant attention to God or His Church, are today challenging the Church to save them from the threatened disaster. Democracy, they say, is based on the Christian religion, therefore let us have more and better Christianity to save the democratic way of life. But God will not be used as a means to man's ends, nor is it the duty of the Church to save civilization. Rather with David must we cry, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." And the Church's only business is to proclaim to men the eternal Gospel of God. Paradoxically enough, by so doing it will preserve all that is worth preserving of our perishing civilization.

We are living between two worlds—one dead, one trying to be born—and the transition is naturally appalling. Yet Christians cannot share the gloom of those who look upon this as unmitigated catastrophe, for they recall that it has happened before and will happen again and that ultimately "It is the Lord's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes." We need to remember that God's kingdom is not of this world, nor is its welfare dependent on any form of so called civilization. In this connection Dr. Arnold Toynbee well says:

"In so far as human understanding in this life can grasp the relation between these two intersecting worlds, in both of which we have a footing, it looks as if our tribulation on the secular plane were actually opportunities for achievement in the spiritual sphere."

And a greater than Toynbee speaks of "Men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, for the power of heaven shall be shaken," and continues:

"Then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

So, while the Church will do its little best to guide the world along the paths of righteousness, it will not leap to the conclusion that failure here can in any way jeopardize the spiritual splendour of the kingdom of God. "The Lord is King, be the people never so impatient . . . be the earth never so unquiet."

Whether the Church in these dark and menacing days can exert sufficient influence upon governments to affect their courses of action remains to be seen. But one thing the Church can do is to give men hope, which is the world's most desperate need today. Hope is what the suffering and frustrated peoples of Europe need, even more than bread, and this is what cynical Americans need who see no way of avoiding another war which will spell our doom. Such hope, however, must be based not on the ephemeral desires of men but on the very nature of the Eternal. Let us then hold and incessantly proclaim our faith in the high and mighty Ruler of the Universe and so help men to keep cool heads in these days of hysterical utterances of statesmen and walk with calm and steady tread towards the dawn of a new and better day. Let the Church of the Living God give men hope.

Let us pray in the words of the saintly Lancelot Andrewes:
"O hope of all the ends of the earth and of them that remain in the broad sea;

O thou on whom our fathers hoped,
and thou didst deliver them;
on whom they waited,
and were not confounded;
My Hope,

let me not be disappointed of my hope. O the hope of all the ends of the earth, remember the whole creation for good, visit the world in thy compassion;
O guardian of men,
O loving Lord,
remember all our race."

ST. GEORGE HAS BELLS—THREE OF THEM

Goldsboro, N. C.—The church which got a bell from the Navy recently has nothing on St. George's Church at Pikeville. St. George has three bells and another promised.

Three years ago Col. Edgar H. Bain reorganized the Church there and built a building. Fire partially destroyed that building, but with the insurance it was rebuilt. With $300 to start on, the St. George congregation set to work to build a 10-room addition for Sunday School rooms. Contributions toward the $1,000 building now total $7,000.

Col. Bain, layman in charge, wrote to the Atlantic Coast Line for a bell. They didn't have one, but promised to cast one for the church some time.

Col. Bain couldn't get any help, so he cemented the foundation and built the tower himself. As he went around, he told of needing a bell. Roy Parker, superintendent of Goldsboro streets and parks, gave an old farm bell. Later Dr. Hector Person gave a bell. Col. Bain was up in Mount Airy and mentioned about the bell. Lawyer H. O. Woltz gave a large farm bell.

Now all are installed in the tower at St. George's Church. Col. Bain calls them the "church chimes."

Secularism and Religion in Education

By REINHOLD NIEBUHR

The recent Supreme Court decision, declaring the Champaign, Ill., plan of released-time religious education in the public schools unconstitutional, sharpens the issues which we confront in regard to religion and secularism in education.

Many Protestants make common cause with secularists in welcoming such decisions and in approving the social and educational philosophy which underlies them. They do not seem to realize that if the separation of Church and State is made absolute, education, and indeed our culture in general, must become more secular.

This follows because the State is the instrument of the community for achieving its common purposes. If this instrument cannot be used in any way for the support of religious interests, the culture of the community is secularized.

The original purpose of the First Amendment was to prevent the establishment of a particular religion. A legitimate extension of that purpose would be to prevent the government from giving any religion special privileges of any kind. But in popular opinion the Amendment has come to mean the preservation of a "wall of separation"; and two Supreme Court decisions have now embodied this popular interpretation into the meaning of the Constitution.

We may argue on constitutional grounds that this is an illegitimate extension of the meaning of the Constitution. But it is more important to recognize that it embodies a philosophy in which the secular idea that religion is dangerous to the peace and unity of a community becomes compounded with certain Protestant notions that religion is purest when it is most private.

It is because secularism and Protestantism tend to join forces in such a philosophy that a spiritual climate is created in which these Supreme Court decisions take place. The observation that "the Supreme Court follows election returns" is not too cynical. Law and the interpretation of law is meaningful only in the context of the cultural and political history of a nation.

Supreme Court decisions on the right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce have been influenced by the gradual development of a continental technical economy. They represent, not arbitrary, but natural and inevitable extensions and shifts of the original meaning.

We must recognize therefore that our difficulty lies not with Supreme Court decisions but with a climate of opinion which a Protestant and secular majority has created.

The Protestant part of this majority is not aware that our secular public school education embodies two perils. Either it leaves a complete vacuum in regard to the ultimate issues of the meaning of life or (what is more usual) it teaches a secularized form of religious faith, according to which "freedom" or the "unity of the community" or the idea of "progress" become the idolatrous centers of the meaning of life.

The Catholics are much more aware of this twofold peril than Protestants are. Unfortunately the fact that Catholics would insist on parochial schools, even if the religious situation in the public schools were much more ideal, makes their testimony on the public school question of doubtful worth, in changing the climate of public opinion.

Meditations In His Presence

XIII. "For God loveth a cheerful giver" and "All things come of Thee, O Lord." (From the Offertory Sentences, page 73.)

At the time of the offertory our minds are conditioned to think of money giving, and our hands to fishing into pocket or purse. We rarely think very deeply on the subject, and the amount we place on the plate, whether as part payment of an annual pledge or the over and above gift of the moment, is rarely connected with the needs of the fellowship or the inner urge to share. That is why the level of giving in the Episcopal Church is quite low when compared with the possible sharing power of its members. Four thoughts come as these two offertory sentences hold our attention.

First, God has given us our talents and our opportunities, and has placed within reach the treasures of our gain. Almost everyone has much more than he deserves or has actually earned. Our constant mood, then, should be one of thankfulness, and an acknowledgement of God's grace beyond all our just desserts.

Second, since God has given so much to us, and even in our poverty the love of Him for us is far greater than any other need, we should desire to give liberally for the spread of His Kingdom. How much? At least a tithe, and then beyond this some real sacrificial giving as there is need and desire.

Third, we cannot buy happiness, but can certainly dam up the sources of it by our selfish disregard of the gift or the Giver or the responsibility of stewardship layed upon us. Earth treasure keeps bright in exact proportion to its use. How many human needs met are included in the circle of our wealth?

Fourth, God does not ever way-lay us and demand a farthing or a pound. He wants the purse strings to be loosened from within, and the flow of generosity to come as an act of joy, sparked by an urgent sense of mission for the spread of His Kingdom.

Think on these four thoughts as the moment comes to give Him praise.

J. W. KENNEDY.

RECTOR EMERITUS LEAVES BEQUEST FOR OLD ST. PETER'S

Albany, N. Y.—Under the terms of the will of the Rev. Charles Conant Harriman, late rector emeritus of historic St. Peter's Church, the Church has received a bequest of $2,000 for the endowment of a pew to be forever free from rental. By action of its wardens and vestrymen the pew was dedicated in honor of his beloved wife, Mary Phillips Harriman, now a resident of Deerfield, Mass., at the morning servive on Sunday, May 2. In addition, the parish received a gift of $2,000 from his widow for the endowment of two free pews, one in memory of her husband and the other in memory of their daughter, Julia Phillips Harriman. In connection with the service of the dedication of the pews, the rector of the parish, the Rev. Erville B. Maynard, spoke of his predecessor as follows:

"Distinguished rector of this parish for twenty-seven years, he conceived and fostered the endowment of its pews, insuring a firm foundation for the Church which he loved; a leader of strong convictions, he had that all too rare courage and determination to fight for those convictions; he combined that unusual blend of deep spirituality and ability to translate it into terms of the practical. Utterly fearless, with uncompromising adherence to his principles, 'He was a good man'—a faithful servant of the Lord."

The late rector emeritus, eighteenth rector of St. Peter's Parish, has the distinction of being the first rector in its history of some two hundred and twenty-five years and more, whose love for the Church and interest in old St. Peter's, prompted the establishment of this living memorial so that in the years to come all who wish may feel free to come to worship before its altar, without favor or distinction.

The Draft And The Ministry

We have been opposed to U. M. T. from the time of its first proposal. Now it seems that U. M. T. will probably not be passed by the Congress, but that some form of draft will. An enlarged army and navy is in prospect. Obviously, then, there will soon be a call for chaplains. This may be met by calling men who served as chaplains in the war back to active duty, or by recruiting new men from the churches.

So far as the Episcopal Church is concerned, either method will mean a tightening of the supply of clergy at a time when it is already too small for the needs of the Church. We have not yet caught up the losses of the war years. The present number of men graduating from our seminaries will barely replace those who will retire or die in the course of the year. Further, despite all we heard during the war of the flood of men who wished to enter the ministry, that flood tide is already past its peak. Seminary enrollments for the future, as indicated by the number of postulants and candidates, show no prospect of the large increase we need.

We obviously need an immediate plan of procurement. We should begin the training of men to be lay-readers for possible use in our smaller churches. Further, our Church ought to seek to recruit one thousand men for the ministry. There should be an all out campaign to present the call of the Christian ministry in every Church. Several weeks ago we proposed "A Million for Missions." Add to that financial goal, "A Thousand for the Ministry" and you have a program that would stir and excite the Church. Both programs are essential. Both could be part of the program of evangelism which seems to have bogged down in recent months. Unfortunately, we have no Department of Evangelism in our national Church to promote such a program.

Christian Reunion

The Quadrennial General Conference of the Methodist Church in its recent meeting in Boston set up a new commission to discuss reunion with other bodies. Our own Church was specifically mentioned, and it was stated that we had already made overtures to the Methodist Church. As a matter of fact, such overtures go back at least as far as 1931 when the General Convention appointed a Joint Committee to confer with the Methodist and the Presbyterian Churches. Later our General Convention was informed that it was an inopportune time to pursue conversations with the Methodists as they were engaged in solving their own problem of reunion between their sundered branches in the United States. That reunion has now been successfully consummated, and it is indeed time to resume the conversations between our Church and the great Methodist Church. Our Presiding Bishop and the Bishop of Massachusetts spoke at the Quadrennial Conference on this topic. Methodist Bishop Lewis O. Hartman, of Boston, likewise spoke in favor of the new proposals.

We sincerely hope that our Commission on Approaches to Unity will pursue this avenue so graciously opened to us by our Methodist brethren. We fear that one pitfall will be the sentimentality of many Episcopalians who will think that the proper approach is to say to the Methodist Church, "Come home to mother! All is forgiven!" The fact that Methodism began within the Church of England must not blind us to the reality that it is now a mature and great Church in its own right, far removed from the little Methodist Society of John Wesley's time. Indeed, one of the problems will be the tremendous size of the Methodist Church in relation to our own Church.

BOOK REVIEW

THE DIOCESE OF WESTERN MICHIGAN, A HISTORY. By the Rev. Franklin Campbell Smith, Historiographer of the Diocese. Published by the Diocesan Historical Commission, Grand Rapids, Mich. 707 pages, including copious index. $5.00.

Canon Smith has done an amazing job in gathering together and preparing for publication the enormous mass of detail concerning the life and experiences of every parish and mission, whether alive or dead, within the territory of the diocese of Western Michigan. He presents it as a compendium of diocesan and parochial information in a closely written statement of 673 pages of fine print. By the use of the comprehensive index it becomes a sort of glorified card index covering the life of that diocese.

This seems indeed to be the purpose of the book. As the cover "blurb" describes it: "This book cannot be read as a novel, as it contains in outline at least the history of every parish and mission, as well as more general chapters about the Diocese as a whole. But the voluminous index makes it possible to follow the fortunes of the Diocese, local congregations and individuals with the greatest of ease."

While there can be little doubt of its usefulness to persons in the diocese of Western Michigan seeking data upon specific points, it is hard to evaluate the book for persons outside that diocese and for the Church at large. The diocese of Western Michigan is that section of Michigan lying west of Lake Michigan. The history of the Church in that section should be of great interest to all who are interested in the American Episcopal Church as a whole. The types of people who settled there and the impact of the Church upon them: the relationship of the Church to the Swedish immigration, and similar matters, are all subjects which should interest the large and growing body of people who desire to think of the Church as a national and nation-wide organization with a history that is made up of its successes and its vicissitudes, and experiences in different sections and among peoples of differing racial origins. Such matters in their larger aspects this book does not deal with; and in the minute details given the print is so small as to tire all except the youngest eyes.

SLASHED BUDGETS AGAIN

There is a recent publication from our Church called "Doors of Opportunity." Here is depicted very graphically the slashes made in our work in the Church because of lack of money. The expectations from the dioceses have not come up to the quotas assigned to them. This means that the budget is cut. The stoppage or postponement of vital missionary work is a tragedy. The General Convention says we must balance our budget. Out of the ninety-eight dioceses and missionary districts, twenty-two filed "Expectations" or pledges less than their quotas.

Unless dioceses, parishes and individuals can give or promise "extra" money this work cannot be done. Gifts designated for the purpose of restoring cuts must be treated as "Specials." Try to get this brochure called "Doors of Opportunity" and read through it. Here are a few pictures you will see.

"A new Bishop faces retrenchment." The Rt. Rev. Louis C. Melcher leaves Trinity Church, Columbia, S. C., following his consecration to be Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Brazil where he faces increased opportunities with reduced resources." This means that he will not have a priest, a woman Christian education worker and a district treasurer.

Bishop Blankingship writes "Today, there are fewer clergy in Cuba than twenty years ago. With the opportunities here, we could use ten more men right now to very great advantage."

Salaries for four Christian teachers are not available for work in Japan. In the Christian schools they could do much right now. This means that the following schools are lacking a teacher: St. Paul's University, St. Paul's Middle School, St. Margaret's School, Tokyo, and St. Agnes School, Kyoto.

Then you will see other reductions in salaries, in schools, and in hospitals. Some missionary fields have been cut with the local bishop the one to decide where to reduce his budget. Would you like his job?

Now for the work in the domestic endeavor which has received cuts also. Rural work, Negro work, Missionary Districts, as well as Japanese work have been reduced.

The Departments of the National Council shared in the reduction. Our new Curriculum Development of Christian Education is reduced which will delay the mandate of General Convention "to inaugurate an adequate curriculum." There will be fewer conferences for teachers, "Christian Social Relations," "Youth Work," "Woman's Auxiliary" and other fields.

So let us think through these needs. Perhaps in a small way we each can in our family, in our church groups and in our church make a special effort to help restore the budget cuts made because of our lack of zeal and vision. If you read "Doors of Opportunity" you will realize more than ever how far our Church does reach out to human souls around the world and you will see how much farther she needs to go.

THE COMFORTABLE WORDS

The final sentence of the "Comfortable Words" is, in some ways, the most comfortable of all; not only in the words themselves but in the scene and circumstance to which they direct our attention. The occasion which St. John probably had in mind must have been that tragic moment on Calvary when our Saviour was about to be nailed on the cross, and, looking over the angry crowd surging around and the disciplined Roman soldiers maintaining order, He exclaimed, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."

There we see our Advocate really pleading for those who were committing the greatest of all sin, and inflicting upon Him the most excruciating agony.

We are told that John was present at the cross, and must have heard that plea, and it so sank into his heart that he never forgot it, and many years afterwards remembered it when writing to his "little children."

Of course we know that modern scholars are very skeptical about the authorship both of John's Gospel and his Epistles. However whether he actually wrote them or not they certainly bring to us the recollections of "the Beloved Disciple," and none of his memories have a greater or more consoling message for us than the words that are here used and repeated with every celebration of the Holy Communion.

The context enlarges the message somewhat by adding that He is not only the propitiation for our sins, but for those of the "whole world."

Surely no words could be more appropriate and fitting for the approach to the final consecration of the sacred bread and wine than these, and none could lead us to the lifting up of our hearts to God with greater fervency.

SOME RECENT EXPERIMENTS IN EVANGELISM

Rev. Canon J. Douglas Paterson

Nothing very much has been written in this series of articles on the subject of Parochial missions. It is far too important to be dealt with in one short column, but in spite of those who say that the day of the Parish Mission is past, the experience of today shows us that it is being increasingly used and most successfully used in almost all sections of the Church. To make it a success, the rector and his working staff must have a clear idea of what they are aiming at. If it is to revive and stimulate the church members that is one thing, but if it is to reach the outsider, it is a different matter altogether. There are many varities of parish missions, and each needs special study and a different approach. There must be adequate time for preparation; workers must be trained, and plans made for the followup. If there is not proper and detailed study and management the mission will be a failure. Today there is a great deal of help available for the parish priest telling how to go about things. The lack is experienced missioners or priests who are able to be free for the time required to take a mission. However, no rector should be so tied to his own parish that he could not be free to conduct one mission every year or eighteen months.

The Cell Movement. Into a great vat filled with waste water from a paper mill I have seen a teaspoonful of yeast added. Feeding on what it wanted in the water, by the strength of its own life, the cells of yeast multiplied until in a matter of hours the vat was completely filled with commercial yeast. The same principle is evident in the spread of the early Church. In our midst we are familiar with the Communist cell which establishes itself in a labor union or factory and soon grows to the strength and influence we see today. There are Christian cells working very successfully but generally separate from the Church. The writer knows cells in the ranks of a city police force, among nurses in a large hospital, among students, among officers of the services, and even among parsons. The aim is prayer, Bible study, and the winning of others, and they are extraordinarily vital and successful. In England it is a very great influence, and literature is available. But why not have it in the life of a parish, among Church School teachers or vestrymen—just think what the influence would be of a faithful praying band, upholding the hands of the rector, and diligent in all good works.

News of the Church

"DAUGHTERS OF THE KING"

Atlanta, Ga.—On April 4, 1948, a unique service of great significance and beauty took place before the altar and in the presence of the congregation of the Cathedral of St. Philip in Atlanta.

It was unique in the great number of its membership and the complete sincerity and enthusiasm of its wholehearted dedication to a great cause.

Rarely before have so many women of the Episcopal Church come forward to consecrate their efforts to the practical carrying out of the Church's work in and for the community.

To many, that group, within the Episcopal Church, known as the "Daughters of the King" has been a nebulous organization and its name suggestive of a selected group of sanctified souls beyond the attainment of ordinary mortals. To use the succinct words of the Cathedral's new Dean, "to be eligible for the honor of being a Daughter of the King one has only to be a woman and a Communicant of the Episcopal Church. She must, however, be imbued with the desire to become an enthusiastic hand maid of the Church and her rector and dedicated to the carrying out of the parish's great and everyday duties."

These duties enter into the fields of the preparation and carrying out of all details concerned with the rites of Baptism, Marriage, Burial, Visitation of the Sick; besides Communion Services and all the ramifications of altar work.

Dean Walthour called a meeting of the then existent members of the Daughters of the King three months ago. A loyal but small handful of ten responded. Upon this neucleus the Dean concentrated all the fervor of an unquenchable spirit and gave unremittingly of his contagious enthusiasm until, three months later, there stood before the altar of St. Philip's, 135 Daughters of the King, ready to serve with joy and perseverance a cause dedicated to the special services which are the Church-in-Action.

These same women had met together every Friday morning for three months to be instructed by the Dean. The attendance was excellent and Dean Walthour never missed a Friday morning even though to be present he was often obliged to drive long into the night while returning from some tour of church duty.

The course of study was exhaustive and rigid, so much so, that these women are now qualified to teach others. To illustrate the thoroughness and sincerity of this course of instruction, the procedure of the wedding ceremony was carried over a several week period. The "Daughters" were taught each step in the carrying out of the beautiful service, even to putting on a practice ceremony in all details. Dean Walthour's wish is to have all the events and details of these events, which take place in the Church, handled exclusively and reverently by those trained and dedicated to this work of the Church.

The "Daughters" who go with the clergy to visit the sick and very sick have been taught the procedure of the private Communion Service and assist the clergy in carrying the Holy Communion to the sick and shutins. These women attend to and care for the vestments and set up the Communion Services. They constitute a small but sympathetic group of consolation and cheer which, in itself, is a warm significant fact.

A book containing the outline of these weeks of instruction, a kind of educational format, is soon to be published. It should be an important textbook, not only that those who follow here at St. Philip's may learn and benefit thereby, but also for the use of other parishes throughout the country.

There is no denying the fact that the work of the Church and the spiritual activity in a parish rests largely with its women. Their dedication and enthusiasm is the great impetus toward the accomplishment and realization of the precepts in which the Church is forwarded and which its rector dreams of carrying out.

The Daughters of the King, well versed as they are in all of the Church's ways, and consecrated to its teachings, do now and will more and more, comprise an irresistible spiritual force in the community.

DR. SCAIFE CONSECRATED

Becomes Seventh Bishop of Diocese of Western New York

Buffalo, N. Y.—"God will make you a great bishop if you will allow Him to do so."

Those words rang in the ears of a war veteran, scholar, musician and priest as the Rev. Lauriston Livingston Scaife became the seventh bishop of the Diocese of Western New York.

They formed the keynote of the charge to the bishop-elect, delivered by the Rt. Rev. Austin Pardue, bishop of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, in crowded St. Paul's Cathedral, where he himself once served as dean.

They served to emphasize the solemnity of the beautiful service, the first consecration of a bishop in the 60 year old edifice.

Their utterance in that cathedral and by that preacher stressed also the bond of unity between the Diocese of Pittsburgh, which gave the new bishop to the Church, and the Diocese of Western New York, from which the Pennsylvania see obtained its own bishop.

The ceremony was televised by WBEN-TV and was the first consecration of a bishop in any church to be seen on such a medium. The setup by WBEN allowed many thousands to get a front-row view of the entire ceremony in the 26 Buffalo and suburban churches where Philco and RCA Victor television receivers were installed by W. Bergman Company, Inc., a Philco distributor, and Bickford Brothers Company, RCA Victor distributor, and their various dealers.

The television broadcast in some instances gave a better view than actual presence at the ceremony, the location of the cameras in the Cathedral giving a close-up shot of everything that took place.

Vigil lights flickered in the chapel on the northern side of the Cathedral, and the light of gray day filtered through the rich, stained-glass windows of the structure, but the customary semi-gloom of nave and transept was dissipated by thousands of candle-power of special lighting.

To accommodate bishops participating in the centuries old ceremony, the chancel had been extended in line with the front of the pulpit by a wooden platform.

The first two pews on the Epistle side were occupied by Mrs. Cameron J. Davis, wife of the retiring bishop; Mrs. Scaife and other members of the families of Dr. and Mrs. Scaife.

The next three pews on that side were reserved for civic and religious dignitaries. These included Mayor Dowd, Sir Angus Fletcher, British consul; Chancellor Samuel P. Capen, of the University of Buffalo; Dr. Harry W. Rockwell, president of the State College for Teachers at Buffalo; the Rev. Harlan M. Frost, secretary of the Council of Churches of Buffalo and Erie County.

Prelates of the Eastern Rite Churches in attendance were Archbishop Athenagoras, of the Greek Orthodox Churches in North and South America; Archbishop Leonty, of Chicago, Russian Orthodox Church; Bishop Dionisije, of the Serbian Orthodox Church; Bishop Andrey, of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church in North and South America; Bishop Bohdan, of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church; Bishop John, of Brooklyn, New York Russian Orthodox Diocese; Metropolitan Antony, archbishop of the Syrian Orthodox Church.

Episcopal bishops who were in attendance but not actually participating in the consecration are the Rt. Rev. Frederick L. Barry, bishop coadjutor of Albany; the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, bishop of Bethlehem, Pa.; the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, retired bishop of Erie, Pa., and the Rt. Rev. Malcolm E. Peabody, bishop of Central New York.

After the choir had sung Bach's anthem, "Now let every tongue adore Thee," the presiding bishop began the Communion service. The Epistle, beginning with Acts 20:17, was read by the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Gray, bishop coadjutor of Connecticut. The Gospel was read by the Rt. Rev. Wallace J. Gardner, bishop of New Jersey. The Nicene Creek followed by the singing of a hymn, "God of the prophets, bless the prophets' sons," preceded the consecration sermon by Bishop Pardue. Bishop Pardue preached from the text: "Feed My Sheep," the admonition of Christ to St. Peter, the first bishop.

"The heart of a shepherd must beat in the breast of every bishop, priest and deacon of the church of God," Bishop Pardue said, and he pronounced "woe to the bishop who so busies himself with things, civic and social, that he neglects his pastoral responsibilities."

A bishop, so far as possible, he continued, "Should know much about his clergy with problems of health, vacations, education of the children and rectory morale." Observing that the bishop "sets the tempo" for the whole diocese, Bishop Pardue closed his sermon with charge to the bishop-elect, whom he addressed affectionately as "Laurie."

"You are gifted to a high degree with the instincts of a pastor and the courage of a leader," said Bishop Pardue. "You are singularly equipped with the basic talents for the office of bishop. I have observed your work; you knew your sheep; you often brought your bishop to fine homes and to slum dwellings to see the shut-ins; you made worship at the altar the heart of your rectorship, and action the outcome . . . you never compromised the doctrine, discipline or worship of the Church for shallow camaraderie; you constantly taught the faith as this Church hath received the same."

At the conclusion of the charge, Bishop-elect Scaife mounted the chancel steps and was presented to the presiding bishop by the Rt. Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, suffragan bishop of New York, and the Rt. Rev. Granville G. Bennett, bishop of Rhode Island.

The b'shop-elect then gave the required promise of conformity of the "doctrine, discipline, and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church." After a call to prayer by the presiding bishop, the prescribed litany was recited by the Rt. Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, bishop of Erie, Pa. After a brief prayer by the presiding bishop, the bishop-elect, previously vested with a white rochet, donned the rest of the episcopal habit as the choir sang a 15th century prayer as follows:

"God be in my head, And in my understanding.

"God be in mine eyes, And in my looking.

"God be in my mouth And in my speaking.

"God be in my heart, And in my thinking.

"God be at mine end, And at my departing." After the prayer of consecration, Presiding Bishop Sherrill, the co-consecrators, Bishops Davis and Randall; Presenting Bishops Donegan and Bennett, Bishops Pardue and Sawyer, Bishop Gray, of Connecticut; Bishop Gardner, the Rt. Rev. John Z Jasinski, bishop of the Buffalo-Pittsburgh Diocese of the Polish National Catholic Church; the Rt. Rev. Spence Burton, American bishop of the Nassau (Bahamas) Diocese of the Church of England, and the Rt. Rev. L. W. B. Broughall, bishop of Niagara, Ont., representing the Church of England in Canada, laid their hands upon the head of the kneeling bishop-elect.

The presiding bishop then said the words of consecration.

Bishop Scaife then joined Bishop Sherrill in administering the sacrament. The service was concluded with prayer and the benediction.

NEWS FROM JERUSALEM MISSION

Woman Missionary and British Employee Killed by Snipers

New York, N. Y.—A member of the mission staff in Jerusalem and a British woman in the employ of the Mandatory Government have been killed by snipers, according to a report from the Rev. Walter C. Klein, American chaplain in Palestine. The victims were Miss Mildred Marston and Miss Joan Thompson.

"Bishop Stewart's worst fears for the personnel of his mission in Palestine have been realized," Dr. Klein writes, "in a way that has brought profound grief to all the Anglican missionaries who are still in the country.

"For a number of years Miss Mildred Marston, a devoted and accomplished English woman, had served the Bishopric in various capacities. Despite the peril that attends daily life in Palestine under the extraordinary conditions now prevailing, Miss Marston remained at the Jerusalem Girls' College after the recent evacuation of some of the teachers and protested vigorously when she was informed that she would be expected to follow them back to England before the withdrawal of the British forces. She made her communion in the Cathedral on Easter Day, and was returning later in the morning to attend Matins at the Cathedral with Miss Norman, the assistant headmistress of the school, when, as she passed a vacant building near St. George's Road, a sniper fired on her from the roof and inflicted a wound that caused her death a few hours later. Bishop Stewart reached her bedside before she died. This murder of a respected teacher on St. George's Road, which even in the present disturbances has been frequented by teachers and pupils, has finally made it evident that the last traces of public order have vanished. While the foreign community was regaining its composure after this savage act of violence, Miss Joan Thompson, acting directress of the Social Service Department of the Mandatory Government, was shot and killed near the monastery of Mar Elias on the Bethlehem Road. Careless of her personal safety, Miss Thompson had been visiting some of the places she had served so efficiently and devotedly in more tranquil times. The date of her departure for England had been set.

"The bishop's anxiety for the Anglican schools in Haifa has rendered him alert to every opportunity of providing for the security of these institutions, and in a most extraordinary way arrangements have been made for the protection of the mission property in that city. The Armenians in Haifa will occupy our hospital and use one of our churches for their services. The Armenian Patriarch, who is in a most harrassed state because of the multitude of Armenian refugees he has been obliged to house in the convent in Jerusalem, has welcomed our aid.

"A group known as the Committee of the Christian Union of Palestine, largely if not entirely composed of Arab Christians, has issued a statement that bears an impressive number of ecclesiastical seals. The statement rejects partition and emphasizes the common interests of Christian Arabs and Moslem Arabs. It is felt in Jerusalem that this statement is perhaps more an expression of Christian-Arab sentiment than a sober and final formulation of the views of the highest ecclesiastics in the country. Nevertheless, the force behind the statement should not be underestimated.

"For some weeks the strikers at the Cyprus Mines Corp. have perpetrated outrages of various sorts in their attempts to extort wage increases from the corporation. Persons who know the situation are convinced that the strikers have no genuine grievance, and it is commonly believed in Cyrus that the strike has been formented and is being sustained by Russian agents. The present Orthodox Archbishop who, unlike his immediate predecessor, will have no traffic with the Communists, has appealed to the strikers to settle their dispute with the company in a Christian manner.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL COVENTION

Thomasville, Ga.—With an inspiring and hopeful outlook towards the present and future of the Church, Suffragan Bishop Henry Louttit of Southern Florida preached at the opening service at the 126th annual Convention of the Diocese of Georgia in St. Thomas' Church, Thomasville, Ga., on April 6. Bishop Louttit took as his text, "I will build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The Bishop started with our Lord's lowly birth, His humble home and environments; that in His ministry he selected fishermen and farmers; that He died a criminal's death and then traced on the small beginning of the Church until today the Christian Church is known all over the world.

At 10 o'clock the Convention and the Woman's Auxiliary met in joint session for Bishop Barnwell's annual address, which was a most forceful one. He spoke of the need of more giving to Missions on the part of the people if the Church is to keep up. Following the address, the Woman's Auxiliary adjourned to the Parish House for its meeting.

The Rev. J. Henry Brown, D. D., director and chaplain of the College Center at Fort Valley, Ga., gave a most encouraging and splendid report on the work being carried on there by the Church. The College Center work at this Negro College, part of the University system of the state, has a budget of $10,000, towards which the dioceses of Atlanta and Georgia contribute $1,200, and the rest must be met by the American Church Institute for Negroes. Upon conclusion of Mr. Brown's report, he received an ovation.

It was brought up at the Convention that some dioceses have found it most profitable to have a survey of their dioceses made by experts in this line to determine as to the most important needs of the dioceses and how to go about putting the plan into action. It was voted to have such a survey made of the diocese of Georgia as soon as possible and following this to have a campaign to raise not less than $75,000, for buiding new mission churches and rehabilitating others. In the meantime, the Woman's Auxiliary, whom we understand from them, had been doing a little "underground" work among themselves and the men, sent a delegation in to announce that the Woman's Auxiliary was prepared to put on a campaign for $25,000. It was decided to include the $25,000 in with the convention's $75,000. Thus not changing the amount to be raised.

The Convention voted its thanks and appreciation for the splendid hospitality accorded the delegates by the rector of the St. Thomas' Church, the Rev. George W. Shirley, and by the congregation. Due to recent severe storms in South Georgia, the roads and bridges were so torn up that a number of delegates who had planned to come, were unable to make it. Some who attended had to make detours of around 100 miles.

On invitation of the Rev. Ernest Risley, rector of St. John's Church, Savannah, the convention will be held there April 26-27, 1949.

St. Andrew's Church, Darien, Ga., was re-admitted as a parish and is now looking for a priest to succeed the Rev. Archer Torrey who resigned as rector to undertake a special missionary work.

REV. F. B. KELLOGG HONORED

Cambridge, Mass.—The Parish House of historic Christ Church was crowded with parishioners and friends on the evening of April 26, who had assembled to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the Rev. Frederic B. Kellogg's work as chaplain to Episcopal students in Harvard, Radcliffe, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and other educational institutions in Cambridge.

Tributes were paid to him by the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church; the Rev. John Crocker, rector of Groton School; the Rev. George Selleck, secretary of the United Ministry for Students (the association which includes all chaplains for students of Protestant and Jewish faiths) and by the Rt. Rev. Raymond A. Heron, suffragan bishop of Massachusetts for the diocese The address of the evening on "The Church and the College" was delivered by the Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving, rector of St. James' Church, New York, who also paid tribute with enthusiasm to Chaplain Kellogg's work. Each speaker emphasized the fact that a large part of the success of Mr. Kellogg's work was due to Mrs. Kellogg's share in nearly every phase of student activity. Messages of congratulation and tribute were read from the Presiding Bishop, Dean Willard Sperry, of Harvard, and many others.

Mr. Day, in his address, referred to the fact that one of the reasons given in the 18th century to the Archbishop of Canterbury for the founding of a church in Cambridge was to "give a right turn to the youth at the neighboring university" and that throughout its entire history Christ Church had always been keenly aware of its obligation to minister to the student population. "Until the time Mr. Kellogg came to his present post, however," said Mr. Day, "there had never been a full time minister for students, and during these ten years the work has been developed and expanded by Mr. Kellogg until now the staff consists not only of himself but a part time assisting clergyman and several theological students." Mr. Day paid special tribute to Mr. Kellogg for his personal ministry to students, for his ability of sharing the vision of the necessity and possibility of student work not only with the community but with parents and alumni in such a way that the work was able more and more to stand on its own feet through the Bishop Rhinelander Foundation; and also for the magnificent example of Christian cooperation which he has given in his part of the formation of and continued work of the United Ministry to Students. Mr. Day further said, "We all know the proverb that 'a prophet is seldom without honor save in his own country.' In this case we are proud to acclaim the fact Mr. Kellog's ten years of work among college students at Christ Church is recognized as one of the outstanding pieces of student work in our church. I, two, add this personal word as one who has worked closely with him for seven years, namely, that if one searched the earth one could not find an associate with a more understanding and cooperative Christian spirit."

PAUL D. WILBUR APPOINTED DEAN OF LEXINGTON

Honorary Canons Also Appointed

Lexington, Ky.—The Bishop of Lexington today announced the appointment of the Dean and the Honorary Canons of the newly-established Cathedral of St. George the Martyr of the Diocese of Lexington, situated in Lee County, Kentucky.

Dean of the Cathedral and vice-president of the Chapter will be the Very Rev. Paul D. Wilbur, rector of Trinity Church, Covington, Ky. Dean Wilbur will continue to serve as rector of Trinity Church in addition to his new duties.

Dean Wilbur became rector of historic Trinity Church in 1946, after war duty as chaplain in the Air Corps of the United States stationed in Africa. He attained the rank of major.

Dean Wilbur was rector of St. Stephen's Church, Washington, one of the largest churches in point of membership in the Nation's Capital, before entering Army service. He has held pastorates in New York City, Niagara Falls, and Bethel, Conn. Dean Wilbur is a native of Massachusetts, but grew to manhood in Connecticut. In 1935-6 he was chaplain of the House of Representatives of the State of Connecticut. During his residence in Washington he was president of the Washington Clericus, and vice-president of the Federation of Churches.

Bishop Moody also announced the appointment of the Rev. Allen Person, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Ft. Thomas, Ky., and the Rev. Edward W. Baxter, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, Ky., as Honorary Canons of the Lexington Cathedral.

Canon Person became rector of St. Andrew's Church, Ft. Thomas, in 1938. He has served the Diocese of Lexington with distinction. He is at present secretary of the diocese, and has long been a member of the Standing Committee and of the Executive Council.

Before coming to Ft. Thomas, Canon Person served pastorates in Rocky Mount, Va.; in Houston, Texas, and in Charlotte, N. C. He is a graduate of the University of the South, and of the Virginia Theological Seminary. He is a native of North Carolina, and is forty-six years old.

Canon Edward W. Baxter was born in Warwick, England. His father was a medical missionary who served in Africa. Mr. Baxter was educated in Toronto, Canada, and in Vancouver, B. C. He came to Frankfort from North Carolina, where he served pastorates in Warrenton and in Wilson.

Canon Baxter is president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Lexington. He is a noted preacher and is known for his unfailing kindness, and for his sense of humor. He is often spoken of as "the most popular man in Frankfort," and he is beloved throughout the diocese, especially by the young people.

Albany, N. Y.—Official sessions of the 80th convention of the diocese were preceded by the Holy Communion in the Cathedral of All Saints on Tuesday, May 4. The Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham delivered his annual address which was attended by the deputies to convention and by delegates to the Woman's Auxiliary which met in the afternoon at St. Peter's Church. The United Thank Offering was presented at the service. The Rt. Rev. Frederick L. Barry, bishop coadjutor, read his address at the afternoon session in the Cathedral Guild House.
